Mr. PLATI. I wish the Senator from Louisiana would give a short explanation of why this bill is necessary. One does not get it from the reading of the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. President, this bill comes with the unanimous report of the Committee on Private Land Claims of the Senate. Its purpose is to authorize certain parties in Louisiana, who claim cerpose is to authorize certain parties in Louisiana, who claim certain rights under land grants, to have them adjudicated in the courts of the United States at New Orleans. I can best give the Senate information about the bill by reading certain extracts from the report of the Committee on Private Land Claims of the Senate. Without reading all of the report, I call attention to the concluding part of it, in which it is said:

the concluding part of it, in which it is said:

From a variety of causes it now appears that about 288 claims, aggregating about 80,000 acres of land, remain prima facie unconfirmed and unrecognized by any of the agencies of the United States heretofore referred to, and are borne upon the records of the Land Department as "unconfirmed claims." They form a separate and distinct kind of claim, peculiar, it seems, to the State of Louisiana, and have a history and literature peculiarly their own. They have never, it seems, fallen under the suspicion of fraud or irregularity in the circumstances leading to their inception, and the fact that the average quantity of land in each of them is only about 280 acres, and that all or nearly all of them have been in possession and cultivation time immemorial would seem to render such a suspicion entirely out of the question.

Under a resolution of the Senate of December 2, 1879, the Secretary of the Interior submitted a schedule or tabular statement of these claims, prepared by the surveyor-general of Louisiana and accompanied by a report made by that officer under date of February 19, 1880. The whole constitutes Senate Executive Document No. III of the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, and your committee have obtained from the very full and minute history afforded by it much of the information contained in this report.

I will call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to this

As early as 1874 the surveyor-general had urged in his annual report a general act of relinquishment of all the supposed right and title of the United States in these lands, without the necessity of the claimants taking any action whatsoever. (See General Land Office Report for 1874, pp. 75-79.) And again in the year 1877 he repeats the recommendation, strengthening it by referring to similar action by Congress with respect to similar claims in Missouri, as contained in the act of June 12, 1868. (14 Stat. L., 62.)

Without wishing to go as far as these recommendations do, your committee are impressed with the justice of extending some simple and inexpensive mode of relief to these claimants. The subject was referred for report to the Secretary of the Interior, who, by letter of February 14, 1996, transmitted to the committee, with his approval, the views of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as contained in that officer's report of February 11, both of which your committee herewith submit as an appendix to this report.

It will be observed that these officers approve of the plan of adjustment contained in the bill under consideration, with some unimportant aments, and your committee think their recommendations are just and should prevail.

It would seem, therefore, Mr. President, that the bill has not only the sanction of the Committee on Private Land Claims of the Senate, but of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. In addition to that, the surveyor-general of Louisiana in 1874 and again in 1877 made recommendations similar to those made by the committee in this report, a part of which I have read.

The quantity of land is only about 80,000 acres.

States make no claim whatever to it, and this bill merely furnishes a method by which these parties can go into the Federal ourt in New Orleans and establish their rights.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill referred to by

The title of the bill referred to by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am aware that in criticising the details of this bill I violate the maxim of de mortuis nil nisi bonum, and but for the fact that a number of very well-meaning persons persist in calling for its passage I should not allude to the bill at all. It seems to me that the Senate and country have not appreciated the full meaning of this extraordinary measure. It is one of the most extraordinary bills ever introduced into Congress—extraordinary not only in its provisions, but in the manner of its birth and inception. The Administration, protesting there was no deficit in the Treasury and deprecating an evaporating gold reserve, suggested to Congress the necessity of some legislation looking to a relief from our financial embarrassment, intimating in strong terms the advisability of some scheme authorizing a loan at lower interest and the retirement of Treasury notes, the convertibility of which was urged as the root of our moneyed ills, and begging that Congress should take no holiday recess until the situ-tation should be relieved.

The House of Representatives, fearful of the political responsibility of ignoring this prayer in the face of the country, clamorous for some settlement of our currency question, pigeonholed the resolution of adjournment which had already reached them from the Senate, and then, sensible of the absurdity of hanging on through the holiday season without an effort at legislation, proceeded to the immediate passage of the Dingley tariff bill, for which there had been no administrative demand, and which, on the contrary, had been pronounced entirely unnecessary

Its inspiration came not from the woolgrowers, for the head of their association, Mr. Lawrence, lingered at the door of the House committee room, and could get no audience of that committee whereby he might demonstrate, as he had been endeavoring to do for a month past, the utter insufficiency of the McKinley rates to prevent woolen manufacturers from purchasing some wool abroad to furnish employment for American labor, and he now withholds his approval of this proffered bounty and denounces in unstinted terms the inadequacy of the proposed rate, having called upon his association to send their alleged million votes by proxy for a demonstration against the bill at the national capital on January 20, 1897.

This bill was not inspired by the woolen manufacturers, for many of them say that the proposed rates are prohibitory on all wools of large shrinkage. It came not from the iron men, for they are unanimous in declaring that no form of iron needs a cent more of protection above the high rates of the present law, except cotton ties and tin plate.

In this connection, Mr. President, I call attention to a report just made by the special agent of the Secretary of the Treasury upon tin plate. I repeat now what I had the honor to state in January last when discussing the proposed sale of bonds, that when the Wilson bill was pending before the Senate it was proposed on the part of the tariff reformers-those of us who believe in a tariff for revenue and not for protection—that the duty upon tin plate, which under the McKinley Act was 2.2 cents per pound, should be reduced 1.1 cents, making it 1.1 cents, as it is now in that act. We were met with the protests of the protectionists, and with the prophecy by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich], the most active of all the protection element in this Chamber, that if it cent should be taken from the protective duty upon tin plate it would absolutely destroy that industry in the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am sure the Senator from Missouri does not wish to misrepresent me.

Mr. VEST. Not at all.
Mr. ALDRICH. I made no such statement.
Mr. VEST. But the Senator did make it when we were dis-Mr. VEST. But the Senator did make it when we were discussing the Wilson bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon. He will find no such statement made by me.

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, I do not think my memory is at fault, and I will refer to the Record hereafter; but I assert that it was the contention on the part of the protectionists. Does the Senator deny that? Did he not resist the decrease of the duty men tin plate?

upon tin plate?
Mr. ALDRICH. I resisted the decrease of the duty upon tin plate, for the reason that I believed then, as I believe now, that if there had been no reduction of the rate fixed by the act of 1890 instead of having half the market for American producers we should have had the whole of it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I reassert—and the debates upon the Wilson bill will prove that I am absolutely correct—that the whole protection vote of this Chamber was cast against that decrease of duty; and the contention in that debate was that if we took 1.1 cents off from the protective duty on tin plate it would result in disaster to the American industry and put the consumers of this country absolutely at the mercy of the Welsh producers of tin plate. I read in January last, when discussing the bond issue and incidentally the tariff question, the report which had come from Mr. Ayer, the special agent of the Treasury Department—and he can not be accused of any proclivities toward my side of the question—showing that even then there had been a large increase in the productive capacity of the tin-plate manufactories in the United States; and I now ask the Secretary to read from his last report, made nearly a year afterwards, the part which I have marked to show that the increase of the manufacture of tin plate continues under the reduction of 1.1 cents a

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF SPECIAL AGENT, TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Custom-House, New York, October 23, 1896.

Sin: I have the honor to report that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, the production in the United States of commercial tin and terne plates was 307,228,621 pounds, against 193,801,073 pounds produced during the previous fiscal year, showing thereby an increased production of more than 58 per cent.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, no object lesson can be more significant than this. The contention on the part of those of us who opposed the McKinley rates of tariff taxation was that the duties were too high, that the American manufacturers would succeed and prosper under reduced duties, and that there was no necessity for putting these enormous burdens upon the consumers of the United States in the name of American industry. Two and two-tenths cents, as I now repeat, was the duty upon tin plate under the McKinley tariff law. At the point of the legislative bayonet we reduced that duty 1.1 cents a pound, and now we have this report showing that there has been this enormous increase in the American production of tin and terne plate with that reduction of duty.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.
Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri is familiar with the conditions of the iron and steel industry in the United States, the conditions of the iron and steel industry in the United States, and being thus familiar, he is undoubtedly aware, as every other gentleman is who is familiar with the subject, that the rates now existing under the so-called Gorman-Wilson law are more protective on the whole iron and steel schedule than were the rates of the McKinley bill at the time that the bill was adopted.

Mr. VEST. Oh, Mr. President—

Mr. ALDRICH. A great change has taken place in the condition of the iron and steel industry here and abroad.

Mr. VEST. That is the old story with which the Senator undertook to answer me in January last, as the Record will show, when I called attention to the increased production of tin and terne plate at that time in the United States, and I reply to him now, as I did then, that he can not evade this argument as to a specific article by saying that the whole of the iron and steel schedule is protective in the Wilson law.

I take, now, an article which has been conspicuous in the tariff discussion, an article which has repeatedly come before Congress claiming additional protection, and I show that after we reduced the rates of the McKinley Act 1 cent per pound there has been an unprecedented and unparalleled increase of production on the part of the manufacturers in this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me another interruption?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. In 1890, when the rates were imposed upon tin plate, the Senator from Missouri and his friends said it was physically impossible to make any tin plate in the United States, and they said also that the duty of 2.2 cents per pound would be added to the price of every pound of tin plate sold in the United States subsequent to that time. The results have shown, as stated in the article read by the Senator from Missouri, that last year one-half of the tin plates consumed in the United States was made in the United States.

We could show also by figures that instead of the price having been increased by the rate of 2.2 cents per pound it never has been so low as it is to-day; that there has been a constant reduction in price from that day to this. These results are owing, first, to the protective tariff imposed by the act of 1890, and second, to to the protective tariff imposed by the act of 1890, and second, to the protective duty of 1.1 cents a pound, a specific duty imposed by the Senator from Missouri and his friends in the act of 1894. If you had treated tin plate as you did some other products in that bill, namely, by imposing a small ad valorem rate upon it instead of a high specific, that industry would have been prostrated.

Mr. VEST. No matter what may have been said in discussion or in debate by myself or by anybody else, the fact remains, and it can not be obscured by the Senator from Rhode Island, that he and his protection friends placed in the McKinley Act a protective duty of 2.2 cents a pound upon tin and terne plate, and they did it because they said it was necessary to build up the manufacture of those articles in this country. Of course I opposed that increased duty. I have opposed every increased duty, and I have done so upon the broad ground that it comes from the pockets of the consumers of this country. the consumers of this country

Now, when we reduced that duty 1 cent a pound in the Wilson Act against the opposition and contention of the Senator from Rhode Island and his associates, we find that the directly opposite result has come from what he then prophesied, showing that the duties in the McKinley Act were too high, that they oppressive and exorbitant.

The Senator from Rhode Island does not agree with the President-elect of the United States in regard to the cause of the increased production of tin plate in this country. I read the other day an interview with Mr. McKinley at Canton upon the tariff question, in which he accounted for the increased production of tin plate in this country by saying that it was the economical production caused by the natural oil which had been applied to tin-plate manufacture in Indiana. After I saw that statement I turned to the list of manufacturers of tin and terne plate in the United States, old and new, and I found that there were 77 new manufacturers, and out of that number but 5 are in the State of Indiana. So Mr. McKinley must be mistaken when he ascribes the enormous increase of production and the cheapening of prices in this country to the use of natural oil.

No, Mr. President, these facts can not be answered except by a surrender on the part of the Senator from Rhode Island and his associates of the contention that the enormous duties in the McKinley Act were necessary to the manufacturers of the United States. This bill, I repeat, comes not from the iron men, for they are unanimous in declaring that no form of iron needs a cent more of protection above the high rates of the present law, except cotton ties and tin plate.

It is but a spasmodic effort to discredit the act of 1894, that freed the people from so many burdens, gave them higher prices for their wools, built more woolen mills, increased the wages of the operatives, gave the people cheaper and better clothes, and put in the Treasury from woolen goods as much money as the McKinley rates realized in 1894 from both wools and woolens. It is a crude, badly constructed makeshift, and even the dignified report upon the bill admitted that it was "not a measure of what might be done when all branches of the Government are in harmony with the majority of the House on protection lines, as a majority hope can be done in 1897–98."

There has never yet been a tariff placed upon wool which was not a disappointment to its friends and denounced by the men it was intended to benefit.

The records of Congress will bear melancholy proof that every wool tariff has been followed by disaster to the trade and a clamor for more protection. The opium habit has no stronger hold upon for more protection. The opium habit has no stronger hold upon its unfortunate victims than has the protection habit. It was fondly imagined that the McKinley bill had reached the summit of protectionist demands, and that belief carried with it the comfort that, come what might, no more could ever be asked. Yet, in his letter of December 26, 1895, the head of the Wool Growers' Association says:

Under it prices of wools constantly declined, and the inevitable result would ave been a failure to secure prosperity to American sheep husbandry.

Even in Texas, where the cost of growing wool is as low, if not less, than in any other State, sheep declined in numbers from 4,218,812 in 1890 to 2,859,269 in 1894.

Now, look at the results under the free-wool period. With domestic wool constantly declining in price under the rates of the McKinley bill, which let in foreign cloths, paying over 100 per cent duty, reduced wages, and shut up factories, we find the home cent duty, reduced wages, and shut up factories, we find the home supply totally inadequate for the revival of our manufactures under a free-wool system, and we not only exhaust our home supply of wools, but import 250,000,000 pounds of foreign wools to keep busy the wheels of the old mills, and supply more new mills than were ever built in a single year before, and this not on a declining price for wools, but on one higher than four years of McKinley rates had left them.

The year 1895 built more mills for textile work than any year under the high McKinley rates and built 61 new woolen mills, against 45 in 1894

The Wool and Cotton Reporter, commenting on the growth of our carpet trade, says:

It may be assumed "that if cloth and dress-goods manufacturers had been afforded their raw material at equally low rates (with carpet wools) during the same period they would have obtained equal control of the home market." (January 2, 1896, page 19.)

And a prominent importer of woolen goods says-

That with only a year and a half of free wool the domestic manufacturer has made such strides as to control the market; that present rates are practically prohibitory, and the imports of woolen cloths are bound to decrease. With a margin of 50 per cent the home manufacturer can easily undersell the foreign goods of like grades.

In order to test the accuracy of that prediction, I call attention to the statement of the Treasury Department just made for September, 1896, which shows that in 1895, for the nine months end-

In order to test the accuracy of that prediction, I can attention to the statement of the Treasury Department just made for September, 1896, which shows that in 1895, for the nine months ending with the month of September, there were imported into the United States woolen goods amounting in quantity to 56,958,193 pounds, of the value of $87,528,761. In 1896, for the nine months ending with September, there were imported into the United States of woolen goods 35,932,642 pounds, of the value of $56,615,877, showing that the prediction which I have incorporated in my remarks made more than a year ago has come true and the importation of woolen goods has fallen off from $87,528,761 in 1895 to $56,615,877 in 1896.

The proposed bill is nearly impossible of administration. The horizontal bill of 1884 was simplicity itself compared with this, yet that brought a protest from the Treasury Department on account of the difficulties which conditional rates would involve. This bill reenacts the McKinley law, and to determine a rate it will be necessary to consult not only the new bill, but the Wilson Act, the McKinley Act, and the market price of any given article to determine what rate is to be applied.

Take as an instance—and not a lone instance by any means, but one is enough—the ordinary article of toilet soap. The last soap of this description which came under the McKinley rate was worth 42 cents per pound and the duty was 15 cents per pound, or a little above 35 per cent ad valorem. The Wilson law made the rate 35 per cent. Now, the 15 per cent proposed additional duty will carry it above the McKinley rate, and therefore the McKinley rate is to apply for the present. If the price advances a little, so that the McKinley ad valorem falls below the Wilson 35 per cent, then the Wilson rate is to apply, but if in this age of declining prices and in the utilization of hitherto waste products the price of soap should decline, or if only cheaper grades are imported, then neither the McKinley nor the Wilson rate is to apply, keep track of the range of prices and the change of rates. scheme is absurd. The instanced soap problem is simple in com-parison to that of cotton cloth, where the intricate classification of the number of threads to the square inch in the old law is revived and the Wilson method of an ad valorem duty on the yard and pound must be both compared and prices watched to determine the possible rate which may be applicable at any particular hour of entry.

The probable results of this tariff bill upon the revenues under The probable results of this tariff bill upon the revenues under the wool and woolen schedule have been estimated from three standpoints. The friends of the bill take the importations of wools and cloths in the last year under the reduced Wilson rates and assume a like importation under the proposed prohibitory rates, thus securing an apparent increase of $12,000,000 from wool duties and nearly $19,000,000 from woolens. The Treasury Description of the proposed prohibitory proposed prohibitory are the least received by the proposed prohibitory of the proposed prohibitory pr partment takes the year 1893 as the last normal importation of both wools and cloths, undisturbed by any panic or threat of tariff revision, and from this they estimate there will be an increase of but $6,000,000 from wool and no appreciable increase from woolens over the receipts of 1895. The last estimate takes the fiscal year 1895 for a basis, and this gives six months' importations of woolens under the prohibitory McKinley rates and six months under the reduced Wilson rates, and gives as a result $12,000,000 increase in the wool duties and $10,000,000 increase in woolens.

Of course each individual who gives a thought to the subject will select his own basis for an estimate, but it is worth noting that the men most directly interested—the woolen manufacturers—vehemently insist that the specific rates proposed are absolutely applyingly applyingly applyingly applyingly applyingly applying the subject of large propiets and successful the subject of large propiets and successful the subject of large propiets are absolutely applyingly applying a possibly applying a proping applying a possibly a possibly applying a possibly applying a possibly a po ers—vehemently insist that the specific rates proposed are absolutely prohibitory on all foreign wools of large shrinkage and shut them out as possible bidders for lots of foreign wools now needed in their business. They are, however, still under the fear of the threats of the wool men, who claim a million votes, and perhaps these manufacturers may be induced to hold their peace or even be scared into an approval of the change proposed. Meanwhile it is refreshing to notice what even partison bias can not while it is refreshing to notice what even partisan bias can not misinterpret, and that is the wonderful advance which our woolen mills have made in the last year. They have secured the home market. The heavy importations of wools only prove the success of the home manufacturers; and while the importations of woolens were heavy at first, to fill the depleted shelves of the jobbers, the interpretations of the secured that it is the secured that the secured the secured that the s ens were heavy at first, to fill the depleted shelves of the jobbers, the importers are emphatic in saying that with free wool even the Wilson rates upon cloths are prohibitory, and that woolen importations will surely decline, even without any change in the law. We manufactured in 1895 nearly 550,000,000 pounds of wool in this country, an amount never before approached, and a return now to the old system will mean disaster to the manufacturer, and he recognizes this to an extent that has set him to demanding an ad valorem duty upon wool. The cry is almost universal from manufacturing centers, "Give us, if any, an ad valorem tariff on wool," and some of the manufacturers even claim that they can better stand an ad valorem of 60 per cent on wool rather than better stand an ad valorem of 60 per cent on wool rather than the proposed specific rate, which does not reach 40 per cent on the average imported wools, though prohibitory on many others.

I ask the Secretary to read this estimate from the Treasury Department as to the revenue results of the proposed Dingley tariff

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, Washington, D. C., December 31, 1895.

We have taken the imports of wool and woolens for consumption during the year ending June 30, 1893, as nearer the normal than 1894 or 1895. In the fiscal year 1893, under the McKinley law, there were collected on raw wool $8,147,220, or 44.27 per cent ad valorem. The estimated duties on raw wool, according to the rates of the Dingley bill, would be $6,244,191, or 33,93 per cent ad valorem, showing an increase over the Wilson bill by the latter amount.

On manufactures of wool the McKinley law, in the fiscal year 1893, produced in duties $36,451,552, or 98.55 per cent ad valorem. The rates of the Dingley bill on the same importations would produce $27.937,712, or 75.73 per cent ad valorem. But as the Wilson bill did not take effect on manufactures of wool until January 1, 1895, we have not a complete year's duties under that bill.

Diving the year or all the control of the cont

During the year ending June 30, 1895 (six months McKinley and six months Wilson bill), the duties were $20,688,268. Taking the actual collections under the Wilson bill during the nine months ending September 30, 1895, and estimating the duties on the imports of the remaining three months at the actual ad valorem rate collected during the nine months ending September 30, 1895, viz, 47.74 per cent ad valore—we find that the duties collected during the calendar year 1895 under the Wilson bill would be about $28,000,000, or about the same amount as would be collected at the rates of the Dingley bill if the imports were as in 1893.

On this basis of calculation the Dingley bill would not produce more than the increased duties on raw wool.

Mr. VEST. When I addressed the Senate in January last I made the assertion, and produced market quotations to substantiate it, that under the McKinley tariff law the prices of domestic wools in the United States had constantly and fearfully decreased; that from year to year while that law was in effect the prices of wools in the Boston market went down, and that the enormous duty upon wool imposed by the McKinley Act did not benefit, as Mr. Lawrence, the shepherd king of Ohio, says, the producer of wool or the woolgrower in this country. I will not repeat what I said then, but I ask permission to insert in my remarks the table which I then produced and which is of as much force now as then.

WOOL.

MOOL.

In September, 1891, about one year after the McKinley bill took effect, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia XX was worth in the Boston market 30 to 31 cents.

In October, 1892, the same grade was worth in the same market 28 to 29 cents, being a fall of 2 cents a pound.

Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia X was worth in September, 1891, in the Boston market 29 to 30 cents.

In October, 1892, it was worth in the same market 27 to 27½.

In September, 1891, No. 1 was worth in the Boston market 35 to 36 cents, and No. 2 33 cents.

In October, 1892, No. 1 was worth in the same market 32½ to 33 cents, and No. 2 31½ to 32 cents.

cents. In October, 1892, it was worth 19 to 20 cents.

In the Boston market in September, 1891, Michigan, New York, and New England was worth 27 cents.

In October, 1892, it was worth 25 to 26 cents.
In September, 1891, Oregon (seoured) was worth in the Boston market from 56 to 58 cents.
In October, 1892, it was worth 53 to 56 cents.
In October, 1892, 1891, Texas (scoured) was worth in the Boston market 60 to 62 cents.
In October, 1892, 56 to 58 cents.
In October, 1892, 56 to 58 cents.
In October, 1892, 56 to 58 cents.
These returns are taken from the official bulletin of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers for 1891 and 1892–33. This was under the McKinley law. Now I ask your attention to the operation of the Wilson Act. In September, 1894, immediately after the passage of the Wilson Act, XX wool, the same quality of Ohio wool, was worth in the Boston market 18 to 18 cents; December 19, 1895, it was worth in the same market 19 to 21 cents. Fine unwashed was worth in September, 1895, 12 to 14 cents. Fine unmerchantable was worth in September, 1894, 13 to 15 cents; December 19, 1895, it was worth 14 to 15 cents; showing a gradual improvement in prices during one year under the Wilson law. These figures are taken from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter for December 18, 1895, which I have and can produce if necessary.

But I called attention also to the fact that under free wool as

But I called attention also to the fact that under free wool as adopted in the Wilson tariff law the price of domestic wool had increased; that at the time that law went into effect in 1894, the price of XX Ohio wool, the test wool, in the Boston market was 18 to 19 cents; that under the provisions of the Wilson law at the time I spoke, in January, the price had gone up to 19 or 20 cents per pound. I was answered then with the prediction that that was a mere temporary thing; that the price would inevitably decline under the operation of the provisions of the derided Wil-

I have now before me the Boston market quotations just made, showing that last week the same grade of wool, XX Ohio and Pennsylvania, sold in the Boston market for 19 to 20 cents. So under free wool the price of domestic wool has increased in the United States notwithstanding the enormous importation of foreign wools. This price has held its own and remains stationary under the much-derided and abused law. There can be no illustration more pertinent or more unanswerable in regard to these two systems, the one the enormous duties on domestic wool under two systems, the one the enormous duties on domestic wool under the McKinley law, the other the free-wool system which the Democratic party adopted in the Wilson Act. It is true, Mr. President, that the importation of foreign wools has decreased. I have here a statement which I saw in a news-paper this morning, taken from the official reports of the Treas-ury Department, in regard to all imports. For the month of Sep-tember the imports into this country decreased $13,000,000, and for the eleven months ending with September they decreased $117,-100,000. Why this decrease of imports into the United States? If there be anything in the old argument of a balance of trade in favor of this country we have it to-day. Yet I undertake to say the people of the United States were never suffering from greater business and monetary depression than now. I repeat that if the theory that the balance of trade causes prosperity to the country be true, why is it that we have not prosperity now, when we are exporting much more largely than we are importing? Why this decrease of imports? Because the people of this country are unable to buy either foreign or domestic goods. Why is it that to-day the manufacturers are complaining because they country are unable to buy either foreign or domestic goods. Why is it that to-day the manufacturers are complaining because they can not sell to the jobbers, and the jobbers can not sell to the retail merchants, and the traveling men are going through the country deploring the fact that they are not able to collect and not able to sell? The balance of trade is in our favor. We are upon the gold standard.

We were told that if McKinley should be elected prosperity would flood this country like the sunshine of a summer day. McKinley was elected. Has prosperity come? Confidence was to be restored. Confidence, then, has been restored. What has been the result of this confidence? The people buy neither domestic nor foreign goods. Do you expect by increasing the tariff rates, as we are told now authoritatively must be done, that you will put more money into the pockets of the people; that you will give them greater ability to buy by increasing their taxes? And, Mr. President, the pretense is that this is to be done in order to get money to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government. Turn to your money statement put upon our desks this morning. The Secretary of the Treasury reports $126,000,000 surplus money in the Treasury over and above the gold reserve—money idle, not used for any purpose whatever. What do you propose to do with your increased tariff taxation in the bill which the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means advertises this morning is now in preparation and will be offered at the extra session? What do you propose to do with your increased duties? Put more money in the Treasury, to lie there idle and to he withdrawn from circus. you propose to do with your increased duties? Put more money you propose to do with your increased duties? Put more money in the Treasury, to lie there idle and to be withdrawn from circulation? Why, if the deficit should continue as now, which is not at all probable, until the middle of McKinley's Administration, it would not exhaust the $126,000,000 of idle money we have on hand. Why should not that money be sent out amongst, the people?

We are told there is $22.85 per capita circulation in this country. A more atrocious falsehood was never put in print or uttered by mortal man. This is a fictitious estimate; I care not whether made by Mr. Foster or Mr. Carlisle. There is no such money in circulation in the United States. They take no account of the bank reserves, State and national. They amount to over $600,000,000 at the least, locked up by law, that can not be used by the people nor paid out by the officials of those institutions. And yet they are counted from year to year until this moss-covered lie is absolutely accepted by many people as the truth. There is no such amount as $22.85 per capita in circulation in the country.

What we want and must have in this country is more circulating medium. Do you expect to furnish it with your increased tariff duties?

ing medium. tariff duties?

We are told that with an increased tariff taxation to pay the Covernment relief will come to the people. How? expenses of the Government relief will come to the people.

expenses of the Government relief will come to the people. How? Increase taxes; pile up more money in the Treasury and add to the $126,000,000 of idle money there to-day; withdraw it from circulation, and yet give relief to the people of the United States!

But, Mr. President, even if the absurd position should be taken that it is necessary to have more money in the Treasury, I deny that increased tariff duties will bring it. We can judge only by experience. If we turn to the Treasury reports in regard to tariff taxation it will be seen that the McKinley high rates decreased the amount collected from imports in this country. I hold in my hand a Treasury statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Government from its beginning until now. If we turn to the three McKinley years, taking the import receipts for 1890 (and the McKinley law went into effect, I believe, in October, 1890), there was collected in 1890 from import duties $229,668,384.

Now, mark. In the year 1891, with an enormous increase of tariff duties, the import duties fell from $229,832,000 to $219,452,000.

Now take the import duties for 1892, when the McKinley law was in full force and in uninterrupted operation. The duties collected continue to fall from $219,452,000 to $177,450,000, and in 1893 they went back from $177,000,000 to $203,000,000. But under the McKinley law at no time were the receipts from import duties as large as in the years preceding the enactment of that law. How is it possible, then, by increased tariff taxation, to do what our friends on the other side propose to do—put more money into the Treasury?

I voted, Mr. President, against taking up the Dingley bill for consideration because I was opposed to it. I should vote against taking up any other bill increasing tariff taxation, because I am opposed to it. There is no necessity for any increase. It will be time enough to increase duties upon imports or to look after new sources of revenue when we have exhausted the idle money now in the Treasury.

In the Treasury.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to a fact? I suppose he takes into consideration the fact that taking the duty off of sugar alone reduced the amount of income some $52,000,000.

Mr. VEST. That is true, but the McKinley Act enormously increased the duty out of all proportion upon other articles. We collected under the McKinley law upon imports of woolen goods 100 per cent. The appraised valuation of these woolen cloths at the custom-houses was some thirty-six million five hundred and the custom-houses was some thirty-six million five hundred and odd thousand dollars, and we collected within a fraction of the same amount in duty.

No, Mr. President, I repeat that the only relief you can give to this country, as much as it may be derided, as much as I may subject myself to the oft-repeated charge of being a lunatic and an anarchist and a repudiator, is in giving more money to the an anarchist and a repudiator, is in giving more money to the people. No country can be prosperous with an increasing population and a decreasing volume of money. You have a system now which congests the money of the country. It is found in the banks and money centers. It is said that we have $600,000,000 in gold. Does it circulate among the people? Does it relieve the middle and lower classes of people in the United States?

Mr. President this issue can not be smoothered by heavening the people.

middle and lower classes of people in the United States?

Mr. President, this issue can not be smothered by abuse and ridicule. The man who thinks that the last election has terminated the struggle is unfit to legislate for a free people; he knows nothing about the great popular impulses and heart throbs that sent millions to the polls for free silver. If we are anarchists and lunatics when we ask that the mints be opened to the free coinage of silver, then this country is lost, because there were 6,499,000 American freemen who stamped themselves as lunatics and anarchists at the election in November last. William J. Bryan, the "bov orator," who has been caricatured and slandered and ridi-"boy orator," who has been caricatured and slandered and ridiculed, polled 47.1 per cent of the entire vote, and McKinley's popular majority was barely 600,000 in a poll of nearly 14,000,000. If there be in this country 6,499,000 anarchists and lunatics and enemies of the public welfare, God help the Republic and free institutions are also as a second secon institutions; we are lost.

But it is a vile slander. The men who voted for Bryan are as honest and patriotic and law abiding as any upon the face of the earth. We do not propose to be ridiculed out of what we think to be right and just. We are for equality. We adhere to the prin-ciples which the fathers of the Republic declared, that there should be no monopolies, no class legislation, no exclusive privileges; and the single gold standard is the vilest monopoly that was ever manufactured in the brain of mortal man.

Mr. President, I do not care to say more of that election than that, in my opinion, it was a parody upon popular government and free institutions. For one I am curious to know what will be the result of the investigation proposed under the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. I should like to understand why in the new and growing States of Texas and the West there has been no increase of population in four years, while in the old, finished, and complete States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois there has been an enormous increase, such as never was found before in any carses of the United States. before in any census of the United States.

I am constrained to believe that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Chandler] was correct when in a published interview he declared that the St. Louis convention was honeycombed with corruption; that the delegates were bought and sent there for the sole purpose of nominating Mr. McKinley. This was no ebullition of partisan passion or of personal zeal for Mr. Reed; for the distinof partisan passion of of personal zeal for Mr. REED; for the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire afterwards, in a deliberate letter to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], wherein he undertook to explain why Mr. McKinley had divided the approbation of the New Hampshire Republicans with Mr. REED, reiterated the charge and declared that every word he had uttered in regard to the composition of the St. Louis convention was true.

Sir, when the average American citizen hears from such high Republican authority that the convention which nominated the candidate of the Republican party was made up of delegations procured by money, that the delegates were sent there by the use of money, he is very apt to inquire how the stream that comes from so corrupt a source can be pure.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I have no disposition to try to follow the Senator from Missouri in his arguments to-day, but he has made two statements to which it seems to me some attention should be paid, as they are certainly very misleading. I have no doubt one of them grows out of his defective memory as to what occurred in the Senate at the time when the Wilson bill was under discussion here.

The Senator from Missouri stated that the Republican Senators resisted the reduction of a cent a pound on tin plate, saying that if the reduction were made it would ruin the industry, and that the Republicans sought to maintain the McKinley rates upon that

The facts are not as stated by the Senator from Missouri. When this subject was before the Senate for consideration, as the RECORD, page 5144, will show, I moved that the rate be increased upon tin plates from 1.2, which was the rate recommended by the committee, and is the rate in the existing law, to 1.5, an increase of three-tenths of a cent a pound; and the reasons which I stated were that the rate upon black sheets as fixed by the same I stated were that the rate upon black sheets as fixed by the same bill was 1.225 cents a pound, and the rate upon the finished product was 1.2. For the purpose of making the bill in itself harmonious, I moved to add three-tenths of a cent to the rate suggested by the committee, and nowhere in the course of that long discussion was a statement made by any Senator upon this side that it was necessary to maintain the rate of 2.2 cents, or that the rate that it was necessary to maintain the rate of 2.2 cents, or that the reduction suggested by the committee would ruin the industry. So much for that.

The Senator stated, as I understood him, in the course of his remarks, that the woolen manufacturing industry of the United States had never been in its history as prosperous as it is to-day. No statement could possibly be wider of the mark. There never has been a time, I venture to say, in thirty years at least, when the woolen manufacturing industry of the United States was so depressed and so unsatisfactory as it is at this very minute. Petitions are coming here every day from the woolen manufacturers depressed and so unsatisfactory as it is at this very minute. Petitions are coming here every day from the woolen manufacturers of every section of the country imploring Congress by some method to give them relief from the existing condition of depression, and from the importations which threaten the very existence of the interest

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived. the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside informally that the Senator from Missouri may finish his remarks. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none. The Senator the Senator from Maine?

the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Maine for his courtesy in suggesting that I should continue, but I will not detain the Senate more than a moment.

the duty upon tin plate from one cent and two-tenths to one cent and five-tenths per pound. Why he did so is utterly immaterial to this issue. I assert now, notwithstanding his statement—and I think the memory of every Senator who was then in this body will confirm what I state-that the duty proposed by the commit will confirm what I state—that the duty proposed by the commit-tee of one cent and two-tenths, which was a reduction of 1 cent per pound from the McKinley rate, was resisted by every protec-tionist Senator in this Chamber. I recollect distinctly that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] was persistent in his attempt to retain the original McKinley rate, and if he could do no better that the degreese should be simply fractional do no better that the decrease should be simply fractional.

What I state, and that is the salient point I make, is that here was a test of the two systems, the one the high protective duty of 2.2 cents a pound upon tin plate in the McKinley Act and the other a duty of about one-half, or 1.2 cents, under the Wilson bill, and that under the reduction the industry of manufacturing tin and terne plate in the United States has increased in almost a fabulous degree. That is all. Whether I have misquoted the Senator from Rhode Island as to the words he used or not is utterly immaterial to the great truth which I have enunciated and which the record shows

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me right there to ask him a question? Mr. VEST.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator attribute the large increase which has taken place in the production of tin plate in this country which has taken producted of the product of the product of the existence of the duty fixed by the Wilson bill?

Mr. VEST. No, Mr. President, I do not. I think it would be well if that duty were reduced. I believe that the manufacturers in the United States, with our natural resources, can compete with foreign manufacturers with only the difference created by the cost of transportation and labor.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will ask the Senator another question. Does he think that if 20 per cent ad valorem or any other peculiar revenue duty had been fixed on tin plate at that time the price would have been proportionately less now?

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest doubt of it. I think the result has been achieved by the enterprise, capital, and natural resources of this country, by the improvement in machinery and the superiority of inventive skill and talent which make our labor the best in the world. Let any man go to Europe and look at their methods of production and then come home and look at ours. We talk about the difference in labor. The American workman we talk about the difference in labor. The American workman in one hour can produce more of infinitely better quality than the foreign workman in two hours. All our methods are superior. We are the most inventive people in the world, and of all the people in the world we can best do without artificial protection.

Mr. ALDRICH. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but if it will not interrupt him I should like to ask him still another questions.

tion. How does he explain the fact that prior to the passage of the act of 1890 not a pound of tin plate was made in the United States?

Mr. VEST. Simply as I would explain the absence of any other article in the United State prior to the time when our people engaged in its manufacture.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.
Mr. FRYE. The Senator can not do that, because when there Mr. FRYE. The Senator can not do that, because when there was no duty on tin plate, at three different times we tried in the United States to manufacture tin plate, and immediately on starting our mills Great Britain cut down the price of tin plate and broke them down. It was an absolute failure and never was any success until the duty was placed on tin plate in the McKinley Act.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon; the reason why we produced no tin plate in the United States was because our capiproduced no tin plate in the United States was because our capitalists could not see their way clear to make it profitable. They did not have the skilled labor. They did not know anything of the necessary methods. It was not owing to the lack of a protective tariff; it was simply owing to the absence of the machinery and the men to work it. The minute that the American capitalists around Pittsburg found that they could make money by manufacturing tin and terne plate they procured the machinery, brought the laborers here from abroad, went into the business, and then found immediately, not by virtue of any protection, but because of our natural resources, that we could not only compete but that we could excel foreigners in the manufacture of pete, but that we could excel foreigners in the manufacture of this article.

Mr. FRYE. But, if the Senator will allow me, it is a little singular that this watchful capital of the United States did not receive any encouragement, and did not get the skilled labor, and did not make their discoveries until there was a duty placed on Maine for his courtesy in suggesting that I should continue, but I will not detain the Senate more than a moment.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] admits that when we were considering the Wilson bill he moved to increase The Senator from Rhode Island, for instance, tells us that the manufacturers of wool are clamoring now for a change and for more protection. Of course they are. You might as well expect more protection. Of course they are. You might as well expect a man who is a slave to the drink habit not to demand more and more of what is killing him from day to day as to expect that any man who can get an increase of a protective duty will not come here and demand it. Wait until your extra session is called and you open the doors here. My friend from Rhode Island knows very well what will happen. A lot of hungry coyotes from the plains famished and starving when they smell a dead deer will not be more greedy and avaricious than every class of manufacturers in this country, and if they can get no other argument they will come here, as they do from time to time when a tariff bill is up, and say, "Well, I am doing pretty well, but I voted the ticket, I subscribed to elect McKinley, and I want my part of this bounty; I am entitled to it." If you give it to one you must give it to another. Whoever heard that there was any end to protection? end to protection?

Now, the Senator from Rhode Island says the woolen manufacturers are suffering. I read here in January and have before me now reports from the Woolen and Cotton Reporter. That is good authority with the Senator from Rhode Island. It ought to be. authority with the Senator from Rhode Island. It ought to be. It published his speech on the tariff and sent out 50,000 copies. [Laughter.] It is not possible that my friend would be so ungrateful as to go back on the organ that trumpeted his praise throughout the country in 1890. Then he was with them the great apostle of protection, the most distinguished statesman upon this floor. When I ask him if he accepts what they state, he shakes his head. Does he intend to deny what they said about himself?

Mr. President, that is the organ of the cotton and woolen manufacturers of this country. I know it was attacked here because I read page after page in which that paper stated that the year 1895, under free wool, had been the most successful to the woolgrowers and the woolen manufacturers of any year in our history.

1895, under free wool, had been the most successful to the woolgrowers and the woolen manufacturers of any year in our history. Do Senators pretend to say there were not 61 new factories put up in that year, against 45 in 1894? There were more than in any other year in the history of this Government. How do they account for it? Do they believe that these astute men, these shrewd capitalists in the United States, would put their money in a losing venture? Do they believe that new woolen mills would be put up under free wool if it is deadly to the woolen interests of the United States? No, Mr. President, they were put up and were in operation a year ago, from the public statements of the Woolen and Cotton Reporter and they are in operation to day so far as I know Cotton Reporter, and they are in operation to day so far as I know. When the Senator simply says that the woolen manufacturers demand more protection, he says what is true of any interest in the United States when you once open the door for tariff legislation.
Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I desire just one word, and that is simply to say that from my own personal knowledge there never has been a time since I have had anything to do with public affairs when the woolen industry of this country was as near dead as it is to-day.

Mr. VEST. Will my friend permit me? Is not that observa-

Mr. VEST. Will my friend permit me? Is not that observation true in regard to every interest in this country?

Mr. FRYE. Not at all. It is not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. How about the farming interest?

Mr. VEST. I do not know how it is in Maine, but I know that in the State of Missouri, the fifth State in the Union, there never was such depression, especially among the farmers of the country; and it extends to all departments of business.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to make one other statement in relation to that matter. A leading woolen manufacturer stated in a rule.

to that matter. A leading woolen manufacturer stated in a public address about four months ago that one-half of the woolen mills in the United States had their doors closed. Secretary North, of the American Wool Association, replied by saying it was not strictly true that one half the woolen mills had their doors closed, but if you took into consideration those running on third time, those running on half time, and those closed it was a fact that one-half of the woolen cards in the United States of America had stopped running. In my own State I know it is true that one-half the mills have closed their doors.

Mr. VEST. Now? Mr. FRYE, Now. Now. I was in a little town called Dexter, where there were five woolen mills. Four of them had their doors closed, and they had been closed for six months. One of them was running on half time. That is true of the woolen industry of the United States. I am not saying what the causes may be. The Senator and I would undoubtedly disagree entirely on that, but that is a fact which I think everybody familiar with the manufacturing industry recognizes.

Mr. MILLS. Before hetakes his seat, will my friend from Maine tell me how he accounts for the fact that though the importations of wool have been much larger than the importations in the year preceding the putting of wool on the free list, almost double, yet every pound of that wool has been consumed in the United States, together with the entire domestic crop of wool? How can the factories all be still when there is so much more wool consumed in the United States?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator is assuming altogether too much. The entire domestic crop of wool in the United States has not been consumed.

Mr. MILLS. A little fraction of it has gone to Mexico and Canada, but the great body of it has been consumed here.

Mr. FRYE. A very large fraction of it is lying in the barns and storehouses to-day because it could only be sold at from 12 to 15 cents per pound. The farmers of this country could not afford to raise wool and sell it at any such price, and they have held on to it, hoping for better times. The increase of importations, as a matter of course, comes from the fact that wool is on

Mr. MILLS. Mr. FRYE. Mr. MILLS. But it is being manufactured, of course.

Mr. FRYE. Undoubtedly it is being manufactured, but we would manufacture twice as much if all the woolen mills of the United States were running. There has been an immense falling off in the consumption of wool in the United States, but not in the importation of wool. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. MILLS. But if the consumption stopped the importation would stop. Mr. FRYE. The trouble with the wool schedule is not that the duty is not high enough. It is my judgment that that same duty on woolen manufactures with free wool if in a different form would be all the duty the woolen manufacturers of this country would require; but it is a fact that under an entire ad valorem duty on woolen goods where the duty is 40 per cent not over 25 per cent has been collected at our custom-houses. That is a fact which everybody who knows anything about the subject recognizes. The result is that almost for the first time in our history this country has been literally swamped, inundated, with the cheapest, poorest, shoddiest kind of woolen goods ever brought into it. That is the trouble; and all these little mills in the United States that is the trouble; and all these little mills in the United States that made the common American goods for the wear of the average man have been compelled to stop. The trouble is not with the high-priced goods, but it is with the low-priced goods, where they are gotten in under an ad valorem tariff.

I think I could take the woolen schedule to-day and arrange it, without increasing the real ad valorem duty, so that it would afford ample protection to the American manufacturer. I could take the cotton schedule—I am not complaining of that schedule and by making not more than three amendments I could make it as good a tariff as the cotton manufacturers of the United States wish for. I could take your iron and steel schedule, with two or three amendments, and make it as good a schedule as the protec-

The woolen schedule is the very worst in the whole lot. It has worked mischief from the beginning to the end, and will continue to do so as long as it is permitted to remain. Whatever other causes may combine to make business bad, that is the trouble.

Mr. VEST. Will my friend answer me one question?
Mr. FRYE. Certainly.
Mr. VEST. Why is it that in 1895 under the Wilson law 65 new mills were constructed in this country, and only 45 were constructed under the McKinley law in 1892?

I will answer the Senator by asking him a ques-Mr. FRYE. Mr. FRYE. I will answer the Senator by asking him a question. Why is it that a magnificent mill in my city which, with the machinery in it, cost $500,000, not less than three months ago was sold for $14,000?

Mr. VEST. Because it was not profitable, I suppose.

Mr. FRYE. But cotton factories are being built, nevertheless, in other parts of the country.

Mr. VEST. I can not answer the Senator's question without knowing all the circumstances of the case and something of the men who conducted the business.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator knows as well as I do—only he attributes it to an entirely different cause—that there is no money in manufacturing in the United States. It does not make any difference what it is; there is no money in it.
Mr. MILLS. Why not?

Mr. MILLS. Why not?
Mr. FRYE. Take it down in Nashville, where you say you can manufacture cheaper than we can in the North; when I was there there were four big cotton mills, and three of them had their doors

Mr. VEST. I do not know as to specific instances, but I have been informed—and I think the Southern Senators here will corroborate what I state—that in all the depression and failure of corporations, suspensions, and receiverships that have obtained in this country for the last six or seven years the exception has been the cotton mills of the South. My information is that they have steadily paid their dividends, that they have been profitable everywhere in that section, and that new mills are being put up for the very reason that that class of manufacture is profitable. I may be mistaken, but that is the result of what I have read in the newspapers and what I have been told by friends interested in such enterprises.

Mr. FRYE. I only state what I was told in Nashville, where the mills were pointed out to me.

Mr. VEST. I understand the cotton mills have largely increased in number, and I have heard the assertion made repeatedly that they have paid their dividends when all other corporations, banks and factories of every description in the North have been unable

Talking about the consumption of wool, I received this morning a circular from Justice, Bateman & Co., who are the apostles of protection in the way of cotton merchants and brokers—
Mr. ALDRICH and others. Wool.
Mr. VEST. Wool and cotton both.

Wool and cotton both. Not cotton.

Mr. FRYE.

Mr. VEST. I think they also deal in cotton, but possibly principally in wool. What I was about to say was that they call attention to the alarming fact that there is now about to be attention to the alarming fact that there is now about to be imported into this country an enormous quantity of Australian wool, equaling, they state, two-thirds of the entire product of Utah in a single year, and possibly some other sheep-growing State or Territory, and that unless something be done, this country will be absolutely flooded with foreign wool. Now, I ask the question which the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLs] asked, and which will suggest itself to even an unreflecting mind, Why is this enormous quantity of wool being brought to this country? Is it brought here for spectacular purposes? Is it simply brought here to pay transportation, to be exhibited, and not used? It can not be consumed for food; it must be manufactured. Why is it that this wool is being brought here, unless there is a demand for it, this wool is being brought here, unless there is a demand for it, and unless it is consumed by our manufacturers?

As I said before in the same connection, why were there more mills put up in 1895 under the Wilson law than in any other year in the history of the wool industry in this country?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I think I can answer the question the Senator asks. Here is a bill called the Dingley bill pending in the Senate of the United States when Bateman made his

mr. VEST. I am talking about 1895.

Mr. FRYE. I am talking about Bateman's report, to which the Senator referred, in which he complains there was an enormous Senator referred, in which he complains there was an enormous quantity of wool being imported into the United States now, or a threat of importation, and the Senator wants to know what is going to be done with it if it is not going to be manufactured. With that Dingley bill pending, and with the threat of 6 cents a pound, in these times there is ample justification for any man, for speculative purposes, to buy and bring wool into the United States and hold it against the passage of the Dingley bill. They do not know that the Dingley bill is not going to pass; on the contrary, the people of the United States are demanding that it shall pass, and any number of them, because a Senator the other desired. trary, the people of the United States are demanding that it shall pass, and any number of them, because a Senator the other day called up the Dingley bill in this Senate, assumed for that reason that he was going to support the Dingley bill, that a majority would support the Dingley bill, and that it would become a law.

Then, again, there is held out to the world—and the world knows it perfectly well; the world has received notice—that if it is possible there will be a tariff bill passed within the next five months which will in certain directions increase protection, notably upon wool. There was inducement enough for a speculator to buy wool in Australia, where he can get it for 6 cents a pound, and it does not cost him more than 3 cents additional to land it in New York in the steamer, insurance and all. There is inducement enough to the speculator to buy enormous quantities of wool and put it into the warehouses in the United States.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator think it is brought here simply to be stored?

Mr. FRYE. I think that a good deal of it is brought here on speculation, and I venture to predict that the Senator will find within the next six months, if this Congress adjourns without passing the Dingley bill—I believe in passing the Dingley bill simply to prevent this country being flooded with this speculative importation—that the importations into this country of all manner of goods will be increased to an enormous extent within the next four months.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will excuse me for just a moment I shall be done

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to make a few suggestions in response to the questions asked by the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Missouri. Both those Senators seemed to assume that because we have large importations of wool that is an infallihat because we have large importations of wool that is an infallible indication that we have prosperity in wool manufacturing and woolgrowing. Suppose that all the wool consumed in the United states was imported, what would then happen? Would the lomestic woolgrower be better off? An increase in the importations of foreign wool with a stationary consumption or a falling off of consumption in the United States means the exclusion of the American grower from the American market and the destruction of the flocks of the American shepherd, and nothing else; and he practical result shows that.

Mr. VEST. In reply to the suggestion of the Senator from the American shepherd and nothing else; and he practical result shows that. ble indication that we have prosperity in wool manufacturing and woolgrowing. Suppose that all the wool consumed in the United States was imported, what would then happen? Would the domestic woolgrower be better off? An increase in the importations of foreign wool with a stationary consumption or a falling off of consumption in the United States means the exclusion of the American grower from the American market and the destruc-tion of the flocks of the American shepherd, and nothing else; and the practical result shows that.

the price of domestic wool and a decline more rapidly under the McKinley law than ever before or since.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me? Mr. VEST. Certainly. Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator state the differ-

Rhode Island—taking that up first—as to the price of domestic wool, I point to one single fact which is unanswerable, that under the McKinley high-tariff rates on wool there was a constant fall in ence in the prices of domestic and foreign wool, that is, the prices in this country and the prices in London, England, and other foreign countries, pending the operation of the McKinley Act?

Mr. VEST. I do not see how that affects the question that I

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think it very seriously affects it.
Mr. VEST. Enormous duties were put upon wool in order, as it was stated, to put up the price of domestic wool to the American sheep grower, but instead of doing that it has put it down.
Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Does not the Senator know it to be a fact that during the operation of the McKinley Act on wool

the price of wool in this country was over and above the price in Bradford, England, and all foreign countries to an extent equal to the amount of the duty?

Mr. VEST. That might have been so, but that does not answer the question. It might have been so, and I do not even controvert it. I have heard the statement made before, and I have heard it contradicted by as good authority as made it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There can not be any question

Mr. VEST. But even if so, it does not explain the fact that the McKinley high tariff on wool did not give a better price to the domestic grower, and Mr. Lawrence, the shepherd king of Ohio, explains it by saying the price of wool went down over the whole country during the operation of the McKinley law, and that the demonetization of silver—unpalatable as that may be—caused the decline in the price of wool. If anybody will read Document No. 17, which is the basis of the speech delivered by the Senator from Oregon, he will find the statement of Mr. Lawrence to that effect. Oregon, he will find the statement of Mr. Lawrence to that effect.

I am astonished, Mr. President, to hear the Senator from Maine say that mills of any sort are closed now. I was under the impression that after McKinley was elected we should have prosperity in every department of trade in this country, and I am therefore unable to explain how it is that the mills that were closed before

Mr. FRYE. We are living under Democratic laws mown.
Mr. VEST. It was certain, however, that those laws would be temporary. Now, the Senator tells us that these men who, accordtemporary. Now, the Senator tells us that these men wno, according to Justice, Bateman & Co., will bring in this enormous amount of Australian wool are doing so upon the presumption that the Dingley bill will pass. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], when he made the motion to take up the bill, accompanied it with a reply to an inquiry made on the other side that he did not propose to support it, and it is an open secret that the Dingley bill is dead, in the tomb of the Capulets in a parliamentary sense. How pose to support it, and it is an open secret that the Dingley bill is dead, in the tomb of the Capulets in a parliamentary sense. How could any man here or abroad think there would be anything but an enormous increase in tariff duties with Mr. McKinley elected as President? Everybody assumed that when he was elected he would again undertake to put in force in this country the rates which existed under the McKinley law, or approximating to them as nearly as possible. Does anybody believe that the men who are buying up this Australian wool, lying out of their money, paying transportation upon it, and bringing it to this country with an uncertainty in regard to what legislation may be had, or speculators and capitalists do not know exactly what is to to be expected in this country to day in the way of Congressional action? in this country to day in the way of Congressional action?

No, Mr. President, the fact remains, and it can not be answered, that more woolen mills were put up in 1895 than in any one year; that 250,000,000 pounds of foreign wool came into this country and were consumed under the free-wool system; that the goods which were manufactured out of these wools were purchased by somebody, and that the statement that free wool would prostrate the wool interests of the United States either as to manufacturers or woolgrowers has been absolutely refuted and is absolutely disproved.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire very briefly to call the attention of the Senate to some of the peculiarities in the argument of the Senator from Missouri. That Senator and his great leader, Mr. Cleveland

How does the Senator make that agree with the argument which he has used a thousand times upon this floor that a high rate of Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I have always stated that no other influence could have accomplished that but the tariff, in which he takes so much interest. Notwithstanding these high duties, the price of wool went down in the United States, and the prophecy that that act would increase the price in favor of the domestic woolgrower proved to be false, for in spite of any duty you could put on it there were causes at work that made the price of wool fall.

Now I ask the Senator this question: How does he explain the fact that after we put wool upon the free list the price went up and has so continued up to this time?

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. VEST. Here is a report which shows that it is higher now than it was in 1894, when the Wilson bill passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the Senator now to state that the decrease in the price of wool which followed the enactment of the act of 1890 was not on account of the duty placed by that act upon wool, but from other causes, and that that duty had nothing whatever to do with it. Am I correct in that assumption?

whatever to do with it. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have never undertaken to say that the imposition of those duties caused of itself that fall in the price of wool. It is sufficient to me from my standpoint to say that it did not increase the price, as it was the contention of the Senator and his associates it would do, when they put that enormous duty

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri understands as well as I do—for it has been demonstrated in this Chamber and elsewhere a thousand times—that while it was true that there was a decrease in the price of wool subsequent to the passage of the act of 1890, a decrease owing to the additional increased production all over the world and to improved methods in production, yet the price of the same quality of wool relatively with that in London was higher by almost exactly the amount of the duty here than it was abroad. That was the effect of the McKinley Act, and it was the effect which it was expected would follow the passage of that act.

Mr. VEST. Why did the price not go down when the duty was taken off?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator asks why the price of wool did not go down when the duty was taken off. There might have been prior to the passage of the act—
Mr. VEST. Oh!
Mr. ALDRICH. A feeling that the removal of the duties would produce such a depression that the price would go down. Those things are always anticipated. If we were to put a duty of 12 cents things are always anticipated. If we were to put a duty of 12 cents a pound on wool to-day, the market would not remain stationary until that bill became a law, but you would get an anticipation of that in an increase in the price of wool. So we had a decrease in the price of wool in anticipation of the removal of the duty. There was after the passage of the act a natural reaction, but it was very small. There might have been perhaps other causes; but the American producer of wool knows as well as I do, and as well as the Senator from Missouri himself knows, that the present low price of wool is owing to the removal of those duties by the Wilson Act. son Act.

Mr. VEST. Why is the price of wool higher than it was then?
Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; it is not.
Mr. VEST. Here is the market report.
Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. FRYE. It is not higher in the United

Mr. VEST. It is higher in the United States now than it was in 1894.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is entirely mistaken.
Mr. VEST. Here is the report.
Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will give us the date. I think the woolgrowers of the United States will be very much surprised to know that the price of wool is higher.
Mr. VEST. I quote from the New York and Philadelphia market report of December 10, 1896:

Ohfo, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia XX wool, 19 to 20 cents.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is since the election.

Mr. VEST. Yes; December 10.
Mr. ALDRICH. What was the price in 1890?
Mr. VEST. From 18 to 19 cents.
Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; not the same class of wool. A Senator near me tells me the wool clip of his own State was sold for from 10 to 11 cents, as against 21 and 22 cents in 1890.

Mr. VEST. I am talking about XX Ohio wool, upon which the Senator made a report and furnished a table in his great speech of 1890.

Mr. ALDRICH. There has been no time since 1890 that XX Ohio wool sold in New York at 19 and 20 cents. It was worth from 30 to 35 cents at the time, or 33 cents, as I remember it.

Mr. VEST. I will ask the Secretary to read the tables taken from the market report, if the Senator will permit me.
Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WOOL.

In September, 1891, about one year after the McKinley bill took effect, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia XX was worth in the Boston market 30 to 31 cents.

31 cents.

In October, 1892, the same grade was worth in the same market 28 to 29 cents, being a fall of 2 cents a pound.

Ohio. Pennsylvania, and West Virginia X was worth in September, 1891, in the Boston market 29 to 30 cents.

In October, 1892, it was worth in the same market 27 to 27†.

In September, 1891, No. 1 was worth in the Boston market 35 to 36 cents, and No. 2, 33 cents.

In October, 1892, No. 1 was worth in the same market 32† to 33 cents, and No. 2, 31 to 32 cents.

In September, 1891, fine unwashed was worth in the Boston market 21 to 22 cents.

In September, 1891, the drawales cents.
In October, 1892, it was worth 19 to 20 cents.
In the Boston market in September, 1891, Michigan, New York, and New England was worth 27 cents.
In October, 1892, it was worth 25 to 26 cents.
In September, 1891, Oregon (scoured) was worth in the Boston market from 56 to 58 cents.
In October, 1892, it was worth 53 to 56 cents.
In October, 1892, it was worth 53 to 56 cents.
In September, 1891, Texas (scoured) was worth in the Boston market 60 to 62 cents.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Secretary has read sufficient to answer my purpose, which was to show that Michigan wool about 1890, and prior to that time, ranged from 33 to 34 cents. The same wools are now about 19 or 20 cents, about equivalent to the difference in the duty.

Mr. MILLS. The price has been falling all the time.

Mr. VEST. Let the Secretary read on to show what was the effect of the McKinley law and the Wilson law.

The Secretary read as follows:

Now. I ask your attention to the operation of the Wilson Act. In September, 1894, immediately after the passage of the Wilson Act. XX wool, the same quality of Ohio wool, was worth in the Boston market 18 to 19 cents; December 19, 1895, it was worth in the same market 19 to 21 cents. Fine, unwashed, was worth in September, 1894, 12 to 13 cents; it was worth a year afterwards, in December, 1895, 12 to 14 cents. Fine, unmerchantable, was worth in September, 1894, 13 to 15 cents; December 19, 1895, it was worth 14 to 15 cents, showing a gradual improvement in prices during one year under the Wilson law. These figures are taken from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter for December 19, 1895, which I have and can produce if necessary.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement. The same grades of wool in the Pacific Coast States—that is, California, Oregon, and Washingtion—which, under the operation of the McKinley Act, brought on an average from 14 to 18 cents a pound, could not be sold for 5 cents a pound at any time during the last year until within a short time past; in fact, these same grades of wool in Oregon, to my certain knowledge, that brought from 14 to 18 cents a pound during all the time of the operation of the McKinley Act, sold as low as 4 cents a pound, and no advances whatever could be had from merchants at 5 cents a pound. Recently the price of wool has slightly gone up in a pound. Recently the price of wool has slightly gone up in Oregon.

Oregon.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana hands me a statement of the relative prices of wool in that State in 1890 and 1896. The average price in 1890 was 17 cents; in 1896 it was 6 cents, a difference of 11 cents a pound.

Mr. VEST. Not in Boston.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not specially contending over what is the price in Boston, but I am undertaking to show that the wool producers of the United States have suffered to the extent of the duty which was removed by the act of 1894. The price of wool to-day is less by almost exactly the amount of duty than it was in the years prior to 1890.

in the years prior to 1890.

Mr. VEST. Where?

Mr. ALDRICH. Everywhere in the country, in all the markets. I have already stated that in Boston—we will take Boston, if you please Mr. VEST.

Boston is the great wool market.

Mr. VEST. Boston is the great wool market.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is one of the great wool markets.

Mr. VEST. It is the great wool market of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the wool producers of the country are quite as much interested in the markets of Oregon and Washing-

Mr. GEAR. Philadelphia is the great wool market.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Iowa is right. Probably there is more wool sold in Philadelphia than anywhere else in the country.

Mr. VEST. Large quantities of wool are sold in Boston, Philadelphia, and New York.

Mr. ALDRICH. What I am saying is that the price of wool was 12 and 13 cents a pound higher in 1890 than it is in 1896.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator knows it has been falling every year.

Mr. ALDRICH. What I mean to say further is that, while there has been a gradual decline in the price of wool all over the world, so long as a protective tariff was maintained in the United States the wool producers of this country received the full benefit in the increased price of their wool up to the very hour of its repeal. I think there is nothing in the whole history of tariff legislation which shows so plainly the beneficent results of the protective system as the benefits which the farmers of the United States have received from the protective tariff on wool.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, it is a fact known to every gentleman in this Chamber, because of course they are all well informed on this question, which they have been discussing for a generation and more, that wool has been steadily, persistently falling ever since 1860 under all tariffs. We commenced in 1863 to put up the tariff for the protection of wool, and the tariff climbed and climbed until the climax was reached in 1890; and yet year by year and year by year wool continued to fall, and when the tax was put on in 1890 at the demand of the Wool Growers' Association to save from sacrifice that product in the United States, it continued still It fell from 1890 to 1891, and 1892, and 1893, and 1894, and when wool was put on the free list the price fell a little for a few months, and then rose a cent or two per pound.

But when the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] says that domestic wool in the United States has enjoyed the full benefit of the protection placed upon it, he skips over a period of five years to make a comparison. The Senator from Rhode Island will not state in this assembly that the tariff duty of 11 cents a pound on unwashed wool imposed by the McKinley Act was taken off the price of American wool the day after the Wilson bill was off the price of American wool the day after the Wilson bill was passed and became a law. If the domestic wool of the United States enjoys the benefit of the protective duty, if the price is regulated by the fiat of law, then, sir, when the duty was taken off by law the protection of the domestic wool was taken off by law. But it was not the fact. The wool is as high to-day, at least, as it was when you had your duty on it under the McKinley law, and there are other reasons than the tariff which, as my friend the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] stated, affect the prices of wool prices of wool.

The Senator from Rhode Island is well posted on this questionas well as any gentleman in this Chamber. He knows that from the beginning of the high duties on wool domestic manufacturers in the United States have been putting in cotton and shoddy and hair and rags and everything that escapes duty as a substitute for wool. American wool has been displaced by those substitutes, and that has produced the depression in the price of wool in great measure. I was sitting down the other day with this coat on, which I supposed was made of American cloth, and feeling along the edge of it I found some hair sticking out, and I pulled out a half dozen horsehairs more than a foot long, placed there as a substitute for wool, for the protection of the American woolgrower. [Laughter Latter of the American and the statistics given by our center of the American woolgrower.] Let my friends go and read the statistics given by our census. They show from 1860 to the present time a most marvelous growth in the utilization of substitutes in place of wool in the domestic manufactures of the United States.

Now, I know you are going to put back your duty. You are going to pass your bill in the next Congress, for you will then have a majority in both branches and the President of the United States. I do not think there is any doubt about it. I do not be-lieve you are going to do it here now, however. I am not given to making predictions, but when you put back the duty on wool at 6 cents or 10 cents, or any other amount, I make the prediction here that there will not be one-tenth of 1 cent increase in the price of American wool occasioned by it.

Mr. GEAR. I should like to inform my friend the Senator from Texas that the long hairs which he pulled out of his coat were put in by the tailor who made it, to stiffen the collar.

Mr. MILLS. No, sir; they were woven in. That is the way

Mr. GEAR. I wish also to say to my friend the Senator from Texas that in the district which I formerly represented in Congress there is a good deal of wool raising. In 1890 and all through the pendency of the McKinley law the price of wool in that district was 19 to 21 cents. When the so-called McKinley law was repealed there was an immediate drop of 10 cents a pound, and the farmers of that district have not had more than 10 or 11 cents a pound from that day until within sixty days of the election of McKinley, when wool advanced a little—1 or 2 cents.

Some Germans in my home town are large dealers in wool. I drop into their establishments occasionally and look at their stock. They are holding 200,000 pounds of wool to-day of this year's crop, 1896, at 10 and 11 cents, expecting, as they have the right to do, that when we have a majority in both Houses we will put a fair, moderate duty on wool for the benefit of the woolgrowers. They are Democrats, but they appreciate the situation, that it will enhance the price of the wool they have on hand. Mr. CHANDLER. While the Senator from Texas is thinking over the statement of the Senator from Iowa, I think it my duty to call up the immigration bill. I would not do so if I saw any encouragement to believe that there would be immediate action encouragement to believe that there would be immediate action upon the Dingley bill. I obtained some hope when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Allen] boldly called up the bill the other day, but upon interrogating him I found that the measure was to receive no support from him. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest], at whose instance it was taken up to-day, has spoken on it at length, but I think he said it is in the tomb of the Capulate. Whether the Senator meant that the Chamber of the Senate is the tomb of the Capulets or that the Committee on Finance as now constituted is the tomb of the Capulets, I do not know; but the Senator spent a great deal of time in pounding a bill which he says is dead.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we had better defer further discussion upon the bill until it is before the Senate with some hope of its passing. The Senator occupied a wide field of discussion. He mentioned my name at the close of his remarks. I did not hear distinctly what he had to say, but I did hear him refer to the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. When that resolution comes before the Senate it will be my locative and my data to define the senate it will be my pleasure and my duty to define my position in connection with the proposed investigation. But I now hope that as the immigration bill is to be voted upon at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, and as I know there are Senators who wish to debate the pending amendments, the discussion upon that measure may proceed. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. ALDRICH. May I trespass upon the kindness of the Senator from New Hampshire for a moment longer?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not to resume the woolen discussion, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me to speak, I will take my own subject. I suppose I could speak on the bill the Senator refers to, but I prefer to-

Mr. Allen rose, Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Nebraska will be sure to reply, and I would just as soon have the debate upon the immigration bill, if the Senator from Rhode Island is quite willing.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the Senator from New Hampshire presses his request and we pass from this very interesting subject, I should like to know if it is settled in Republican circles upon the other side of the Chamber—

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Nebraska will allow me to interrupt him. I must yield first to the Senator from Rhode Island if I yield at all; but if the Senator from Nebraska will think over and mature his remarks, I will yield to him afterwards.

[Laughter.]
Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, in the course of some remarks which I submitted to the Senate upon this question in 1894, I had published in the RECORD a statement of the comparative prices of wool in this country and in England, using equivalent qualities in both cases. The quotations came from the very highest authority in London and in this country. That table showed conclusively that the difference in the price of the same quality of wool between London and the United States was 12 cents a pound for a series of fifteen years, or almost the exact equivalent of the duty in the United States, showing that the whole amount of the duty was added, as has been sometimes claimed by Senators upon the other side, to the price of wool in this country, and that the farmer received the full duty.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the Senator from New Hampshire presses his request, and after having matured my thoughts somewhat, I should like to ask him if it is really settled upon the other side of the Chamber that the Dingley bill is dead, and that nothing further is to be done with it?

Mr. CHANDLER. It will depend almost entirely upon the attitude of the Senator himself and Senators upon the other side of the Chamber. If the Senator was sincere in calling up the bill and wishes to get rid of the obstacle that is put in the path of the passage of the bill, to wit, the clause for free silver coinage, the bill will be taken up and acted upon, I have no doubt. But I suppose it is now evident to the Senate and to the country that the Senator from Nebraska made his speech as a continuation of his campaign addresses of last fall-

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all.
Mr. CHANDLER. Which is equally true as to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I do think that before Senators urge upon the Senate the discussion of the Dingley bill they ought to define their own position, and tell us whether they come here instructed by the result of the election in November to help pass through the Senate of the United States, whether it is the tomb of the Capulets or the tomb of anybody else, a bill to fill the Treasury of the United States and protect the industries of the United States.

Now, if the Senator from Nebraska will define his position fairly and squarely, he will soon find out what this side of the Chamber desires to do with the Dingley bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I regret that the Senator from New Hampshire declines to answer my question. In absolute good faith, never in my life being more sincere, I put the question, whether it is really the settled purpose of the Republican party to abandon this important measure in midstream, or whether it is the purpose to take it up, consider it in a dignified manner, and pass it, or have it defeated, as the case may be?

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.
Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator vote against the freecoinage amendment to the Dingley bill?
Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would not be guilty of voting against free coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1 for anything in the world. I would not want to imperil my intelligence to that extent. Mr. CHANDLER. Now, I will ask the Senator another question. Does he not know that if that amendment is put upon the

Mr. ALLEN. No; I do not. The Senator from New Hampshire has announced himself as a bimetallist; several other Senators have announced themselves as bimetallists; and I have hoped that in the light of the discussion in the fall something has been gained in the way of knowledge upon the other side of the Chamber, and that we might confidently expect the free-silver amendment to be adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that I have no doubt he has done his best to instruct the country, but there is the House of Representatives, which will not adopt the amendment, and there is a President of the United States the amendment, and there is a President of the United States—he is not my President, although he did all he could to help to elect my candidate last November [laughter]—who will not sign such a bill; and the Senator knows very well that this bill can not pass unless the Republicans are helped to pass it by some Palmer Democrat or Bryan Democrat or some Bryan Populist. It can not be done; and, as the Senator from Missouri says, it is all leather and prunella to get up here and talk about the bill when they characterize it in the first breath as a dead bill, as a bill which is in the tomb of the Capulets.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not believe the bill is dead.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then will the Senator help us to get this amendment off of it?

amendment off of it?

Mr. ALLEN. I think that statement was simply poetic license on the part of the Senator from Missouri. I do not believe as he states.

The Republicans have within one of a majority in this Chamber. The Republicans have within one of a majority in this Chamber. They have 44 Senators. One more will give them power to pass any bill they see fit to pass in this body. Here in the Dingley bill is the foundation for as high a protective measure as you may see fit to adopt. You have your foundation already laid. You have promised the country relief. You are still holding forth the idea that the country will be relieved of its present distress. Why not take hold of this bill in a spirit of fairness and candor, and with the intelligence pressessed on the other ride of the Chamber, and the intelligence possessed on the other side of the Chamber, and construct it into a permanent tariff measure?

Mr. President, I do not believe that the tariff question is so great a question—I may not have the proper conception of it, however that it requires six or eight months to construct a tariff bill. are threatened here with an extraordinary session of Congress. I believe the most sensible thing that this Congress could do, if it could be done, and I believe the country would approve of it, would be to adjourn and not convene for two years. The country would receive some rest.

The Senator from New Hampshire understands quite well that there is some reasonable prospect of the present Chief Executive signing this bill or signing a tariff measure. He has committed himself to the Republican doctrine of gold monometallism. I understand he laughs and rejoices when he comes in contact with his Republican friends at the great joint victory achieved in the fall, congratulating his Republican friends upon the united vic-fall, congratulating his Republican friends upon the united victory and the vindication of the Republican doctrine of gold monometallism. Is it not possible that in this Chamber and in the other branch of Congress there is enough Republican influence to induce His Excellency to sign a permanent tariff act?

Mr. GALLINGER. With a free-silver amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. My friend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] seems to have gone mad upon the subject of free silver. Not only have I never yet heard that Senator—I say it in kindness—offer a reason why silver should not be coined, but I have never heard him offer a decent and respectable subterbut I have never heard him offer a decent and respectable subterfuge or respectable sophistry against the coinage of silver.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.
Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator has heard President Cleveland offer reasons against it.

Mr. ALLEN. Never.
Mr. GALLINGER. And if this bill is passed with your free-silver attachment it will have to receive the approval or disapproval of the President of the United States. Now, does the Senator think—and I appeal to his intelligence, to which he alluded a moment ago—that President Cleveland would sign a tariff act with a free-silver attachment?

Mr. ALLEN. The President of the United States has become a Republican. I should like to hear any gentleman point out the difference between the political principles he advocates to-day and the principles advocates to-day and have to put a tag upon the principles of the Republican party. You would have to put a tag upon the principles of the Republican party and a tag upon the principles of Grover Cleveland before you could distinguish between them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me again? I do not desire to interrupt him unjustifiably.

Mr. ALLEN. It is no interruption at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is right, so far as concerns free silver coinage in this country under existing conditions. both the Republican party and the President of the United States are committed against it. Hence, I again ask him if he thinks the President would sign a tariff bill with a free-silver attachment?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not stand close enough to His Excellency to know what he would do. I assume, however, that he is a convert to Republicanism. He has no party of his own. He lost control of the Democratic party at Chicago last summer. He has a following of barely 125,000 in the United States calling themselves Gold Democrats. I assume, therefore, that the President has gone over body and soul, and that includes a good deal, to the Republicant lican party me again?

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit

Mr. ALLEN. Let me answer the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.
Mr. ALLEN. Why, then, under those circumstances, would be not sign a moderate tariff bill, such as our Republican friends say

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator asserts with a good deal of earnestness that the President of the United States is a Republican, because he agrees with the Republican party upon financial principles. If that be true, he must be a Populist, because he agrees with the Populist party upon the tariff question.

Mr. ALLEN. No; he does not even agree with the Populist party upon the tariff question.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the difference? You would have to tag the Populist party and the President to discover the difference.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all. There is not a Populist principle which any man who can read and see can not understand. I know of no principle that is advocated by the Populist party of which the President is an adherent. But that is neither here nor there.

the President is an adherent. But that is neither here nor there.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is.

Mr. ALLEN. Why does not the Republican party in this Chamber, having jurisdiction now of the subject-matter, take the Dingley bill, which was urged last winter so strongly by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman], and upon that build a permanent tariff measure? I recall well hearing the senior Senator from Ohiosay, after we had twice refused to take up the bill, that he would call it up himself at another time. But he never yet has done so. That statement occurs in his remarks of February 25 last, I think it is. It has never been done. I have no doubt that the influence of the Republican party in both branches of Congress would be sufficient to induce the President of the United States to sign a moderate tariff act.

A moment ago I heard the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and I also heard the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who is the great apostle of protection, speak about the decline in the price of wool as though the decline in the price of that article were due entirely to tariff legislation or a lack of protection. But I did not hear either one of those Senators say anything about the price of farm produce in general. The wool industry must be protected by law, while the great mass of farmers from the Atlantic to the Pacific must go without protection in any form, with the prices of their products constantly falling, until they have reached a point where they will not bring two-thirds of the cost of production. If the corn and articles of that kind which are grown in the great Mississippi Valley are to sell at present prices, then the more cheap wool this country can have the better off it will be.

The Senator from Rhode Island desires to raise the price of wool to the consumers, and yet he is not willing to give one letter wool to the consumers, and yet he is not willing to give one letter or one line of legislation to raise the price of general farm products to the farmer. He wishes to know what is the difficulty. I appeal to that Senator, who is a man of great knowledge upon this question, and, for that matter, upon all other subjects, to state whether it is not true that this country has to-day more manufactured articles than it can consume in the next two or three years. The factories are full of manufactured articles; jobbing houses are full of them. The stores in the cities and the country towns are full of articles to be sold. There never was more wheat and corn and oats and cotton and tobacco in this country than there is to-day. Why are not these articles exchanged, commerce enlivened, and money put into circulation? Mr. President, it is simply because the volume of money is so low that farm produce brings nothing. The farmer can not convert it into money, or into sufficient money, and therefore he can not purchase the surplus articles of the manufacturer; and that is all there is to it.

Now, I say to the other side of the Chamber that so far as I am concerned individually, I will not place a thing in your pathway to obstruct a reasonable tariff measure from your standpoint. You have cried tariff from every hilltop in this country for the You have cried tariff from every hilltop in this country for the last six months. You have succeeded in deluding the country. You have told the people that our prosperity would be brought about by the reenactment of a tariff law. I think we can demonstrate to the country the falsity of that statement quicker by permitting you to pass such an act and by that means draw the attention of the people of the country once more to the only great issue, the financial question.

Mr. SHERMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to make a remark? I suggest that the immigration bill go over to-day and be taken up after the routine morning-business toto-day and be taken up after the routine morning business tomorrow, its consideration to be continued until the hour for voting already agreed upon.

Mr. TELLER. Before that is done I wish to say a word. I do not like to object to the request, but I wish to say a word or two.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not propose to stop debate on this matter.

Mr. TELLER. I do not propose to debate this question.
Mr. SHERMAN. I think I have the floor.
Mr. CHANDLER. I merely desire to ask unanimous consent that the immigration bill may be taken up after the routine morning business is finished to-morrow morning.
Mr. TELLER. I will not object to that, after I can say a few words, which I can say now.

Mr. CHANDLER. That bill is not now before the Senate. It is the Dingley bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Ohio. He will recognize the Senator from Colorado later.

Mr. TELLER. I will wait until the Senator from Ohio gets

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield to the Senator from Colorado. I desire to make only a few remarks.

Mr. TELLER. I will wait until the Senator from Ohio concludes

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to take part in Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to take part in the political feature of this debate, which has been very interesting, but only in the most important object of tariff legislation, and that is revenue. A deficiency of revenue caused by defective laws is almost a crime when committed by the Congress of the United States. It is the first duty of Congress to appropriate money for the ordinary expenditures of the Government of the United States. That is usually done without any party friction. United States. That is usually done without any party friction. The question then is how to raise money to pay those appropriations and to carry on the operations of the Government. This is the difficult problem to be solved by Congress. Upon that question the two great parties honestly differ, one believing that duties may be levied upon imported goods for revenue only, while the other believes that the duties should be so levied that they shall the other believes that the duties should be so levied that they shall the other believes that the duties should be so levied that they shall the duties are the duties and dense the duties are the duties are the duties are the duties are the duties and the duties are the duties are the duties are the duties are dense the duties are the duties are the duties are the duties are duties are the d protect, improve, and encourage domestic manufactures, as well as to furnish adequate revenue for the support of the Government. This contention has existed between parties since the origin of our Government, and is likely to continue while the Government lasts. The result has been that on account of this dispute now for several years the Government of the United States has expended more than the receipts, more than the taxes levied upon the people of the United States. This is a disgrace to any Congress, and ought to be corrected when the opportunity offers. Difference of opinion in the Senate of the United States has undoubtedly cre-

Now, let me call attention to the fact that from the close of the civil war until 1893 every year the Congress of the United States provided sufficient revenue to carry on the operations of the Government, and not only to do that, but to pay off rapidly the public debt. I have before me the familiar statement which shows that from July 1, 1866, until the commencement of the Administration apple to cover the expenses. of Mr. Cleveland the receipts were ample to cover the expenses, and a surplus each year, which in the aggregate amounted to $1,580,000,000, which was applied to the payment of the public debt. The ascertained interest-bearing debt at the close of the war was about twenty-three or twenty-four hundred million dollars. The precise figures are contained in the books. That debt had been reduced to $585,000,000 prior to the coming in of the Administration of Mr. Cleveland on his second term. The Demogratic party in Congress in pursuance of their policy, then procratic party in Congress, in pursuance of their policy, then proceeded to pass the existing tariff law. Everybody knows—it is not a matter of doubt—that since that time the receipts from not a matter of doubt—that since that time the receipts from customs duties have greatly declined.

I have here a table which shows that in a single year after the passage of the existing tariff law the revenues of the Government from customs fell some $50,000,000. It is found in this statement that the revenues in 1891 from customs were $219,000,000; in 1893 they were $177,000,000; in 1894 they were $131,000,000, and in 1895 they were $152,000,000; showing that in each year the revenues from the customs fell below those provided for by the McKinley Act and the previous tariff laws at least $50,000,000.

That deficiency is the fault of the existing tariff law. There can

That deficiency is the fault of the existing tariff law. There can be no question about it. The provisions of the law are not sufficient to furnish revenue for the support of the Government, and that is mainly because it is founded upon ad valorem rates instead of specific duties.

Now, that is undoubtedly true. I do not reproach anybody for it. I would desire myself to reduce the burden of taxation upon our people, but the people of the United States never utter a complaint when Congress will supply sufficient revenues to carry on the operations of the Government and gradually pay the public debt. Had it not been for the passage of the existing tariff law, if the McKinley law had remained upon the statute book, producing the revenue it was shown to produce, every part of the public debt of the United States, the interest-bearing debt, would have been paid off at the end of this century. It is manifest that that

I say, therefore, that I will at any moment, upon the motion of anyone, vote to proceed to the consideration of any tariff bill that will increase the revenues of the Government. I do not care whether the bill is in the form of protective duties or in the form of revenue duties. It is a shame, it is a disgrace to the Congress of the United States, at this time of profound peace, to have an insufficient revenue to carry on the Government of the United States and to issue bonds for the purpose of borrowing money to carry on the Government in time of peace. It is a reproach to us; it would be a reproach to any government of Europe. It is a marked and singular incident that the debt of the United States, instead of now being $585,000,000 and in process of reduction, has been increased $265,000,000. That is the fault of the insufficient

Sir, I do not care in what form it comes, upon whose motion it may be made, I am willing to take up and consider the pending bill, the Dingley bill, that has been so often referred to. The first thing to be done is to add to it sufficient provisions to increase the revenue so that hereafter in the incoming Administration we shall not be going into debt year by year. If that can be done in a proper way, let it be done. We may differ about the subjects of taxation, the mode and the manner of taxation; that is a matter of honest difference; but the duty should be performed in one way or the other, and it makes but little difference, as the bill proposed is only a temporary measure, whether it is done upon the principles adopted by the Democratic party or the principles adopted by the Republican party.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to ask him just one question, if it does not interrupt him?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. The money statement of the Treasury Department this morning shows one hundred and twenty-six million and some hundred thousand dollars over and above the gold reserve, as it is called. What does the Senator propose to have done with that

What does the Senator propose to have done with that called.

Mr. SHERMAN. That condition of affairs is caused by the existing deficiency of revenue. The deficiency created a doubt as to whether we would be able to meet the expenses of the Governto whether we would be able to meet the expenses of the Government and to maintain the gold reserve created for the special purpose of preserving the parity of United States notes with coin. In order to meet the current deficiencies, the President of the United States was compelled to use the gold reserve, to divert it from the purpose designated by Congress, and expend it for current demands. This led to the demand of gold for United States notes, and the money now indicated by the Senator is the United States notes redeemed in gold, and these notes are held in the Treasury to prevent us from falling from the gold or specie standard. Have I answered the Senator sufficiently?

Mr. VEST. It appears from this money statement that the

Mr. VEST. It appears from this money statement that the one hundred and twenty-six million and some hundred thousand dollars is a part of the proceeds of the sale of bonds. I do not understand that those proceeds are greenbacks.

Mr. SHERMAN. A very small part of it forms the proceeds of bond sales. The bonds were paid for in gold. The notes were redeemed in gold. This is shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. VEST. I will say, with great respect to the Senator from Ohio, that he does not answer my question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did answer it.

Mr. VEST. It was not as to how the money came there, or what was done with the gold, or what has been done by the Treasury Department, but what does the Senator propose shall be done with the one hundred and twenty-six million and some odd hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us see how that money was accumulated in the Treasury. In Republican times there was no difficulty about the reserve. All the reserve was maintained, and never during that period of thirteen years was the reserve called upon for more than $30,000,000. But the very moment the policy was adopted of having insufficient revenue, when every intelligent man knew that the Department had to fall upon and use the gold reserve it created a doubt as to our ability or willingness to maintain the control of reserve, it created a doubt as to our ability or willingness to maintain the specie standard. That has been the cause of it, and that is an additional reproach to the Democratic party. That is the result of an insufficient tariff revenue.

All I wish to say is that if we can take up the Dingley bill I am willing to do it. If we are to play fast and loose and talk about silver and other matters which have no connection with a tariff bill at all, then, as a matter of course, it is idle and useless to take it up; it is a waste of time; but if we can have any assurance whatever on this side of the Chamber that we can take up the whatever on this side of the Chamber that we can take up the Dingley bill and provide enough revenue in some way or other to carry on the operations of Government we will gladly join in that movement. That bill it is proposed shall last but for a year, and it is not a matter of great importance. We can live through that year under it if necessary. It would be a wise act for this Congress, and for the Senate especially, where the block is made, and where it ought to be rectified, to take up the Dingley bill sent to us by the House of Representatives, which, it is conceded, would add to our revenues $40,000,000. We ought to pass it as it is, defective as it is, but without those riders which would prevent it defective as it is, but without those riders which would prevent it from becoming a law.

The silver rider was a mere cowardly evasion of a great and important duty. I say, with all the emphasis of the words I can give to it, that the proposition to go to the single silver standard—for that is what it means—was introduced in order to defeat the bill itself. It is wrong; but whether wrong or right in itself, it had no place on the tariff bill. It had no connection with our revenues or expenditures. It was put there to prevent the proper action of Congress in passing a revenue bill to carry on the operations of the Government. If we can take up the bill and remove this difficulty in any way, if Senators will see it their duty to help us along and provide means to carry on the Government, do not believe in many of its features; I do not believe in that it is. I do not believe in many of its features; I do not believe in the principles upon which it is founded; still I will vote for it, because it would do that first and primary duty, it would increase the revenues of the Government and enable the Government to go on without going every day and every hour into debt more and more.

Mr. PETTIGREW. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.
Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if he thinks it would obviate the necessity of selling bonds to procure gold if the revenue was increased?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly.
Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I should like to ask a further question. Would the Senator be willing, if we passed, for instance, the Dingley bill, to vote for an amendment to repeal the law of 1875 authorizing the issue of bonds?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think there is any law now authorizing the issue of bonds except the resumption act, which provides that gold shall be used as a fund to redeem United States notes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Under some authority bonds have been issued. Under a pretended or real authority bonds have been

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.
Mr. PETTIGREW. I suppose they were issued under the sumption act. Would the Senator consent to vote for an amendation of the senator consent to vote for a senat resumption act. ment to repeal that authority, so that bonds could not be issued without the consent of Congress?

Mr. SHERMAN. If nothing was done to impair the redemption fund, which is a primary thing, I would vote for any measure that will restore it and maintain it. But, sir, Congress ought always to confer the power to borrow money, if necessary. Congress ought to exercise that power when it is necessary on account of the deficiency of the revenues. There was no deficiency of the

mr. PETTIGREW. It seems to me that the Senator does not answer my question. I think Congress has the power probably to borrow money, and to enact laws to do it, but it appears the President assumes the power under some act of Congres the resumption act, he says. The question is, having provided revenue enough to run the Government, would the Senator be willing to vote for a law to repeal that so-called authority in the President to borrow money?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the taking of money from the resumption fund is a great stretch of power, but I am not prepared to say that the President of the United States was not justified in doing it. The fault was here in Congress. We should have provided money enough, without reference to that fund, to have carried on the operations of the Government. When, therefore, the President, in the absence of action by Congress, saw that the $100,000,000 of gold was likely to be exhausted—it ran down at one time to $45,000,000—he did what I think he was justified in doing under the circumstances. He rather "whipped the devil around the the circumstances. He rather "whipped the devil around the stump," I may say, and, invoking the provisions of the resumption act, he did sell bonds. Whether the sale of those bonds was legal or not makes no difference; it was an honest debt to be paid. We had promised to pay the United States notes, and when they came pouring into the Treasury there was nothing for the Secretary of the Treasury to do but to use any money at hand, gold or any other money, to pay off and redeem those notes. But, sir, all this was the result of insufficient revenue, sufficient revenue not having been provided by existing law.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the silver question or the financial question. The Senator from Ohio reprobated such a discussion, and then proceeded to discuss it and to open the door, I suppose, for others to follow. So far as the question as to whether the Dingley bill can become a law is concerned, I do not feel at liberty to discuss it in the method that it was discussed by two Senators, because I do not understand that we have the right to discuss the question whether the President we have the right to discuss the question whether the President will or will not veto a bill. I suppose we can legislate with reference to that point in our minds, but it has been an unwritten rule of the Senate, as it is of all legislative bodies of this character, that no reference shall be made to the action of the Executive.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] asked the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] whether he thinks the President of the United States would sign the bill because of some obstruction that he imagines may be put upon the bill in the shape of a free-silver attachment. The Senator from Nebraska might have replied in as much order as the Senator from New Hampshire have replied in as much order as the Senator from New Hampshire by asking him if he thinks the President of the United States would sign this bill if there was no silver attachment put on it.

Mr. President, the conditions of the Senate were as well known when the bill was brought in as they are to-day. It was as well known then that if every man in this Chamber who had been elected as a Republican had voted for the bill it would still have lacked at least one vote. There was no earthly reason to suppose that any man who had not acted with the Republican party in this Chamber would cast his vote for the bill. It is the barest pretense in the world for anyone to stand here and say he expects or believes that the bill can become a law. Without violating the law I have mentioned, I can say there is certainly an obstruction here which everybody knows existed when the bill was introduced, here which everybody knows existed when the bill was introduced, and it exists whether the silver attachment is on the bill or off. When the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] says that he is in favor of passing the bill he knows it can not be passed, and he does not know it any better to-day than he knew it when the bill was introduced. The bill was not introduced to be passed, and it is not a fit bill to pass. We have heard from the Senator from Ohio again and again that it is not a protective bill. We have heard again and again that it is not a Republican bill, and we have heard from the friends of the bill that it was a makeshift, a temporary-expedient bill.

when the state of opinion as to how it secured power. At some other time I shall probably do so. But it is coming into power; and it is coming into power with a promise and a pledge to the American people that the distressed condition of affairs which has existed for many years shall disappear with Republican success, when it shall be followed by a Republican Administration.

Mr. HOAR. And legislation.

Mr. TELLER. Of course; you have promised that you would legislate. We were told during the campaign that an era of confidence would begin the moment the election was over. If such an era has struck the country, I have failed to observe it.

Mr. President, the Republican party will have a duty to perform to the American people, and they will not perform that duty by talking about the Dingley bill unless they will say to the country that the Dingley bill is the bill they want; that it is exactly try that the Dingley bill is the bill they want; that it is exactly such a bill as will bring prosperity to the country. Every one of them on this side of the Chamber who has ever spoken about the bill has condemned it. If they think that they can pass the bill and go to the country, and then, if prosperity does not come, say, "Well, we did not get the bill we want." that will not answer the demand the people will make upon them. They are to pass a bill such as they want. It is to be a Republican bill from a Republican standpoint. I do not know whether it is to be the McKinley bill or not, but I should assume not, from the fact that in the Republican platform I discovered there was a provision which said, "We are not attached to schedules." When I inquired of some leading Republicans in the country, at a proper time to make such an inquiry, what that meant, they said it meant that they did not mean to promise to reenact the McKinley bill. But the Republican party has said that this country suffers for noth-ing but more tariff; that the financial question does not disturb So the Senator from Nebraska who sits on my right [Mr. Thusston], in an interview published in a morning paper, says that that is not what disturbs the country, it is more tariff, or, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] from his standpoint says, more taxes

Now, Mr. President, this bill will never become a law, and there not a man on this floor who does not know it. Why should the is not a man on this floor who does not know it. Why should the American Senate spend its time with this bill. Why should you disturb the business of the country with talk about passing the bill when you all know that it will not pass and can not become a law-when you know there are obstacles here or elsewhere that are absolutely insurmountable?

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to answer the

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator and while to answer the inquiry he put?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. No Senator upon this side of the Chamber who supported Mr. McKinley commenced talking about this bill. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Allen], who, with the Senator from Colorado, tried to elect Mr. Bryan, got up the bill the other

Mr. TELLER. Mr. TELLER. I am not sure but that we did elect him, too.
Mr. CHANDLER. And the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] got the bill up to-day. The talk about this bill and wasting the time of the Senate has not been upon this side of the Chamber.

Mr. TELLER. This is a Republican measure, and it is now receiving the support of the Republicans on this side, in the way of the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Maine at least.

Mr. CHANDLER. But the Senator was lecturing the Repub-ican side of the Chamber for talking about the bill.

Mr. TELLER. You were talking about it. You were professing that you want to pass it. It would not be offensive if I should say that every one of you know you do not want to pass it. I said last summer that no one in the country would have been so frightened as those on this side of the Chamber would have been if you had supposed it would have become a law. It is ineffective to do what you say is needed to be done in the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me a word, when he makes that imputation upon the whole Republican side of the Chamber, for one, I beg leave to deny it.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; I will except the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Republicans supported the bill in good faith.

As I have stated that I desire its passage, the Senator from Colorado will have to exclude me from the list.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am in the same category.

Mr. FRYE. I am very earnestly in favor of passing it.
Mr. TELLER. I will retract what I said. I will say I did not see how anybody did expect it to pass; and I can not see from my

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to interrupt him:

Mr. TELLER. In a minute. I can not see from my standpoint how anybody could have expected any advantage to come to the Country from its passage, if it had been possible to pass it. Now I will hear what the Senator from New Jersey has to say.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator will relieve the bill from the silver amendments, I am very anxious to vote for it just as it stands.

I believe if we could have passed the bill at the last session it would have been a benefit to the country, by giving the Government the money that was needed instead of borrowing it.

Mr. TELLER. If there are any considerable number of Republicans here who think the bill ought to pass, and that the passage of the bill would bring prosperity, why do they not press the bill; why do they not find out whether they have got the votes to pass the bill; why do they not find out whether it can become a law or not?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator himself knows the obstacle. do not say there are not obstacles to the passage of the bill; but the Senator undertook to impugn the motive of every Senator on the Senator undertook to impugn the motive of every Senator on this side of the Chamber, except his own peculiar associates, by saying we did not desire the bill to become a law.

Mr. TELLER. I repeat, if it is offensive, I repeat, this bill was not introduced to be passed, and it was understood when it was introduced that it could not be passed; that it was introduced for a political advantage and a political purpose. I make that statement, Mr. President, on my own authority.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the Senator's opinion. I can not help his entertaining that opinion.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator has made so grave a charge, I wish he would give a little more in detail some of the reasons for his he would give a little more in detail some of the reasons for his remarkable statement that the bill was never reported with the expectation that it would be passed. Does the Senator bear in mind that it was a measure framed by the House of Representa-tives with deliberation, with the avowed purpose of being a temporary measure to raise revenue for a Democratic Administration, debated and passed there, and sent to this body; and then the Republicans of this body, almost united, agreed to endeavor to pass it without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i" as the other branch of the Government had sent it to us?

For one I wish to say in all sincerity, and as sincerely as the Senator from Colorado can say anything (and he is a sincere man), that it never occurred to me that we were not to pass the bill in honest fashion for an honest purpose, if we could do it. I believe, with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Sewell], that it would have been a benefit and it would have helped the country could we have passed it at the last session. We could not and did not. I agree fully with my colleague that if we could pass it to-day just as it is it would be a beneficent measure. It would give revenue at once, or almost at once. It would help the country in the feeling that there would be no more sales of bonds to run the Government.

So far as I am concerned, the Senater is wrong in saying that there was anything underneath or underlying or furtive in the attempt to pass this bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I did not give way to the Senater of the senater of tor to make a speech.

Mr. HALE. I am obliged to the Senator, who is always very courteous

Mr. TELLER. The bill was introduced in the other House with great haste, if I may speak of what occurred in another body. It practically came in without the deliberation of a committee, it having been considered for a few hours only, as everybody knows. When the President sent his message here about the finances of the country it had no reference whatever to the revenue. When he had declared in his message that he needed no more revenue, when the Secretary of the Treasury had declared in his report that he needed no more revenue, the committee of the House, with great haste, with hot haste, reported a bill which did not pass with deliberation. It passed as no other tariff bill ever passed in the history of this country—passed with a few hours of discussion, only a few favored members of that body being able to say a word on it. came here as no other bill ever came to this Senate; it came when everybody knew there was a decided majority in the Senate against a tariff bill. It came here, if I may be allowed to say so, when it was known that there was not even the remotest possibility on the face of the earth that it ever could become a law, and it was known that before it could become a law one of the principal officials of this country would have to stultify himself to a degree that there was no reason to suppose he would.

That is the reason I say the bill was not expected to become a law. I say it was not expected to become a law because it does not stand to reason that Republican Senators knew so little of public affairs as to suppose that from the other side of the Chamber they could get a vote for a measure which was infinitely more offensive than measures which had called down the denunciation of many a Senator and of the President of the United States himself. They knew the President of the United States had declared that the law which did pass was infamous because of the high tariff it put upon many products, and upon the same products they put 15 per cent more. They had no reason, in the nature of things, to suppose that they could get a vote from the other side of the Chamber. I assert here that no Senator will rise in this Chamber and state that he attempted to get a vote from the other side of the Chamber. While it was said, with an indefiniteness that was sometimes quite astonishing, that there were hopes that if it passed the two Houses of Congress it might become a law, I venture to say that no Senator will say here that he dickered with the Chief Executive as to whether he would veto or sign the bill.

the Chief Executive as to whether he would veto or sign the bill. I repeat, that everything which touches and surrounds this bill shows that it was a political movement, and only a political movement. It was a political movement to distract the attention of the American people from the financial question, and the Republican party went into the campaign of this year making an effort to withdraw public attention from the financial question and center it upon the tariff question. They would have had a good chance, if the bill could have passed the Senate and been vetoed by the President, to have made an issue. They would have had a good the President, to have made an issue. They would have had a good chance if it had been met here by a consolidated Democratic and Populist vote and defeated; but it was not. Men who were as Populist vote and defeated; but it was not. Men who were as much in favor of protection as any man sitting on this side of the Chamber, realizing the purpose for which the bill was introduced and pressed, believing that it was not intended to become a law, believing that it could not become a law, believing that it was for an evil purpose—evil, and for nothing else—joined with the opposition on the other side in declining to take it up. It has been brought before the Senate at this session by a great big vote. Was there any sentiment among the Republicans to press it to a vote? there any sentiment among the Republicans to press it to a vote? If there was, the reading of the debate—I was not here—does not indicate it.

Mr. President, everybody knows that this bill can not pass; everybody knows it will not become a law; everybody knows that if you are to have a tariff bill you will have to wait until after the 4th of March, and you will have to wait until the Republican ath of March, and you will have to wait until the Republican party comes into power. Everybody knows that if the Republican party would be fair and frank and say, "We can not pass this bill," or if they would say what most of them know, that this bill will not grant the tariff they have promised, the people of the United States would wait with patience until that party comes into power and has the opportunity of passing a tariff bill. If into power and has the opportunity of passing a tariff bill. If they pass this bill and it should become a law, they must pass another in the early months of next spring. Not a Senator on this floor on this side will say that, in his judgment, this is the bill that the Republican party have promised the country. Not a Senator here will say that this is the bill which will restore prosperity to the business of this country. They expect a different kind of bill from this, and if any prosperity comes from a tariff bill it will be from a bill different from this.

Mr. President, the business of this country is disturbed by Mr. President, the business of this country is disturbed by these continual agitations of the tariff question more so than by the agitation of the silver question; and yet we have the agitation the agitation of the silver question; and yet we have the agitation all the time going on, because there is not quite frankness enough to say, what everybody knows, that the bill can not become a law. When the change shall have occurred, it will be the duty, in my judgment, of the Republican party, if they keep their pledges to the people, to have an early session—and it can not be too soon after the incoming Administration—and then to formulate a law which will be in line with what is called Republican sentiment and Republican principle. When they have put that before Congress. which will be in line with what is called Republican sentiment and Republican principle. When they have put that before Congress, if they fail to pass it, they will be in some degree at least absolved from their promise; but they never will be absolved from it until they have tried it; they will never know whether they can pass it or not until they have tried it. If you can pass any bill now, why not pass a bill which will accomplish what you propose? If you can pass this bill, you can pass another and a better bill.

Mr. President, I did not mean to say so much when I rose. I meant to say a word or two about the wool question, and I want meant to say a word or two about the wool question, and I want to say a word or two about it now.

The price of wool has gone down in this country, and it went down in spite of the tariff. It went down because everything else went down. It did not go down more than did other products of the farm. We have had free trade in wool, and it still continues to go down. I was myself of the impression that it had gone lower then it did under the McKinley Act. than it did under the McKinley Act. I may be mistaken about that, because I see that it is here disputed, and I have not looked It did not go down to the extent that it did because of the lack of tariff. It went down because the conditions of the country are putting everything down; because everything which the farmer raises is lower now than it was three years ago. It went down raises is lower now than it was three years ago. It went down because there had sprung up a competition in wool which this country had never been called upon to meet before. Within the last four or five years there has been built up an Asiatic trade in wool. Twenty-five million pounds a year have been coming to us, and coming more than at that rate this year. When the year shall close you will find it more than 25,000,000 pounds. It began four or five years ago with the importation of a million pounds of Chinese wool. We have now got 25,000,000 or 26,000,000 pounds a year, a growing trade, a trade which threatens the wool interests of this country, whether with or without a tariff. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] says the woolgrowers could not sell their wool on the Pacific Coast for more than 5 or 6 cents, I think.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. They could not sell it for 5 cents.
Mr. TELLER. They could not sell it for 5 cents; but 25,000,000 or 26,000,000 pounds of Chinese wool were sold on the Pacific Coast at a price at which the Chinaman is satisfied to continue his at a price at which the Chinaman is satisfied to continue his export, which is increasing year by year, more this year than last year, and more last year than the year before. How does he do it, Mr. President? The Chinaman is on a silver basis. He brings his wool here, and last year he sold it in San Francisco on an average of 8 cents a pound and bought exchange on China, which gave him 15½ cents of Chinese money for it when he got home, which is as potent in purchasing labor or anything else in China as it was thirty years ago. While the American farmer sold his wool for 8 cents, the Chinaman sold his for 15½ cents. Having the great Pacific Sea, which brings all kinds of goods from Asia to the Pacific Coast, he can sell his goods for less than an American factor of the control of t can farmer who has to transport his goods 250 miles by rail can can farmer who has to transport his goods 250 miles by rail can sell his for. No American farmer can compete with the great Chinese woolgrowers even in the interior of China. That is one thing which is putting down the price of wool; that is one thing which threatens it infinitely more than the lack of a tariff.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] repeats what he has said again and again, and I will challenge it, because I always feel that I should do so. He says that we have issued bonds because we had a deficiency in revenue. The President of the United States declared in his official communication to us that at the time he issued those honds there was no occasion for money. at the time he issued those bonds there was no occasion for money to carry on the Government; that he had enough of it in the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury made the same declaration, and an examination of the reports will show that when the bonds were issued, in one instance at least, there was more free bonds were issued, in one instance at least, there was more free money in the Treasury for the use of the Government than there is to-day. If there had been revenue tenfold, unless the revenue came in the shape of gold, in which it did not come and in which it will not come, the President of the United States, if he maintained the gold standard, was compelled to issue bonds to buy gold, and if you continue the present system of finance you must continue to buy gold whenever the gold shall run below what the President may think is the danger line. No amount of revenue will help you.

There is another question which might be considered with this bill, and that is, Will this bill produce more revenue? It is very doubtful whether under this bill, with its high rates, you will be a set of well and the set of well have as much revenue as you have to-day. I do not find fault with it because it keeps out imports; I am not finding fault with with it because it keeps out imports; I am not finding fault with it; but if you are legislating for revenue the question is whether, if you put on a high tariff in addition to a tariff reasonable now in many respects, you will get more revenue or will get less. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] said here to-day, as I understood him, that the tariff on iron was satisfactory; at least if he has not said so now it was so stated when the Wilson bill was under consideration. He said then that the tariff upon cotton goods was the most scientific schedule which had ever been anated and entirely satisfactory to the manufacturers of cotton enacted, and entirely satisfactory to the manufacturers of cotton.

Mr. HOAR. With some exceptions.
Mr. TELLER. No exception was made then, whatever may have been found in practice. It was believed when the Wilson bill passed that the manufacturers of woolen goods had been amply taken care of. Their representatives on this floor were amply taken care of. Their representatives on this floor were satisfied with that bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. TELLER. No, I am not.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know any of their representatives on this floor.

Mr. TELLER. I will admit that the woolen goods schedule was not sufficient, because when you get $87,000,000 of importations of woolen goods in nine months or in a year, that is more, in my judgment, than the American people ought to submit to.

Why did we get that great amount of woolen goods? We got it because the condition of Europe was such that manufacturers of woolen goods in that country were compelled to unload upon us at any price they could get. Every man who has kept in touch with the affairs of Europe knows that woolen goods were never before so low in other countries, and that they were never before so low in this country. It would astonish men who are not famil-iar with this matter to take the schedules of the importations of woolen goods and see the price at which they are brought here and the price at whi h they can be and are sold. It was the distress in Europe which brought a great avalanche of woolen goods here. If I were to revise the tariff, I would revise it, not by putting 15 per cent more duty upon iron and steel, which have enough now; not by putting 15 per cent more upon cotton and 15 per cent more upon wool, but I would put enough duty upon wool to give the American wool manufacturer practically the American marthe American wool manufacturer practically the American market; not so much, however, that he may be able to demand that the American consumer shall pay an inordinate sum.

Has this Dingley bill been properly considered? Does it consult the interest of each manufacturing industry in the country when it gives on one grade of carpets 2½ per cent more than the McKinley law gave, and gives 15 per cent more upon what everybody admits, I believe, is a satisfactory tariff upon iron and steel, and only 15 per cent upon the woolen schedule, when everybody, I think, who has examined it and who believes in tariff at all will assert that more than 15 per cent is needed if anything at all is needed.

I do not intend to discuss the tariff question. I only want to say in justice to myself that if I had believed that this bill when it was before the Senate was a bill which would have brought relief to the suffering industries of the country, I should have voted for it.

voted for it.

Mr. President, I want prosperity in the United States. I believe it can be brought to our people by a decent financial system; I do not believe it can be brought in any other way; but if you can show me any other method which will stand the test of logic and reason, I will support it with you. I do not say that I will support any tariff bill that you introduce, because I do not believe tariff is the remedy; on that I reserve the right when the time comes to do as my judgment shall dictate; but if you will show me any system that will convince my judgment that prosperity will come from its adoption, I am not so attached to the silver question or the money question that I would not welcome prosperity tion or the money question that I would not welcome prosperity from any other source or in any other direction. If the country can be made prosperous by other legislation, the section of the country which I in part represent will come in for its share of that prosperity. I am not myself legislating for any single section. My interest extends to all the people and to every portion of the

At some time when I shall have the opportunity I mean to discuss this question in a different way. I trust I may discuss it in temperance, but I mean to discuss not only this question, but to discuss the great questions which were presented in the late campaign. I want to say here that I mean then to resent for myself and the 6,000,000 men who voted with me the repeated assertions made here and elsewhere that we were less patriotic or less honest than the men who voted for our opponents.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Hill in the chair). Debate on the immigration bill is still in order.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, as one Senator on this side of the Chamber who has uniformly voted against the consideration of the Dingley bill both at the last session and at the present, I desire to say, in reply to the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman], that I believed then, as was so well expressed by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], that this bill at that time was introduced in the face of a Presidential election at that time was introduced in the race of a Presidential election for a purely political purpose; that the knowledge was within the reach of every Senator and every Member of the other House that this body as constituted at that time and as now constituted was opposed to the passage of such a bill; that the bill did not meet the conditions of the Treasury, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, and that the bill in every section of it was unequal and unjust, except possibly in that portion relating to pottery and to the woolen schedule.

The Presidential election has passed. The combinations of men and interests made in that campaign are now matters of history. To the credit of the Republican party be it said that at no time, not even in the critical hours of that campaign, did they ever lower their standard or depart from their declaration that when they came into power they would have a high protective tariff; and the men who followed their banner and who aided them in that contest were bound to accept the result, as I am bound, now that they have the majority.

I remember full well that when a distinguished friend of mine appealed to your party to center the contest upon a single issue, the offer was declined through an ex-President of the United States, who had a right to speak for his party, who said they were delighted to have the support of all who would come to them to save the honor of the Government and to prevent repudiation, but that they would adopt a protective tariff when they came into That the country understands. You will come into power power. That the cou on the 4th of March.

It matters not, Mr. President, who is responsible now for the deficiency in the Treasury. The Senator from Ohio and I have debated that question before, and I think I have, at least satisfacdebated that question before, and I think I have, at least satisfactorily to myself, shown that the deficiency began with the McKinley law and has continued under the Wilson law. But there is the condition, and now is your responsibility. You can not meet it at this session of Congress. You have not the power in this body to pass such a monstrosity as the Dingley bill which is before the Senate. You have not the time nor the inclination to remodel that it is a Remyllicen program. There is neither the time bill and make it a Republican measure. There is neither the time nor the inclination to do it, and it is trifling with the business interests of the country, in my judgment, to hold out the hope by continuous debate here at this session that some action will be taken when everybody knows that action is impossible.

You will come into the possession of all branches of the Government, including this body, after the 4th of March, and in my best judgment you will have a clear, safe majority for a protective tariff when you assemble on the 4th day of March. For one, feeling as I do and knowing as I do the business conditions of the people whom we all represent and whom we all desire to relieve, people whom we all represent and whom we all desire to reneve, when you come to the discussion of that matter those of us who will be here on this side will puncture your bill and expose its enormities or its deficiencies, presenting our views, and presenting them fully (as I hope debate will always be full in the Senate), but with no desire to obstruct you unnecessarily in the passage of your party measure. The responsibility will be with you. If the passage of that measure will bring prosperity, if it will give additional zest to the manufacturers, to the transportation companies, and to the farmers, so be it; I shall rejoice with you; but let it be stall and complete measure such as you desire the Government. and to the lames, so be it, i shah rejoice with John State and complete measure, such as you desire the Government shall be administered under, and you will have to take that responsibility only after full and fair discussion in this body.

Mr. HALE. Do I understand the Senator to express here the undoubted conviction that the House bill, the Dingley bill, so called, can not be passed at this session?

Mr. GORMAN. I say without the slightest hesitation that if the Senator from Maine will join me in the frank statement that he ought to make, he and I both know that it is utterly impossible to pass that bill at this short session.

Mr. HALE. Now, let me say to the Senator, while I think it would be well to pass the bill, and I am in favor of passing it, and will you to take it up and pass it at any time, the statements which have been made here to-day by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], who certainly represents a considerable element upon this side of the Chamber, and the statement made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Gorman], who largely represents the other side of the Chamber, that it is impossible to pass the House bill, show to me how difficult it will be to pass it. I hope in this view the Senate and the country will take notice of the difficulties under which we are situate here, for with the combination, or with those thinking with the Senator from Maryland on that side of the Chamber and those thinking with the Senator from Colorado on this side, voting against the passage of the Dingley bill, it is clearly impossible to pass it.

I do agree with the Senator that it will be the business of the Republican party at an early session—and the earlier the better, as the Senator from Colorado says—to take up this whole subject and mature a protective measure, moderate in its terms, but sufficient to give revenue to the Government and properly protect American industries, and I am very glad of his assurance that that will not be obstructed unduly or in any way as mere obstruc-

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me?
Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.
Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the Senator from Maine that I spoke for no one but myself. When I spoke of the impossibility of passing the Dingley bill I bore in mind all the time the fact that if every man who was elected as a Republican and who ever sat on this side of the Chamber as a Republican voted for the bill it still could not pass.

Mr. GORMAN. I answered the Senator from Maine frankly in stating my opinion as to the possibility of passing the bill. I do not think he has exhibited his usual frankness in his comments upon that answer. But I should like to have from him, a Senator of great experience in this body and knowledge of its members, an opinion as to whether at any time, from the day the bill was received in this body from the House of Representatives until now, there has been a majority in favor of it.

Mr. HALE. I did not, until very late in the consideration at the last session, give up the idea that it might be passed here. I did not go into the question beyond that, and I do not think the question ought to be discussed here as to what the Executive would do with it.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not speak of the Executive. I make no reference to him.

Mr. HALE. I thought it a good measure. The Senator did not. I believe now it was a good measure. I did not intend in any way to be irksome to the Senator in commenting upon his attitude, but to thank him for his frankness. The country will listen to him as it will listen to few Senators here, and when he was foreshadowing, as he had a clear right to do (I think it was a patriotic service that he did), the difficulties in passing the Ding-ley bill at this session he was giving me light and information upon the situation. I am glad that he did it, and the country will thank him for doing it.

Mr. GORMAN. If I have succeeded in enlightening the Senator from Maine upon the condition in this Chamber and the possibility of passing a bill, I confess I have accomplished a feat that I never expected to see accomplished in this body.

Mr. President, I do not care about the mere finesse of this mat-Mr. President, I do not care about the mere innesse of this matter. There is no politics in it as it stands now. I do not believe that the statements of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] or of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], or both of them, or of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], can affect the political issue in the United States. The great contest is over. It has become history. You have succeeded. I will not say how I think you have succeeded, but you have succeeded, and you and your party have the responsibility of the Government. You can your party nave the responsibility of the Government. You can not, and you know you can not, accomplish anything substantial at the present session of Congress. But if you had the power to pass the Dingley bill just as it came from the other House, you could not afford to permit the tariff to rest on the Dingley bill during the incoming Administration. Your Executive would be compelled to call an extra session of Congress, or you would be obliged at the next regular session to take up the question of the tariff and upturn every business interest in the United States. The Republican party can not afford to do that. No next could tariff and upturn every business interest in the United States.

The Republican party can not afford to do that. No party could afford to do it. You have no idea of doing it. In the interest of the business of the country, we have no idea of permitting you to do it. Now, the country might as well understand it.

Mr. HALE. At the present session?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; at this session.

Mr. HALE. That is very ample and sufficient.

Mr. ALLEN. It is understood, then, that the Dingley bill is dead?

dead?

Mr. GORMAN. I know it is ample so far as concerns my statement; but I think the Senators on the other side, as the Senator from Colorado has frankly stated it, ought to admit it and stop this discussion, and prevent our constituents, who are interested in this question, from holding meetings and conventions, as they are doing in the great cities of the Union, and coming to Washington almost daily, or telegraphing Senators about the passage of this bill, where they are interested in some particular item in it, Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.
Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Maryland is quite right. We Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Maryland is quite right. We have never had the votes on this side of the Chamber to pass the Dingley bill, and we have less now than we ever had before.

Mr. TELLER. That is a frank statement.

Mr. PLATT. It is true.

Mr. GORMAN. I have only one word to say further, and that is in reply to the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I do not intend to thrash over old straw as to who is responsible for the deficiency in the revenues. I wish to state for myself, as I have said heretofore on all occasions when we were considering revenue measures, that I agree that the party which would deliberately frame a revenue measure that did not provide sufficient revenue to meet the current expenses of the Government ought to go out of power; and whenever we have considered such a measure in this body I have always voted for such rates of duty and such a levy upon domestic articles as in my judgment would produce sufficient revenue, with a fair surplus to be kept in the Treasury. But the conditions since 1890, when the McKinley bill was passed, have been such, with falling markets, with depression in all keep these findators. was passed, have been such, with falling markets, with depression in all branches of industry, with the consumers unable to purchase the ordinary amount of commodities, that the estimates of the Treasury Department in the framing of the McKinley bill and the last bill were at fault. That, together with the decision of the Supreme Court, have left a deficiency in the Treasury every year. During the latter part of the Harrison Administration the balance in the book account could be made only $2,000,000, and the fact of it was that we were then $50,000,000 short. But that has all passed

The President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury say that out of the proceeds of the sales of bonds, sold, as they claimed at the time, for the purchase of gold to meet the run made upon the Treasury, there is now in the Treasury $125,000,000 or $126,000,000. It will be more than ample for the present fiscal year to meet the deficiencies, whatever they may be, and for the next fiscal year. So, from the present laws and the proceeds of the sales of bonds the Republican party will have all the money that will be necessary to conduct the affairs of the Government until 1898 without any further increase of revenue. In the meantime I take it you will prepare your bill, and you will see to it that there will be a larger revenue than we have now. How you will reach that conclusion is a matter for your own consider Treasury say that out of the proceeds of the sales of bonds, sold, that there will be a larger revenue than we have now. How you will reach that conclusion is a matter for your own consideration, but I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that his party can not be embarrassed by the failure to have legislation at the present session of Congress. There will be no further necessity for the sale of a single bond to meet the payments that may be due this year and the next. You will have ample time to meet them in the ordinary way and to dispose of this matter as the Republican party may desire.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not speak, as a matter of course, for my associates here as a general thing, but I am inclined to think, and I believe that it is their opinion, that in view of the statements which have been made from the other side of the Chamber that the Dingley bill can not pass, we ought not to waste any more time upon it. So far as I am concerned, I am not disposed, and I think the great majority on this side, without having had any opportunity to consult each other, are not disposed to attempt the impossible in order to pass the Dingley bill.

Mr. QUAY. The funeral services on the Dingley bill having been concluded, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

Mr. CHILTON. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment? HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, December 16, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BATTLE SHIP TEXAS.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, it has been charged in the public prints, and particularly in the New York Journal, that the construction of the battle ship Texas was grossly mismanaged. I think this House and the country ought to know the truth about it; and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that the resolution had better go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and let that committee make a preliminary inquiry.

Mr. BAILEY. This is a direction to the committee to make the inquiry.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think the resolution had better be referred in the first instance. The committee may want to make it broader.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman permit the resolution to be

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection to the reading. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Committee on Naval Affairs is hereby instructed to investigate the facts and circumstances connected with the construction of the battle ship Texas, and report the same to this House as early as practicable.

Resolved further, That for the purpose of this investigation the said Committee on Naval Affairs is hereby authorized to sit at such time and places as it may determine, and is empowered to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to take testimony, and to appoint a subcommittee, which subcommittee, if appointed, shall have the same powers as the full committee.

Resolved further, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives is hereby directed to attend the sessions of the Committee on Naval Affairs, or the subcommittee appointed to conduct this investigation, in person, or by deputy, to serve such process as may be issued and to execute the orders of the committee.

Resolved, That the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House to defray the expenses of this investigation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think the resolution had better be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and let them make a preliminary examination of the matter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 209) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1896, on the 18th day of said

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. 2306) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes, relative to copyrights; when the Speaker signed the same.

OWNERS OF BRIG TALLY-HO.

Mr. BARRETT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 337) to refer the claim of the owners of the brig Tally-Ho to the Court of Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the legal owners of the brig Tally-Ho, her cargo and freight, and of personal effects on board her, alleged to have been sunk by a collision with the United States steam vessel of war Pinta on or about the 3d day of October, 1883, be referred to the Court of Claims, to hear and determine the same to judgment, notwithstanding the lapse of time, with right of appeal as in other cases.

Whereas the legal owners of said brig, cargo, freight, and personal effects, or some of them, did, on the 29th day of July, 1884, file in said Court of Claims, in the case referred to said court by the Seretary of the Navy, and then numbered on the docket of said court Departmental Case No. 16, their petition setting forth their losses by said collision: and whereas evidence has been taken upon said petition, both by said petitioners and by the United States, and said evidence has been filed in said court; the claim above referred to said court may be heard and determined by said court upon said petition already filed therein; and the said evidence already taken and filed by either party upon said petition may be used and referred to in said hearing and determination of said claim in all respects as if originally taken and filed for the purposes of the hearing and determination thereof provided for by this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to hear the report of the commit-

The report (by Mr. WATSON) was read, as follows:

The committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2578) entitled "A bill to refer the claim of the owners of the brig Tally-Ho to the Court of Claims," have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

The grounds for such reference of the claim to the Court of Claims are so clearly stated in the annexed House report (119) of the first session of the Fifty-first Congress that the committee adopt it and recommend favorable action on the bill, in accordance with its suggestions.

As the general jurisdiction of the Court of Claims does not cover cases of marine torts, Congress has heretofore, in many cases similar to that of the Tally-Ho, given jurisdiction to said Court of Claims. See the cases of the schooner Ada A. Andrews (18 Stat. L., p. 201), the schooner Flight (19 Stat. L., p. 503), the schooner Don Pedro (20 Stat. L., p. 483), the towboat Future City (28 Stat. L., p. 219).

The bill has the merit of enabling the rights of the United States and the citizens affected to be finally determined by the Supreme Court, if said parties desire to appeal to said court from the judgment of the Court of Claims.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendment: "With the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," added to the end of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know from the gentleman from Massachusetts how much money is involved in this claim?

Mr. BARRETT. The amount is very small-only a few thousand dollars

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, how much? The trouble is that the merits of this case are not presented in the report at all. From the reading of the report members can not tell whether this is a case that should be considered by this House or one that should a case that should be considered by this House or one that should go to the courts. My observation has been that this House does not always agree with the conclusions of the Court of Claims; yet the findings of that court are always urged by applicants as conclusive upon this House. Now, I think that before we pass a bill which will modify the laws that now bar this claim and will permit the party to go to the Court of Claims and get judgment, we ought to know something about the merits of the case.

Mr. BARRETT. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] had taken the trouble to read the report which I laid before him he would have found that the facts are there fully set forth. The present committee simply adopted the report of the Fifty-first Congress. The facts in brief are these: The Tally-Ho was proceeding on the high seas off the coast of Massachusetts when, without any negligence on the part of her officers or crew, she was run down by a United States vessel of war, the Pinia. The officers of that United States vessel were summoned before a naval officers of that United States vessel were summoned before a naval court and found guilty of gross negligence. The Secretary of the Navy forwarded this claim to the Court of Claims, as a matter of course, under the Bowman Act. The Court of Claims decided, upon a technicality, after the evidence had all been prepared, that could not consider this matter, as the claim arose out of a maritime collision.

In seven previous cases of exactly similar nature claims of this sort have been sent by Congress to the Court of Claims. In this case the precedent is being exactly followed. The testimony has all been prepared and submitted to the court. There is no extra expense involved on either side in allowing this adjudication to be continued. There is not, as the gentleman from Illinois supposes, any new principle involved here, for Congress has already, in seven cases cited in the report as read by the Clerk, allowed similar claims to be sent to the Court of Claims. This matter has been favorably reported upon by at least two committees of this House; the bill has passed the Senate, and now awaits the favorable action of this body.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me a question?
Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does not this bill involve some fifteen or twenty thousand dollars?
Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, the papers in the claim are in the hands of the Committee on Claims. I have not in mind the exact amount asked for. The gentleman who was directed by that committee to make the report left the city last night for his home in Indiana. As I introduced this bill, I have, after consultation with him called it up to day nome in Indiana. As I introduced this bill, I have, after consultation with him, called it up to-day.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think the amount involved is so large as is suggested by the gentleman from New York; but if it were fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, the fact is perfectly incontestable that in previous cases of this sort the question has been sent to the Court of Claims. The Secretary of the Navy by his own order made that disposition of this case when it first came before him.

Mr. McMillin. Mr. BARRETT. Mr. McMillin. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.
Mr. McMILLIN. I could not hear a portion of the bill as distinctly as I wished, and I do not understand whether this bill limits the Government to the evidence now on file in connection mith the Government to the evidence now on hie in connection with this claim.

Mr. BARRETT. It does not.

Mr. McMILLIN. I notice the bill provides that all the evidence heretofore taken may be used. What I was going to suggest—

Mr. BARRETT. The evidence was all presented before this technical point was encountered. The simple provision of the bill is that the evidence so taken may be used. the evidence so taken may be used.

Mr. McMILLIN. An opinion was simply sought by the Department, as I understand the gentleman. But the evidence on which to base a final judgment would probably be more strenuous. Mr. BARRETT. Any testimony bearing upon the question can be introduced under this bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me ask the gentleman why, if this is such a clear case, it should go to the Court of Claims at all? Why not introduce it and have it properly discussed and disposed of here? With an indefinite amount, such as this bill covers, it seems to me that we ought to be very careful in granting unanimous consent for its consideration and passage.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker—

reply to his observation?

Mr. HOPKINS. I should not have made the observation if I had not wanted enlightenment from the gentleman from Massa-

Mr. BARRETT. Then the simple reason why this is referred to the Court of Claims is because in every previous case of this sort Congress has sent the claim there. Also, because the court was established to deal with such questions and because the Secretary of the Navy has already sent it there as a matter of course, and because all of the evidence is there on file; and the bill only provides that this little technicality which steading in the reason.

and because all of the evidence is there on file; and the bill only provides that this little technicality which stands in the way shall be set aside so as to enable the case to be disposed of judicially. Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to call his attention to the fact that the language of the bill seems to require a judgment of the court to be rendered "on the evidence now on file?" It does not provide, with all due deference to him, for taking any new evidence, as I understand the language of the bill.

I wish to call attention to the fact.

I wish to call attention to the further fact that the bill authorizes a judgment to be rendered by the court. The issue does not izes a judgment to be rendered by the court. The issue does not go to the court, under the provisions of the Bowman Act, to find the facts in the case, but it authorizes the court to render a judgment which shall be final and conclusive.

Mr. BARRETT. It does not technically go to the court under the provisions of the Bowman Act, because that court has already decided that it has no jurisdiction in maritime cases such as this. It is simply a technicality which Congress has already decided to settle by referring such cases to the Court of Claims in seven cases, according to a line of precedents to which I have already referred.

according to a line of precedents to which I have already referred.

Mr. BRUMM. I understand that this bill has not been reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BARRETT. I understand that it has. I have the report at hand.

at hand.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman be kind enough to allow me to see the report?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly. I hand the gentleman the report,
No. 388 of the present Congress, from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentleman that the bill ought to be amended so as to authorize the filing of additional evidence

Mr. BARRETT. There is no objection to that if the gentleman wishes to make the amendment. These people are willing to have all of the evidence that can be presented submitted in connection

Mr. DOCKERY. I have not prepared an amendment, but it seems to me that we ought to have all the light possible upon the merits of the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that practically there can be no new evidence filed in the case, as Mr. BOUTELLE. everything pertaining to it has been on file for a number of years past. The bill has simply been held up Congress after Congress by technical informalities, such as failure to secure concurrent action upon it in the same Congress, and so on. It is an entirely unobjectionable case, and I hope there will be no objection to its

of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed. On motion of Mr. BARRETT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9473) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

W. H. WADE.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House bill No. 9593, for the relief of William H. Wade, late captain and acting regimental quartermaster Thirty-first Ohio Volunteers, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to credit the account of W.H. Wade, on the books of the Department, as captain and acting regimental quartermaster of the Thirty-first Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, with the sum of $420.15, received by him as such captain and acting regimental quartermaster and disbursed by him to extra-duty men for extra duty as of date the 13th day of September, A.D. 1862, and transmit to said W.H. Wade a receipt in full of all demands against him on said account; and that he cause all proceedings in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri against said W.H. Wade to be dismissed and satisfaction entered on the records of said court of any judgment therein rendered against him as such captain and acting regimental quartermaster on account of said receipt and disbursement of funds, of principal, interest, and costs of suit.

of the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Let me ask the gentleman from Missouri if it is not possible that the judgment entered against this man might not involve a larger amount than the amount than the amount that the same than the same th named here? It seems that the two matters involved in the bill are not necessarily connected. The first part authorizes a credit of $420 and the second part requires that all proceedings in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri shall be dismissed and satisfaction entered on the records of the court.

Mr. TRACEY. There can be no such conflict. The judgment referred to is for the amount of the principal, with interest up to the time that it was rendered.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would suggest to the gentleman that he had better strike out the latter provision, relating to the cancellation of the judgment. That will follow necessarily on the adoption of the former provision of the bill.

Mr. TRACEY. I have no objection to striking out the latter part of the bill if it is deemed necessary.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That ought to be done, it seems to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the latter part of the bill, beginning with the word "and," in line 13, down to the close of the bill, as follows:

And that he cause all proceedings in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri against said W. H. Wade to be dismissed and satisfaction entered on the records of said court of any judgment therein rendered against him as such captain and acting regimental quartermaster on account of said receipt and disbursement of funds, of principal, interest, and costs of suit.

Mr. TRACEY. What objection is there to allowing that to

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. For the reason that there is a credit of four hundred and some odd dollars to be given to him, and in the second place you provide for a cancellation of the judgment. Now non constat that the judgment is for the same amount.

Mr. TRACEY. The judgment is for that amount, as I have stated, with interest stated, with interest.

I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the proposed amendment, that if the cancellation of judgment follows as a legal result the giving of the credit for $420.15, I can see no objection to its remaining in the bill as it is. I can not perceive, therefore, the merits of the amendment, if that follows as a legal result.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The amendment is desirable, Mr. Speaker, because the judgment may be for some other cause of action.

of action.

Mr. TRACEY. There is no other.
Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, we do not know anything about that. Of course I do not question the gentleman's statement

Mr. TRACEY. There is absolutely no other. It is simply on the $420.15, with the interest computed at 6 per cent since the date of payment and the cost of suit. That is what the judgment is for, and that is the reason why I ask the cancellation of the judgment.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The gentleman consented to my amendment. If it is not accepted, I object. The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the mes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Then I object, Mr. Speaker.

The agreement was that the amendment should be accepted.

Mr. TRACEY. There was no agreement further than this, that

Istated

The SPEAKER. These matters must be conducted in entire good faith, without any mistakes, and, as perhaps there was a mistake, the Chair will regard the matter as open for objection. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I object.

W. E. JUDKINS, EXECUTOR OF LEWIS M'KENZIE.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4114) for the relief of W. E. Judkins, executor of Lewis McKenzie.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W.E. Judkins, executor of Lewis McKenzie, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,098.05, it being the amount expended by him in the contested election cases in the Forty-first and Forty-second Congresses from the Seventh district of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before consent is given, I should like to hear some explanation of this. It appears to be an old matter, going back a long time.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to state in this connection that Mr. McKenzie was the Republican candidate for Congress. He contested the Democratic candidate and was seated. Then he had another contest in which he did not succeed. After that Mr. McKenzie died. His executor was Mr. Judkins, a preacher. I think every Claims Committee of this House since that time has reported this Claims Committee of this House since that time has reported this bill favorably; but there has been nobody who had interest enough to prosecute it, and it has died the usual death on the Calendar. Now, all the vouchers are on file, showing this amount of money expended and never repaid. I am interested in this, not because the parties live in my district, but because Mr. Judkins, who married Mr. McKenzie's daughter, is chaplain of the Randolph-Macon College, where I went to school, and is one of the ablest preachers in Virginia. I know that this amount of money was expended, as shown by the report of the committee and the vouchers on file as shown by the report of the committee and the vouchers on file, and it has never been repaid simply for the reason that there was nobody here who was sufficiently interested in the claim to secure its passage in Congress, and it died on the Calendar. The report of the committee, which is very short, will verify all these facts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, let the report be read. I should like to ask if this comes from either Elections Committee of the House or is it from the Committee on Claims?

Mr. SWANSON. It comes from the Committee on Claims. At that time the Committee on Elections did not have cognizance, I that time the Committee on Elections did not have cognizance, I think, of the amount which was to be certified. It is only since the statute was passed limiting the expenditure to $2,000 that the Committee on Elections has had jurisdiction; but I should like to state to the gentleman further that the Committee on Elections have decided that it is only cases before the committee in a particular Congress that they can take cognizance of. Any claim arising in a case in which they did not act the committee refuse to take cognizance of. The vouchers showing the expenditures in this case are all on file with the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think it would be better to let this go over until there can be some examination. This seems to be a claim twenty-five years old, and we should like to know what the facts about it are. I think it should lie over until another day.

Mr. SWANSON. The report is very short.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest that it be sent to Committee on Elections No. 1. We will give them jurisdiction to examine into the matter. I have no objection to its going to Elections Committee No. 1.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill

Mr. SWANSON. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, that it be sent to Elections Committee No. 1, to make an examination and report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that disposition? There was no objection.

BRIG TALLY-HO.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Barrett] desires to correct an error in the passage of a bill that was presented by him (S. 337) to refer the claim of the owners of the brig Tally-Ho to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I find that the Committee on Claims recommended the adoption of an amendment adding to the bill S. 337 the words:

With the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered as incorporated in the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Bar-

RETT] asks unanimous consent that the amendment proposed by the House committee be added to the Senate bill as an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the amendment been read?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It provides for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The bill has already been passed upon by the House, and by an error this amendment was omitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

NANCY G. ALLABACH-VETO MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach, with a veto message of the Presi-

[For text of veto message see Senate proceedings of December 15.]

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the bill and accompanying veto message to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The motion was agreed to.

STRATTON H. BENSCOTER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3771) for the relief of Stratton H. Benscoter, with Senate amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendments. It is simply a different way of expressing the same thing as the House did in passing the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendments and to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to; and the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9274) to amend an act making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and to repeal a certain provision therein, reported back from the Committee on Appropriations, was referred to the Committee on Elections No. 2.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HOPKINS in the chair. Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve all points of order against the pending bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. That must be done in the House.

Mr. HULL. I will state to the gentleman that all points of order have been reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9638) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a very brief statement, simply as to what the bill carries and the changes that are made. If members will send for the report, No. 2325, which is very brief, they can have all the information that is necessary for the House and which it is possible for the House to have on the bill. The bill makes an increase in the pay for the Army proper and Ordnance Department, and reductions in amount asked for the subsistence of the Army. In each case where there is a reduction made the evidence before the committee showed that there was a surplus carried over from former appropriations. The increase in the pay of the rank and file of the Army is made for the reason that the evidence before the committee shows that our the reason that the evidence before the committee shows that our last appropriation was not sufficient to pay the Army in full the amount provided by law. This bill as reported carries $23,126,344.30, and we appropriated last year $23,278,402.73, being a reduction of $158,000 from the sum we appropriated last year.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether in the reduction in the cost of rations the estimate is based upon the cost of rations last year? My impression is that the estimate was

Mr. HULL. It was based not only upon the cost last year, but on the amount of appropriations necessary for different years. It was based upon the statement of the Quartermaster-General as to what was necessary to get during this year.

Mr. STEELE. You mean the Commissary-General?

Mr. HULL. It was not the Commissary-General; we made no reduction in his department, but in the estimates of the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. STEELE. Did the estimate of the Commissary-General take into account the increased cost of rations?

Mr. HULL. There was nothing concerning that except what you will find in his report and the Book of Estimates.

Mr. STEELE. Undoubtedly the cost of rations will be greatly more the next fiscal year than they have been in preceding years. I know the price of flour, of beef, and of pork has increased

Mr. HULL. We have left that just as it was submitted in the estimates. I want to call attention, Mr. Chairman, especially to the fact that there is no change in the general law except in two instances, and I do not care to take extended time now. When the provisions are reached I desire to discuss the two new provisions of the bill. One of them, I am certain, is subject to a point of order. The other is questionable in my mind; but that need not be decided until we reach it. The first change in the law is made at the request of the Paymaster-General of the Army, extending his time for approving vouchers ten days. He now has twenty days, and he stated before the committee that it is impossible for his department to do the work in the time now prescribed by law, and he asked us to insert an amendment extending it to thirty days. We have incorporated that in the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the necessity of that? The President or Secretary of the Treasury has the authority now to extend the time, and is it not better to leave the law as it is and let the exten-time, and is it not better to leave the law as it is and let the extension be a matter of administration?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Maine is better qualified to pass upon a matter of administration than I am, and it is easy to dispose of the amendment, when we reach it, by a point of order, if it is thought desirable to do so.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think it is not desirable to amend the law so as to extend the time for the audit of accounts beyond what is now provided. If in any specific instance it becomes necessary to extend the time, the President or Secretary of the Treasury has ample authority to do it; but a sufficient reason for the extension much to be given. There is a constant tendency to defer the set. ought to be given. There is a constant tendency to defer the settlement of accounts, and I think we ought to have the existing law as a spur to promptness.

Mr. HULL. Is it not true that an officer who is allowed an

Mr. HULL. Is it not true that an oliter who is absorbed extension of time must apply once a year for that extension?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes; the permission to extend the time covers only the current year, and I think it ought to be thus, for the reason that the twenty days now allowed is ordinarily sufficient

Mr. HULL. Well, if any officer has been compelled to apply repeatedly for such extensions, that might be a good reason for this proposed legislation. However, I do not desire to take up time in discussion of this amendment, because I do not regard it as of any special importance,
Mr. STEELE. By the time the returns in some departments are in, has the paymaster, who is required by law to examine them, any time to do so?

Mr. HULL. He has twenty days.

Mr. STEELE. But in fact he does not have the twenty days, because the twenty days are taken up in getting the returns in.

Mr. DINGLEY. He has twenty days after they are received.

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Chairman, as I have said, that point is not an important one in the bill, so I trust that members will not take up much time in discussing it.

I desire now to call special attention to a new provision contained in this bill, which I think is the one that my friend from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] has his eye upon. It is found on page 19, where the committee have incorporated a provision-

That the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., is hereby abandoned, and all improvements on Government reservations are surrendered and turned over to the Interior Department except quarters for the officers.

That is the provision as it stands in the bill. When it is reached I shall offer an amendment in somewhat different language, but I desire now to submit the reasons for incorporating this provision in the bill. In the first place, the gentleman from Arkansas will recognize the fact that the committee, or the House, can practically abandon that hospital by refusing to appropriate anything for its maintenance. I do not regard it as of any benefit to the people of Hot Springs or the State of Arkansas to keep a hospital there that has no inmates, especially when, by a change a hospital there that has no inmates, especially when, by a change of administration and by turning it over to the Interior Department, it can be leased to parties who will fill it with inmates, and thus cause so much more money to be expended in the State of Arkansas. The Secretary of War has made a very careful and complete examination of this whole question, and I want to call attention to that part of his report, commencing at the bottom of page 10, where he says:

The experience gained in carrying on the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., does not appear to have sustained expectations in regard to its value to the officers and men of the Army and Navy, nor do those expectations appear to be realizable. It would seem that the only way to keep the hospital filled would be to compel the sick of the Army and Navy to go there for treatment.

It appears, therefore, that in order to utilize this hospital we must not merely provide that the sick of the Army and Navy may go there, but we must pass a law to compel them to go. That would certainly be rather an extreme measure, to establish a hospital and maintain it, and then pass a law forcing men to go to it. The Secretary says further:

The present buildings have a capacity for 80 patients, 16 officers and 64 enlisted men, but the attendance is seldom more than half the capacity, and frequently not more than one-fourth.

The Surgeon-General, in calling attention to this hospital, says that unless extraordinary measures are adopted it can not be made to fulfill the purposes for which it was created, and in his report he states that there have been as high a number as ten officers in the institution during the past year and as low as one.

To go a little further with the report of the Secretary of War, he says that the hospital was erected in pursuance of an act of Congress approved June 30, 1882, and, including furnishings, cost $140,500. This reservation is under the control of the Interior Department, with the exception of a small part taken possession of by the act of Congress establishing the Army and Navy Hospital. If we abandon the hospital it reverts to the Interior Department, and it can be leased under that Department, and the Secretary of War says that it will thus become a source of profit to the Government instead of a continual loss.

Just think of it! To care for twenty patients we have this Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, where there is one surgeon and one assistant surgeon, and in addition to that the law provides for a surgeon of the Navy, but for some years the naval surgeon has not gone there, because no men from the Navy have been geon has not gone there, because no men from the Navy have been in the hospital for treatment, and the Navy Department does not now detail a surgeon to that hospital. In addition to the surgeon and assistant surgeon there are twelve members of the Hospital Corps and a large number of civilian employees, and all to take care of an average of about twenty men. The Secretary of War in his report says that it would be better and cheaper for the Government to written the officers and may who report to that he officers and men who report to that he ernment to maintain the officers and men who report to that hospital for treatment in a first-class hotel under the best medical attendance that could be procured in the United States than to continue to maintain the hospital.

Mr. STEELE. It would appear by the language in line 6, page 19, that it is the intention to abandon this property "except quarters for the officers." If there is to be that exception, it is hardly an abandonment.

Mr. HULL. Those words "except quarters for the officers" belong properly in another part of the paragraph.

Mr. PARKER. The words referred to, instead of coming in after the words "Interior Department," should have been inserted before the word "Provided," so as to make the clause read:

For construction and repairs of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, except quarters for the officers, etc.

Mr. HULL. When we reach that portion of the bill, I shall move to transfer the clause "except quarters for the officers," so as to come in before the word "Provided," in line 2.

The committee has left out all appropriation for this hospital. The Interior Department has a man on the reservation looking after the Government's property, so that at the expiration of this fiscal year, if we make no further appropriation, the reservation will be practically abandoned. I can therefore see no reason why will be practically abandoned. I can therefore see no reason why there should be any point of order made with a view to striking out this provision. The Secretary of the Interior has charge of the entire reservation. It is not a military reservation, and the Interior Department now leases grounds for hotels, cottages, and different purposes of that kind. It can lease this property for a hotel or hospital or whatever other purpose it may please.

Mr. Chairman, there are a few typographical errors in the bill, which was printed hastily. These errors will be corrected by amendments as we reach them. I have no desire to occupy further the time of the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs takes his seat, I should like to call his attention to a provision on page 13 of this bill—the paragraph making appropriations for "incidental expenses." In that paragraph a large number of objects of expenditure, or possible expenditure, are grouped together. I should like to know from the chairman of the committee upon what basis the aggregate appropriation has been reached. Is it upon the basis that some portion of the appropriation will be expended on each one of these objects? One of those objects, as I observe, is "expenses of the interment of officers killed in action," and there are numbers of other expenditures provided for here which in the present condition of the Army will not probably have to be met. From the nature of many of the objects embraced in this paragraph it would seem that large amounts which may be saved on some of these items might under the language of the bill be expended for other items. I should like to know whether in the general estimate by which this aggregate of $600,000 was reached the committee assumed that there would be some expenditure for each of the objects provided for.

Mr. HULL. In answer to that question I will simply say we have assumed that expenses may be incurred under each head. We have followed the language of the estimates of the War Department and the language of appropriation bills passed heretofore. We have had regard, also, to the evidence before the committee as to whether or not we could cut down this amount. The General stated that there had been expended during the present year over $555,000 of the $600,000 appropriated, and that there being two years more to run on the appropriation, gathering up the debts that were contracted during the year, it was now known that $600,000 would be required to meet the incidental expenses of the

As to the amount to be expended for each individual item, the As to the amount to be expended for each individual item, the committee had no intention of going into details in that way, because we hoped to get this appropriation bill through before the 4th of March; and we very much doubt if we could even have been able to report the bill had we undertaken to go into the War Department and examine every particular item of expenditure to which every dollar appropriated in the bill is to be applied.

As to the item for the interment of men killed in battle and other such questions which my colleague has raised, I will state that the item to which he refers includes those who may die on duty as well as those killed in battle. But the probabilities are that a very small portion of the $600,000 will be used for that pur-

Mr. HEPBURN. I notice also an item of this kind:

For expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains where military escorts can not be furnished.

where military escorts can not be furnished.

There are a good many items of that kind. Now, there is no probability of a dollar being expended for any of those objects during the coming year. I find here, however, an item for office furniture and other items of that character. Now, with this lump sum appropriated in this way, covering this vast number of possible objects, could not the Department expend the whole of the sum appropriated for objects which probably Congress would not approve? I take it for granted that the gentleman himself would not approve an expenditure of $600,000 for office furniture, yet under the loose language in which this bill is drawn if there were no necessity for the expenditure of any of this $600,000 upon any other object the whole appropriation might be expended for office furniture—an expenditure which this House certainly would not wish to sanction. wish to sanction.

It seems to me that there should be some more specific method of directing the channels in which this money shall go. The appropriation ought not to be made in this loose way—a large sum being appropriated on account of the seeming necessity of providing for objects designated, for which, in fact, no expenditure will be required.

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not hear the whole of the statement of the gentleman in charge of this bill. I wish merely to inquire whether the bill provides for any increase of salaries? Mr. HULL. There is no increase of salary in the bill—nothing of that kind at all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read by sections for amendment

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman desire to close general debate at this time?

Mr. HULL. I do if nobody desires to continue this debate.
Mr. LITTLE. I should like to make an arrangement of this kind, if I can: I do not wish to take up unnecessarily the time of the committee; but I should like to have an understanding that when that part of the bill in which I feel a particular interest shall be reached, I may have a little more time for debate than would be allowed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HULL. There will be no objection to that. I recognize the propriety of the gentleman's request.

Mr. LITTLE. Very good; then I have no objection to closing general debate now.

The Clerk (proceeding to read the bill by paragraphs) read the following:

Mr. HULL. By a clerical or typographical error the word "thousand" has been omitted in the clause just read. The amount of the appropriation should be $2,800,000. I ask that the clause be amended by inserting the word "thousand" after the word "hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, that amendment will be made.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of Hospital Corps, $202,800. For service pay of enlisted men, including Hospital Corps, by reason of length of service, in addition to their monthly pay, and payable therewith,

For clerks and messengers at the Headquarters of the Army and at the several department headquarters; at the recruiting headquarters and rendezvous; at the Military Academy at West Point; at the Artillery School at Fort Monroe, Va.; at the Infantry and Cavalry School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and at the Cavalry and Light Artillery School at Fort Riley, Kans., not exceeding 90 clerks, at $1,000 each, 25 clerks, at $1,000 each, and 45 messengers, at $720 each; $161,900.

And said clerks and messengers shall be employed and apportioned to the several headquarters, stations, and inspection districts by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question, with his consent. I notice that there seems to be an increase all along the line in these sums for the pay of the Hospital Corps, etc., and for the service pay of enlisted men. Will the gentleman state the reason of the increase? Is this because of additional enlistments provided for by acts of Congress since the former appropriation bill went into effect?

Mr. HULL. Does the gentleman refer to the clerks and messengers?

Mr. HULICK. I observe that all of the paragraphs that have just been read have been increased.

Mr. HULL. The service pay is increased, I will state to the gentleman, by reason of length of service. This is simply the amount fixed by law.

Mr. HULICK. Is it because of increased enlistments in the Army?

Mr. HULL. There is a difference, the gentleman will understand, between the service pay and the regular pay. In the service pay there is an increase of compensation for every five years

Mr. HULICK. Is that the sole cause of the increase?
Mr. HULL. That is the sole cause of the increase.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay Department: For pay of officers in the Pay Department, as now authorized and provided by law, §71,500:

For additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $21,450;

In all, $92,950: Provided, That the Paymaster-General shall have not to exceed thirty days for the examination of paymasters' accounts before transmitting them to the Auditor for the War Department.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise a question of order on the proviso beginning on page 5 with the word "Propided," in line 23, down to the end of the paragraph, being the following words:

Provided, That the Paymaster-General shall have not to exceed thirty days for the examination of paymasters' accounts before transmitting them to the Auditor for the War Department.

The proviso changes existing law.

Mr. HULL. We concede that the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the objection, and the words will go out of the bill.

The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

RETIRED ENLISTED MEN.

For pay of the enlisted men of the Army on the retired list, $400,000.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out the last word, for the purrose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a question. What is the provision of law now in reference to the a question. What is the provision of law now in reference to the pay of retired enlisted men in the Army?

Mr. HULL. The retired pay, if that is what the gentleman refers to, is three-fourths of the full pay.

Mr. PICKLER. During life?

Mr. HULL. During life.

Mr. BLUE. After what period of service?

Mr. HULL. After thirty years' service.

Mr. HULL. After thirty years' service.
Mr. PICKLER. Do they not get anything before that?
Mr. HULL. Not on this account. They have their service pay, of course

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That $200,000 of the appropriation for incidental expenses, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be set aside for the payment of enlisted men on extra duty at constant labor of not less than ten days in the Quartermaster's Department; but no such payment shall be made at any greater rate per day than is fixed by law for the class of persons employed at the work done therein.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask consent to go back to the preceding paragraph, in order to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a question in regard to the language embodied in the bill in lines 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22 on page 12.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to recurring to the paragraph referred to by the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. The language to which I refer is as follows:

That, after advertisement, all the supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army and of the branches of the army service shall hereafter be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation and the interest of the Government considered.

Does that mean within the limits of the United States?

Does that mean within the limits of the United States?

I remember a number of years ago there was a good deal of criticism of one of the quartermasters who made purchases of blankets abroad. That did not seem to meet the wishes and sentiment of the American people, and I would like to know from the gentleman now whether it is the purpose of this bill to seek European markets, for instance, in making purchases of this character?

Mr. HULL. I wish to say to my colleague that the question of buying abroad was not considered by the committee. I presumed, at once, without giving the matter any further consideration, that the supplies for the Army would necessarily be purchased at home.

the supplies for the Army would necessarily be purchased at home.

Mr. HEPBURN. They were not on one occasion.

Mr. HULL. I remember that. This bill sought simply to limit the purchases to the point which was most in the interest of the Government.

If my colleague wishes to offer an amendment limiting it abso lutely to the United States I shall raise no point of order against it, and am perfectly willing to have it incorporated in the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I would like to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "cheapest," in line 20, on page 12, the words:

In the markets of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repairs of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extraduty pay of enlisted men employed on the same: Provided, That the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., is hereby abandoned and all improvements on Government reservation are surrendered and turned over to the Interior Department, except quarters for the officers, $75,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to correct the bill in a verbal way simply, by inserting, in line 2 on page 19, the words "except quarters for officers, $75,000," and to strike out those words in

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] will be adopted unless there be objection.

Mr. LITTLE. As I understand, it is a mere transposition of a line.

Mr. HULL. Yes; it does not affect the matter in which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] is interested.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] asked for additional time on the paragraph which has just been read, relating to a hospital at Hot Springs. I yield to him such time as he wants.

Mr. LITTLE. I want first to make a point of order against this provision.

Mr. HULL. I desire to be heard on that.
The CHAIRMAN. Which provision?

Mr. LITTLE. Beginning after the word "same," in line 2, on page 19, the words-

Provided that the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., is hereby abandoned and all improvements on Government reservation are surrendered and turned over to the Interior Department.

I make the point, Mr. Chairman, that that is not only new legislation, but is a change of existing law and not in the interest of economy. I find, Mr. Chairman, on page 273 of the Manual, the following ruling made by Mr. Kerr when Speaker:

To a bill making appropriations for the Indian service, an amendment transferring the management of Indian affairs from the Department of the Interior to the War Department, but providing no reduction of expenditures, was held to be germane as an amendment, but subject to the point of order, as being a change of law, and no retrenchment appearing as the result of the proposed change.—Speaker Kerr, Congressional Record, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, page 2822.

Also the following ruling upon the same point:

An amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill striking out the appropriation for the Coast and Geodetic Survey and abolishing it as a bureau of the Treasury Department, also providing for the transfer of the Coast Survey to the Navy Department and of the Geodetic Survey to the Interior Department, was held not in order as being a change of law; no reduction of expenditure appearing to result from such legislation.—Congressional Record, Fifty-third Congress, second session, page 3002.

Fifty-third Congress, second session, page 302.

Now we find by referring to this clause of the bill that the appropriation made last year was $75,000, and the appropriation made this year is $75,000; and I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this hospital was established by solemn statute enacted in 1882, and this bill not only seeks to transfer the hospital from the War Department to the Interior Department, but seeks to abandon it as a military hospital, which we do not think can be done in an appropriation bill, nothing appearing in the bill indicating that it will reduce the expenses of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas if the rule that was in force in the House at the time that Speaker Kerr made the ruling to which he has just referred is the same as the rule under which we are proceeding in this Congress?

in this Congress?

Mr. LITTLE. I am so informed. I confess I do not know personally. Mr. MILES.

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?
Mr. LITTLE. Certainly.
Mr. MILES. Do I understand that this is an attempt practi-

Mr. MILES. Do I understand that this is an attempt practically to repeal a statute?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; it does repeal it. It abandons the military hospital at Hot Springs.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] takes his seat, will be please send to the Chair the law which he claims is being changed by the bill under consideration?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word on this law the goal laws from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] has concluded.

when the gentleman from Arkausas [Mr. LITTLE] has concluded. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will give the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] opportunity to be heard before deciding the question.

Mr. LITTLE. I have sent out for the statute. I have the amendment here proposed to the appropriation bill originally, which I send to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is recognized.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is a different question to what we ordinarily find in a proposition to change the law on an appropriation bill. This is not really a change of law as an abandonment of a hospital. In the first place, this reservation was all under the control of the Interior Department, and, as I understand, the next of it was simply taken away from the Interior Department. this part of it was simply taken away from the Interior Department for the purpose of a hospital for the Army and Navy, and for that only for that only.

Mr. STEELE. Temporarily.

Mr. HULL. Temporarily, or as long as it is so used. I understand further, Mr. Chairman, that the Interior Department keeps a man there all the time to look after the entire reservation, collect the rent from the part that is leased, and see that the interests of the Government are properly provided for. I do not regard the point as to reduction of expenditures as of any force under our rule, but I want to call the attention of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. Little] to this fact, that on page 20 of the bill, where we come to the Medical Department proper, there is a reduction in the amount expended, and the reduction is made because the committee omitted the words that heretofore carried an appropriation for this hospital at Hot Springs, Ark. Heretofore the priation for this hospital at Hot Springs, Ark. Heretofore the priation for this hospital at Hot Springs, Ark. Heretofore the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., had been specifically mentioned as entitled to part of the appropriation.

I think, Mr. Chairman, if we simply struck out the appropriation entirely that the property reverts to the Interior Department. But in order to make it clear, this provision was inserted in the law. I do not regard it as a change that comes within the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas where the law is that provides that this shall be under and maintained by the War Department, because the law sent up to the Chair provides how these buildings shall be erected and says nothing about which Department of the Government and says nothing about which Department of the Government shall maintain the hospital at this place.

Mr. HULL. The proviso is simply intended to make it clear, so that in case the Interior Department can lease these buildings it can do so at once, instead of having questions that might be raised without the proviso by which the War Department surrenders control of them. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Arkansas, if he is desirous of serving his people and the Government to the best advantage, would be glad to have this fixed in some way so that these buildings can be utilized, and in place of being worthless to the Army and Navy, and a great expense to the Government, becoming profitable to the Government and filled with patients from other points of the United States. That can only be done by providing a method by which the Government. only be done by providing a method by which the Government can lease the present buildings.

Mr. LITTLE. I shall address myself to that later on.

Mr. HULL. On the question of the point of order, I do not believe it to lie in this case, for the reason that the whole reservation has been under the control of the Interior Department. So much of it was taken out of that control simply while this Army and Navy Hospital was maintained; and the very minute that the War Department ceases to maintain the Army and Navy Hospital there it virtually reverts to the Interior Department.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, the rule is plain-and the construction of the rule has been uniform—that no bureau and no institution, on a general appropriation bill can be transferred from one Department to another. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] read to the Chair some decisions of a former occupant of the chair, but he omitted to read, at the bottom of page 284 of the Manual of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, a citation which expressly declares:

Provisions in or amendments to appropriation bills transferring the supervision and management of bureaus from one Department to another is a change of law.

However desirable it may be to abandon this military hospital,

However desirable it may be to abandon this military nospital, the very purpose of that rule is to force its abandonment as an independent proposition.

The CHAIRMAN: Before the gentleman from Texas leaves that point of a previous ruling of a Speaker of the House that one bureau can not be transferred from one Department to another, does not that relate to the bureaus that are fixed by law in a particular Department?

ticular Department?

Mr. BAILEY. Undoubtedly, if this hospital was not established by law and is not maintained by law it needs no provision in the bill to abandon it. To say nothing about it would abandon it. The law originally provided for its establishment and its maintenance. Now, if that law is not a continuing act, all the Committee on Military Affairs needs to do is simply to make no appropriation for it, and thus abandon it. The very fact that the committee have felt it necessary to incorporate an express provision for its abandonment is a concession on the part of the committee that it has been established and is maintained by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to say anything further upon this point.

The CHARMAN. Does the gentleman from lowa desire to say anything further upon this point.

Mr. HULL. I do not desire to say anything more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it does violate the rule that provides that in an appropriation bill no change shall be made; and if the gentleman has anything further to say the Chair would be very glad to hear him.

Mr. HULL. I will simply say it explains existing law instead of changing the law, and that the Interior Department having control of the reservation, any abandonment of what we have heretofore been doing for the Army and Navy Hospital is an abandonment by the War Department. If Congress refuses to appropriate for the hospital the control would naturally go back to the Interior Department; and the amendment in the proviso simply Interior Department; and the amendment in the proviso simply makes clear what, to my mind, is already the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The law provides an appropriation of $100,000 to be appropriated for the erection of an army and navy hospital at this place, and that it shall be erected by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with plans and specifications to be prepared and submitted to the Secretary of War by the Surgeons-General of the Army and Navy, etc. The Chair is of the opinion that it can not be transferred from the War Department to the Interior Department in an appropriation bill, and will sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from and will sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from

Mr. HULL. I want to offer another proviso, which will come in on page 18, in the appropriation for the "Construction and repair of hospitals." Congress never appropriates as much set have of hospitals." Congress never appropriates as much as the Department feels that it should have for construction and repairs, and while we left out the Hot Springs hospital we left the amount untouched. In all the appropriation bills passed since I have been in Congress, and, in fact, since the hospital was established at Hot Springs, there has been a specific clause providing that the appropriation should include the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs. In this bill we have left that out, but we have not reduced the amount of the appropriation. As this is the first part of the bill where an appropriation is made for hospitals, I offer an amendment to this paragraph, to come in after the words "seventyfive thousand dollars," as follows:

Provided, That on or before June 30, 1897, the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., shall be closed.

I do not desire to take up any time upon this point, but will ask the Chair to decide whether the amendment is in order or not.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have that amendment

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 19, line 6, after the word "dollars" insert the following: "Frovided, That on or before June 30, 1897, the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., shall be closed."

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point against that that I made against the other amendment. It simply seeks to attain the same result in an indirect way. This hospital is a permanent institution; and in answer to one suggestion that has permanent institution; and in answer to one suggestion that has been made by the gentleman from Iowa, I wish to say that this property is segregated from the other property at Hot Springs, and is not in any way under the direction or supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

M. HILL I. I. do not

Mr. HULL. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make that motion for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE], who seems to be familiar with this subject, what amount the Government has expended since 1882 upon these improvements at Hot Springs, Ark. I remember that at that time and later the argument was made by gentleber that at that time and later the argument was made by gentle-men from Arkansas, in support of appropriations to improve the Hot Springs Reservation, that they were essential, or at least that they would be exceedingly valuable, to the Army in connection with the reservation as a hospital site. I think that large sums have been expended upon that reservation, and now I understand it is the wish of the War Department to abandon that hospital. Will the gentleman kindly state what amount has been expended there?

Mr. LITTLE. I will state, for the information of my friend, that originally, under the leadership of Gen. John A. Logan, $100 000 was appropriated for the erection of this hospital, and afterwards, I believe, $70,000, making altogether $170,000.

Mr. HULL. Let me correct the gentleman. The total was

Mr. HEPBURN. Does that include all the expenditures made in the improvement of the property known as the Hot Springs Reservation?

Mr. LITTLE. There has been usually in the appropriation bill an item of six or eight hundred dollars for the necessary improve-ment of the hospital, for repairs, and for keeping up the public grounds. It should be remembered that there are several acres of land included in that part of the military reservation set apart for the hospital, and that appropriations have been made for keeping up and beautifying those grounds.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am under the impression that the gentleman is mistaken as to the total amount. I think that very large man is mistaken as to the total amount. It think that very large amounts of money have been expended in the improvement of the property, outside of the cost of the erection of this hospital.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit a suggestion, I think the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] is simply stating the amount expended upon the Government hospital, which is a very small fraction of the total amount expended upon the reservation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; but the expenditures upon the reservation have been justified to members of the House, from time to time, upon the ground that they were necessary or incidental to the hospital. The hospital has been the basis and the excuse for the hospital. The hospital has been the basis and the excuse for these other expenditures, so that the outlay on both may properly be included together. That is the reason why I asked the gentleman the aggregate amount of the appropriations made, so that we could find out what this hospital in its entirety has cost.

Mr. LITTLE. I think that the hospital proper, as I have already stated, has cost $140,500. The entire reservation covers quite a large area. There is the general reservation proper and the East Mountain Reservation. The military hospital embraces only a small portion of that, but the entire East Mountain Reservation is owned by the Government and also the West Mountain vation is owned by the Government, and also the West Mountain and the North Mountain reservations. The improvements outside of the hospital have been extensive in some respects, especially as to the East Mountain Reservation, where the Government has gone on and beautified the grounds and built a boulevard to the top of the mountain, that being the mountain out of which flow the hot waters and the one at the base of which this hospital is erected.

But the hospital proper has cost only the amount I have stated, except that there have been other amounts appropriated to beautify the grounds, which are segregated from the reservation by a

Mr. HEPBURN. What was the cost of extending the waters under a street there at one time?

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, that had no connection whatever with the At one time there was appropriated seventy-five or eighty thousand dollars, as I remember, for the bridging of Hot springs Creek. The Government owning all the property on one side of the creek, an appropriation was made to bridge or arch the creek down the main avenue, the Government paying half the expense and the city, I think, paying the other half.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, will the gentleman tell us what is the aggregate of the appropriations made and expended upon that reservation, or upon all those reservations?

Mr. LITTLE. The two that I have indicated are all that I remember. But I will say to the gentleman that there is a large revenue to the Government every year from this reservation, ranging, I believe, from $40,000 to $75,000 annually. The moneys thus received are expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, upon the necessary improvements. And it ought not to be forgotten that the Government owns a large number of salable lots, which are now valued at from $75,000 to $100,000, in addition to the remainder of these extensive reservations. But the rents from the bath houses and the leases furnish the money for the necessary improvements, and really costs the Government nothing.
Mr. HEPBURN. What did I understand the gentleman to state as the amount of annual revenue?

Mr. LITTLE. From $40,000 to $75,000, I think. I speak from memory. It pays the expenses of the superintendent of the reservation and other officers and makes the necessary improvements, all from the rentals paid the Government.

Mr. HULL. If the Government is receiving a revenue of from $40,000 to $75,000 a year from the balance of this reservation, why should the gentleman from Arkansas insist on wasting that amount upon a useless hospital?

Mr. LITTLE. I think the assumption of my friend from Iowa is erroneous. The expenses of maintaining this establishment, outside of the payment of Government employees, is but a small amount—$3,000 or $4,000 for an entire year. The assumption of the gentleman that the hospital does no good to the Army is an error, as I think I am able to show. Not one dollar of this money is wasted.

Mr. HULL. Then the gentleman had better show it to the War Department and the Surgeon-General's Office.

Mr. LITTLE. Not knowing that this bill was under way in the committee and having no idea of its being reported so early, I did not have my attention drawn to this provision until a few days ago-after the bill was reported.

days ago—after the bill was reported.

The report of the Secretary of War had not been distributed at that time; at least I had failed to get a copy and knew nothing at all about this recommendation, and when I learned of it I was greatly astonished that the Secretary of War should desire to strike down this worthy institution. In all sincerity, I desire to say that in regard to this hospital I believe the House is now in danger of making a very great mistake. I believe that this institution, if it were cared for properly in the appropriation bills, would not only be of the greatest benefit to the Army, but its operations and benefits could be extended; a division could be set apart for the treatment of disabled or ailing veterans in the Sol-apart for the treatment of disabled or ailing veterans in the Soldiers' Homes of this country.

While I am on the floor, as the question of appropriation will come up later, without regard to the ruling of the Chairman upon the point of order—I am proceeding by unanimous consent, I be-lieve, at any rate—I wish to say that there is a reason why no greater number of sick soldiers are sent to this hospital. The smallness of such attendance is not on account of any lack of advantages there, for the advantages of the institution for treatment of particular classes of diseases are not excelled in the civilized world. Nobody, I presume, who is acquainted with the curative powers of the waters at Hot Springs will deny that the use of those waters affords the surest treatment for rheumatism, neuralgia, and various other diseases not necessary to be men-

I wish now to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the statement of the Surgeon-General's report, on which the recommendation of the Secretary of War seems to have been based. It appears that there are in this hospital 16 beds for officers and 64 for enlisted men. That is the capacity of the building. It is stated in this report that during the last year there were a total of 84 soldiers treated there—officers and privates. Then the report proceeds:

.0f these cases 50 were returned to duty, 15 were discharged for disability, 3 resumed their status on furlough, and 17 remained under treatment at the close of the year. Inquiries made in regard to the 50 men returned to duty six months after they were sent from the hospital showed that 36 were doing duty with their commands or were well at the time they had been discharged for expiration of term of service, 8 had been discharged for disability on account of relapses, and 2 for venereal disease contracted subsequent to their return to duty; 3 were undergoing treatment on account of relapse, and 2 had deserted. Of the 68 completed cases, 48 were cases of rheumatism, and of these cases 36 were returned to duty after an average treatment of eighty-five days and 7 were discharged for disability after an average treatment of ninety-five and six-tenths days.

Now Mr. Chairman, if we compare the average number of

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we compare the average number of sufferers from rheumatism and neuralgia treated at this hospital with the small amount required to carry on this laudable enter-prise—some three or four thousand dollars of actual expenditure by appropriation outside of the pay of officers, stewards, etc.—it strikes me the propriety of continuing this hospital must be apparent, because the mode of treatment pursued there reaches cases which are not curable in the ordinary way.

I wish to call special attention to the language which I shall read from the report of the Surgeon-General, from which it will be seen that he does not recommend the abandonment of this hospital. On the contrary, he points out, as I construe his language, the reason why the attendance has been so small as it has been:

The special advantages afforded by the Government in this general hospital in the treatment of the diseases mentioned in Circular No. 16, A. G. O., December 8, 1892, do not seem to be appreciated properly by medical officers of the Army.

I take it for granted, although I am not familiar with details of that kind, that the sick persons of the Army are by direction of the local surgeons of the Army directed as to where they shall go for treatment. From the statement of the Surgeon-General it appears that the officers of the Army have not appreciated up to this time the conditions existing at this hospital and the wonderful curative powers of these waters. He says further:

It is equipped with all the latest and best appliances for the treatment of patients by hydrotherapy, electricity, massage, and the Swedish movements. No sanitarium or private establishment at Hot Springs offers any such advantages. It is believed that if cases suitable for treatment at the Springs were sent earlier in the progress of the disease many serious complications might be prevented and a larger percentage of recoveries be effected.

It appears that under the regulations of the Department only the more desperate cases have been sent to this hospital for treat-

Now, in view of the splendid appliances at this institution, the magnificent building which has been erected at the expense of the Government under the leadership of a man whose friendship to the soldiers can not be questioned—Gen. John A. Logan—it does seem to me that this institution ought not to be stricken down on a mere ex parte recommendation of the Secretary of War. Nothing is offered in lieu of the accommodations of which it is proposed to deprive the officers and men of our Army. The doors of this hospital should not be closed, but left open to meet the needs of these men.

If the attendance is not sufficient to fill up all the beds provided in the hospital, why can not provision be made that the old soldiers in the Soldiers' Homes of the country who are suffering with neuralgia and rheumatic diseases or other diseases that may be healed by these waters, contracted in the service, may be sent to this institution for treatment? I believe sincerely that when the powers of these waters and the facilities of this hospital become known to the public it will be regarded as little less than a crime to strike down the institution in this way. I hope it will not be

My friend suggests that if I am a friend of the public or of my own people I will not object to this. I claim to be a friend of both. As such I believe that this hospital ought to be nurtured. both. As such I believe that this hospital ought to be nurritied. I believe the future will show that the establishment of this hospital was among the wisest acts of Congress. As Gen. John A. Logan himself said, in presenting the bill for the establishment of this hospital, "The city of Hot Springs virtually belongs to the Government; these waters belong to the Government." This building with its appliances has been erected at public expense and for a robb purpose. And to strike down this institution by and for a noble purpose. And to strike down this institution by action taken thus early in the session, at a time when neither I nor the friends of that city, or of this hospital, I might say—I will not say it, because it might be offensive—when the friends of this institution are called upon to meet this question without warning and without opportunity to make a fair showing to the House would, it seems to me, be entirely wrong and without justification.

I have said this much at this time for the reason that later on I shall ask that the usual appropriation be made for the maintenance of this hospital. And, Mr. Chairman, I wish to urge on the thinking members of And, Mr. Chairman, I was to tree on the thinking members of this House, those who are acquainted with the Hot Springs and the curative powers of its waters, not to confuse this institution, which is segregated from the Government property there, with the other interests that the Government holds. This institution is fed by pipes which furnish the curative waters fresh from the springs for use in the hospital. And in view of the fact of the hundreds of old soldiers in Homes scattered throughout the country, with the number ailing with fearful diseases, neuralgic and rheumatic, whose conditions can be cured or at least greatly amel-iorated by that institution, I think before we lay violent hands on it and abandon it we ought to look and see if we can not enlarge its sphere of usefulness and make it more valuable than it is now to these people. And I think, Mr. Chairman, when this matter is properly presented before the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, he will agree with me.

I do not like to disagree or differ with the committees of this House, and I never do so when it is possible to avoid it. But on this occasion I feel constrained to object to the proposed cutting off of the appropriation for this institution. I think it contrary to the best interests of the Government, and of its property there. I believe that the Government will lose money by striking down the institution—looking at it from a business standpoint—because the Government owns now thousands of dollars' worth of property which would be affected by the action proposed, and no great expense is required to keep the institution up. Let us take proper steps, after mature deliberation, to bring this balm to every suffering soldier. Let this boon of relief be enjoyed by all the old suffering veterans throughout the nation, that their last days may be without that suffering that their exposure has placed upon them.

I thank the House and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs for being so kind as to permit me to progress irregularly in regard to this matter.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I suspect that the hospital at Hot Springs, to which reference is made in this bill, was built not wholly on account of the necessity for such an institution at that point, but because of the enterprise of the citizens at Hot Springs, and I want to say, after somewhat of acquaintance with the people there, acquired by an investigation that I happened to make a few years ago as a member of this body, that in the way of getting the benefit of appropriations they are the most enterprising people that I have yet met in the United States

It was found a few years ago in a controversy in the courts between certain individuals claiming these lands and the United States—it was found by the Supreme Court of the United States that the Government, unfortunately for the Government, owned this Hot Springs Reservation. There were then some buildings on it, a hotel and some bath houses, and the Government appointed a commission to ascertain the value of the buildings and made an a commission to ascertain the value of the buildings and made an appropriation and issued certificates to the owners to pay for the buildings which they had already erected on one side of the gully. On the other side of this line or gully the Government sold the land to the actual settlers at what was really a nominal figure. The Government rented some of the privileges for bath houses and rented the hotel at $1,000 a year. The testimony before our committee during the time of the lease showed that it was worth $25,000 a year. I may say that after a year or two, or within a year or two afterwards, it was rented for a period of ten years at $3,000 a year, because the men who were upon the property had expended some money of their own in enlarging the hotel. But they were not satisfied with this. The enterprising gentlemen down there inaugurated a scheme to make a magnificent street of this gully to which I have referred, at Hot Springs, and they involved the Government in an expenditure of money amounting involved the Government in an expenditure of money amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars to build a continuous archway over this gully, and then by grading up they succeeded in securing a magnificent street. In that grading, by some arrangement with the contractors, they managed to get a good deal of the material off of the land on the side of the hill opposite to the Government reservation, improving the property there, so that they were able to put a fine block of stores along the street on that side. That property became and was at the time that I was there, during the period of this investigation, of immense value.

Of course to an ordinary citizen of the United States it would have been supposed that the abutting owners of the property would pay equally, share and share alike, for this grand improvement. But not so with the enterprising people of Hot Springs.

ment. But not so with the enterprising people of Hot Springs. They impressed upon Congress the idea that it was Government property, and that the Government should do the entire work; and as a consequence the property owners along the opposite side of the street found themselves in possession of a magnificent roadway instead of a gully and creek, which existed there before, without any cost to themselves. Their property necessarily was largely enhanced in value.

At the time I was there they had just commenced the foundation of the hospital, and we had some eminent physicians before us. These gentlemen demonstrated that it was unsafe to leave matters in the condition in which we found them, because the lower opening of the archway was just opposite, or a little below, the Government hospital, and the enterprising people there having deposited all of their sewage into the creek through this archway (the contractor having left convenient openings along the line for that purpose), as a consequence the physicians thought that in hot weather malaria was likely to prevail, and, of course, instead of it being a healthy place for a hospital it would not help anything but rheumatism, unless malaria was a cure for other diseases that people might have at that point.

These gentlemen very kindly suggested to Congress to extend these improvements not only below the hospital, but some 6 or 7 miles below, where the creek enters into the Ouachita River. I remember that I was out of Congress one term. I had succeeded, up to the time I left, in heading off any appropriations to extend this archway; but when I came back I found that they were makthis archway; but when I came back I found that they were making a small appropriation to complete the archway across the street below the Government reservation, in order to protect the health of the people who should be in the hospital. I think that the whole appropriation for that purpose was some $20,000.

Now, we were continually told, as my friend [Mr. LITTLE] has been told by the citizens of Hot Springs, that the revenues of the Government were so enormous from this property and from the sale of some land farther away that the Government was getting and would get a good deal more than the improvements cost; but when we came to balance up the books we found that the Governwhen we came to balance up the books we found that the Govern-ment was paying several dollars to one that it was receiving; so that undoubtedly it was a most unfortunate thing for the Government, in a pecuniary point of view, when the Supreme Court discovered that the Government owned the reservation at Hot Springs.

I suggested that it ought to be sold to the highest bidder, but immediately there was a great protest. They wanted to keep one spring there where the poor people—the lazzaroni—could go and have the benefit of these baths. There was a mud hole on the side of the hill. They called it the Rial Hole; and I understand the mud was from the sediment that came from the water, and had great healing qualities. There the lazzaroni were permitted to go at certain hours in the day and take their baths. The other baths were in magnificent bath houses, built at large expense, the Governmentallowing the privilege on the reservation, and also furnishing hot water. Now, from time to time various appropriations have been made to seal over the tops of the springs and to collect the water in that way, while it had the natural heat in it as it came from the springs, for the purposes of these bath houses; not that the gentlemen who owned them would take the property at that time and make the improvements themselves for the purpose of running them, but the Government was a very convenient pay-master to do all this sort of thing; and I have no doubt that this hospital was located there because of the importunities and the persuasiveness and enterprise of the citizens of Hot Springs.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the Government gave them a portion of the reservation upon which to build a court-house, I think, or a schoolhouse, and the enterprising city of Hot Springs, after they got title to it, sold it and pocketed the money. Whether they ever built a court-house in another place or not I do not know, but that is the way this thing has been running, and I have no doubt that the Secretary of War has been impelled by his judgment and busi-ness ability, notwithstanding the recommendations that have un-doubtedly been made to him by these enterprising gentlemen, to state in this report that this hospital is entirely unnecessary, and an expensive institution for the Government to maintain. Just what the annual income is to-day I am not able to say, but members of the House can find it in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, this whole property being under the charge of the Secretary of the Interior, except the Government hospital.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I have already pointed out to this committee one thing, and that is that this hospital is not established.

lished by any law except just such an amendment, tacked on to an appropriation bill, as is now declared to be and is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. To what is the gentleman speaking? The CHAIRMAN. To what is the gentleman speaking?
Mr. PARKER. I am speaking, sir, to the same question that has been before the House—the advisability of continuing this hospital.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. Mr. PARKER. I move to insert the words:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation mentioned in this bill shall be applied to the support of the hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.

In the law of 1882 we find the following:

For construction and repair of hospitals, as reported by the Surgeon-General of the Army, $75,000: Provided, That $100,000 be, and hereby is, appropriated for the erection of an army and navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., which shall be erected by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with plans and specifications to be prepared and submitted to the Secretary of War by the Surgeons-General of the Army and Navy; which hospital, when in a condition to receive patients, shall be subject to such rules, regulations, and restrictions as shall be provided by the President of the United States: Provided further, That such hospital shall be erected on the Government reservation at or near Hot Springs, Ark.

Now, it is nothing but a rider anyhow, and what we propose is that now that we have the Army appropriation bill here, and are putting the horse ahead, we will get rid of that rider.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that there is an amendment pending? I could not understand what it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send his amendment to the Clerk's desk?

Mr. PARKER. Yes, sir; I have it in writing.

Mr. HULL. I have one I can send up if the gentleman desires, wanted to offer it at the following page.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 6, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the appropriation mentioned in this bill shall be applied to the support of the hospital at Hot Springs, Ark."

Mr. HULL. Put in the words "Army and Navy Hospital" at Hot Springs.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to interpose the same point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained; and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the Chair-

Mr. HULL. I do not think it makes any difference. I will offer it at another place.

Mr. BLUE. I think the Chair is evidently in error about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical and hospital department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for general post sanitation, expenses of medical-supply depots, pay of employees, medical care and treatment of officers and enlisted men of the Army on duty at posts and stations for which no other provision is made; for the proper care and treatment of cases in the Army suffering from contagious or epidemic diseases; advertising and other miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, the amount to be expended for pay of civilian employees not to exceed $40,000, $135,000; experimental cooking, $200; in all, $135,200.

Mr. HULL. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the close of this paragraph, after the word "dollars."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, line 21, after the word "dollars" insert the following: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in the further maintenance of the Army and Navy Hospital, at Hot Springs, Ark."

Mr. HULL. Before the Chair decides the question on the point of order I desire to be heard.

Mr. LITTLE. I want to raise the same point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation in this clause heretofore has included the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and the committee did not appropriate for it, with the understanding that it was to be eliminated from the bill and turned over to the Interior Department. It seems to be very clear that it is not new legislation in this bill to limit appropria-tions to certain hospitals or to provide that no part should be used for others; not new legislation for this House in Committee of the Whole to determine whether it will appropriate for a specific thing or shall not, and whether it will limit the appropriation or not. And it seems to me that the Chair, in considering that question, ought to remember that the entire question of appropriations is before the Committee of the Whole, and the Committee of the Whole has the right to limit the appropriations to the specific things that it desires to appropriate for. To hold otherwise is to abridge the power of the House. I regard this as a very different proposition from the one that the Chair ruled on a few minutes ago, as to transferring it to the Interior Department. And in reference to this point I think the Chair will be unable to find that there is any decision in the House or in Committee of the Whole that denies to the Committee of the Whole the right to limit appropriations in Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill. There is no decision in all the parlia-mentary history of the House which would hold this amendment out of order.

Mr. BLUE. This rule under which this point of order is made in its essence provides that no amendment nor an original proposition on an appropriation bill shall change existing law. informed that in former appropriation bills this Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., has been specifically named. This amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa is not obnoxious to that part of the rule, because it does not change existing law. It is made in the abundance of caution as a provision that no part of this part of the rule. of this appropriation shall be used there, while the existing law, so far as it goes, specifically applies to that particular point. It was on that account that I a moment ago said, without any disparagement of the Chair's ruling, that I thought the Chair was in error, because it certainly does not change existing law. Therefore I think that the point of order is not well taken

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman from Kansas this question-

Mr. HULL. If the ruling of the Chair should be against this amendment, I desire to say it simply limits committees in reporting appropriation bills in all their discretion, and compels them to appropriate for objects that are utterly and entirely worthless for the public service. It would be a question under such a decision of the Chair whether you could even reduce appropriations if any of the Chair whether you could even reduce appropriations if any gentleman should raise the point of order that it changed existing law. The whole question of appropriation is before this Committee of the Whole. It is possible that the Committee of the Whole will not agree with the Committee on Military Affairs that this is wise to be done; but it is certainly in the discretion of the Committee of the Whole, and I think it should pass upon this question. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentlemen who favor this amendment if, under any existing law, any part of this appropriation can be applied to the purpose prohibited by this appropriation?

Mr. HULL. I can only say, in answer to that, that heretofore on all Army appropriation bills since the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs has been established there has been a specific proviso including the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark. The Committee on Military Affairs dropped that out this time. We preferred to make a direct transfer to the Interior Department, but that the Chair has ruled out, and I am willing to concede that the Chair had good grounds for this ruling, although I was in hopes that he would rule the other way. [Laughter.] Then the committee is reduced to this position. It has eliminated from its appropriation the amount required for the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, and it has the right to submit to the Committee of the Whole whether that action shall stand or not. This is not a change of existing law. Without that right this or any appropriation bill may be destroyed. It is simply dropping an appropriation from an appropriation bill. It does not change any law, and I think my friend from Maine [Mr. Dingley] can call attention to a case where he, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, in the last session, decided a point exactly similar to this, and where the decision was sustained by

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is a familiar principle which has been repeatedly approved by votes of the Committee of the Whole that the committee have a right to vote upon an amendment limiting the expenditure of an appropriation where there is ment limiting the expenditure of an appropriation where there is no change of existing law. I remember that at the last session of Congress I, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, ruled on precisely that proposition and the ruling was sustained. A few years ago a paragraph was proposed as an amendment to an appropriation bill providing that "no part of the appropriation herein made shall be used in printing United States notes of smaller denominations than those that are canceled." The point of order was raised against that provision that it was a change of existing law. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole ruled that it was not a change of existing law; that inasmuch as the House head the right to refuse to appropriate at all for a purpose that was had the right to refuse to appropriate at all for a purpose that was had the right to refuse to appropriate at an for a purpose that was already authorized by law, they certainly could refuse to appropriate for a part of that purpose, there being no change of existing law. This, I say, is a principle that has been so frequently invoked, and is so often necessary for the protection of the Treasury, that I should dislike very much to have a decision made to the effect that the Committee of the Whole or the House can be this the limits of critical law and the limits are considered. not within the limits of existing law put a limit upon expenditures. If such a decision were to be made, it might be held that if an object was authorized by law the House must make appropriation for it whether it wished to or not, and must appropriate the full amount; but a limitation on the use of an appropriation is a very different thing from a change of existing law, and I repeat, I should dislike very much to have a decision made which would overturn or overthrow a principle often invoked, so useful and so necessary to wise appropriation.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine has stated what I intended to say on the principle of parliamentary law involved in this case in better form than I could have prelaw involved in this case in better form than I could have presented it, but I may be permitted to cite a few remarkable instances in practice on this point. The Wilmot proviso was put on an appropriation bill carrying $2,000,000. The point was made and argued that it was out of order, but the Chair held that it was in order as a limitation on a specific appropriation of money. Again, in the contest made in this House against the use of the Army in enforcing the laws of the bogus legislature of Kansas a proviso was offered to the Army appropriation bill that no part of the money therein appropriated should be used for the enforcement of the laws of the bogus legislature imposed upon the people ment of the laws of the bogus legislature imposed upon the people ment of the laws of the bogus legislature imposed upon the people of Kansas by the border ruffian invasion. The proviso was held by the Chair to be in order. The proviso was put on the bill by a vote, but we were unable to pass the bill with it on, and Congress adjourned without passing the Army bill, and President Pierce called an extra session. I agree with the gentleman from Maine that it would be a bad precedent to hold that the power which appropriates money can not limit and restrict the use of a specific appropriation. There is no obligation to make any appropriation at all, and if that be so, then certainly half the appropriation might be made, or any part on a limit of the appropriation that might

The power to appropriate money carries with it, under parliamentary law, the right to restrict, direct, or control a specific appropriation.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I think there can not be any question of the right of the House to limit the expenditure of an appropriation, but it seems to me that there is direct authority in decisions made in the House for the limitation of this appropriation. On a certain occasion an amendment was offered providing that no part of the money thereby appropriated should be applied to the transportation of troops on certain railroads. The point of order was made that the amendment changed existing law, and the Chair held that it was in order as a limitation upon the appropriation and was not a change of existing law. Now, if we can provide in the Army bill that no money therein appropriated shall be expended for the transportation of troops upon a certain railroad, it seems clear that we have the same right to say that no part of the money appropriated in this bill shall be expended upon a certain hospital, and that such a provision does not change existing law. The case I have cited arose in the first session of the Fifty-second Congress, and will be found upon page 2282 of the Congressional Record, and I submit that it is a direct the Congressional Record, and I submit that it is a direct authority upon this point.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, carrying forward the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, I would like to inquire of the Chair, if he should see fit to rule this provise out as a change of existing law, what would be the effect if, when the legislative bill comes up for consideration, making appropriation for the salaries of Congressmen, some member should rise and object to the appropriation of $5,000 a year as a violation of existing law? For years, since what is known as the "back-salary grab," the legal salary of Congressmen has been $7,500, but the appropriation bills have brought in from year to year only $5,000. Now, if it be competent for the Chair to rule out this proviso, would not the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, when the legislative bill is under consideration, be compelled, following that precedent, to decide that the action of the committee recomthat precedent, to decide that the action of the committee recommending an appropriation of only $5,000 for the committee recom-gressmen (which is all they expect to get and all they ought to have) would be a change of existing law?

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to my friend from New York that he is in error as to the existing provision of the statutes in reference to the compensation of members of Congress. The pay now ence to the compensation of members of Congress. The pay now fixed by law is only $5,000 per annum.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. You will find in the Revised Statutes that the salary is fixed at $7,500.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman will find that that provision was repealed, and $5,000 is now the salary as fixed by statute.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. No amendment of the law as I cited it appears in the Revised Statutes. I think it right that the salary should be what is now paid. I only mentioned the fact to show the absurdity of the proposition contended for here that this House has not the right to direct how its appropriations shall be expended. I believe that the motion of the committee ought be expended. I believe that the motion of the committee ought to be sustained. I am a member of the committee. I trust that the Chair will render his decision in this case in accordance with what I believe to be the parliamentary law and in conformity with the action of Congress upon matters of this kind. I trust, in other words, that the Chair will recognize the right of the House to limit the expenditure of the appropriations which it makes.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to a paragraph on page 281 of the Manual of last session:

Inasmuch as the House or the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may refuse to appropriate in a general appropriation bill for a particular object authorized by law, it is the well-settled practice that it may appropriate for a part of that object, and by a provision styled a "limitation," prohibit the expenditure of any of the appropriation for another part of the same general object. But a provision in an appropriation bill, or an amendment thereto, authorizing the expenditure of an appropriation or any part of it for an object not authorized by law, or in any manner diverting an appropriation to such object, is not a "limitation."

Then it goes on to explain what is not a limitation; but the present case comes under the first division of that decision.

Mr. DOCKERY (during a pause). I suggest that the remainder of the bill be read and that this paragraph be passed over with the privilege of returning to it. In the meantime the Chairman can consider the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very sorry to entertain different views from those entertained by the gentleman in charge of this bill, but as the Chair views this question, this being an appropriation for hospitals, a proposition to divert the money from that object is a change of existing law. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. With all respect to the Chair, I desire to make an appeal from that decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 69, noes 53. So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, in order to bring this matter fully before the House, I move to amend by inserting the words "except at the hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.;" so that we shall appropriate for other hospitals, and not for this one.

Mr. LITTLE. I renew the point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman-The CHAIRMAN. The Chair The Chair does not care to hear any further discussion.

I should like to cite an authority. Mr. LACEY.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear anything further on this point. Mr. LACEY. I de I desire to cite some authorities which have not been cited and which are directly in point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the question; and the Clerk will read.

Mr. LACEY. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair, so that we may have an opportunity to present this question properly. On this appeal, in addition to the decision that has already been cited by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], I wish to call attention to two other decisions.

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. Is there anything before the committee!

Mr. LACEY. My appeal is before the committee, unless the Chair declines to entertain it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman appealed.

Mr. LACEY. I took an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to argue the

Mr. LACEY. I desire to present the appeal to the committee. The Chair did not wish to be informed, but the Committee of the Whole would perhaps like to be.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman can inform the Chair, he may proceed

Mr. LACEY. I do not wish to undertake to inform the Chair further than to call attention to previous decisions, which the Chair declined to allow me to read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] offered an amendment, that the appropriations in the bill be applied to Government hospitals, except the one at Hot Springs, Ark. Upon that amendment a point of order was made, which was sustained by the Chair. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] appeals from that decision, and is proceeding now to show the committee why his appeal should be sustained.

Mr. LACEY. I trust I can have the attention of the committee, for this question is of much more importance than the question whether or not the Hot Springs Hospital shall be continued. It is a question of the right of this House to control the appropriations that it may hereafter pass for the public service; whether it is within our power to limit those appropriations or not; whether pointed out by law as public objects may be omitted from an appropriation bill. the House may determine that specific objects which have been

On this subject the decisions have been uniform until the one that the Chair made a few moments ago, and which is now the decision of the committee, because the committee has affirmed the action of the Chair. But the question comes up here again upon a motion in a somewhat different form; and I want to call the attention of the committee to two other decisions (in addition to those already cited by the gentleman from Maine), which seem to me conclusive on this question. I trust the Committee of the Whole will give attention to these citations, because they can not afford to go wrong on a question of this kind. I read from page 282 of the Digrest and from decisions in the present Commissions. 282 of the Digest, and from decisions in the present Congress and under the rules as they now stand:

To the Indian appropriation bill an amendment was proposed reducing the amount appropriated for salaries of certain inspectors in the Indian service from $3,000 to $2,000 per annum each. The point of order was made that said salaries were now fixed by law at $3,000 per annum, and that the present bill provided that the amounts appropriated were to be in full compensation for services; therefore, that the amendment would change existing law. The Chair overruled the point of order, and held that the amendment did not change existing law; that Congress had the right to make limitations and fix conditions upon such appropriations, the persons performing the service having the option of accepting or refusing the amounts so appropriated.

Now, in the Fifty-second Congress, under a rule very similar to the one at present in force, it was decided as follows, and I read from the Digest:

The following provision in the Army appropriation bill, namely, "That hereafter no money appropriated for Army transportation shall be used in payment for the transportation of troops and supplies for the Army" over certain lines of railroad which are indebted to the Government, was held subject to the point of order under this rule.

Why? Because it provided that "hereafter" it shall not be so used. That is a change of existing law. Then, in order to meet that exact point, the amendment was changed, the word "hereafter" was eliminated from the amendment, and the proposition was limited to the specific appropriation then under considera-tion. And we find in the Digest this provision:

An amendment providing that no money appropriated in the pending bill should be applied to the transportation of troops on certain railroads was held in order as being a limitation of expenditure, and not a change of existing law.

So, Mr. Chairman, we have had two decisions directly opposite to that rendered by the Chair in the present case. In the first session of this Congress we had one such decision and we have the decision in the Fifty-second Congress which I have just quoted.

Now, I make this appeal in good faith, in order that the decisions

Now, I make this appeal in good faith, in order that the decisions of the committee may be harmonious on such questions—questions which are vital to the conduct of the business of this House. It is not a question whether we shall have the Hot Springs hospital or not, but it is a question with reference to the proper method of procedure in the consideration of legislation on appropriation bills in this body.

The CHAIRMAN Before the gentleman from Lowe takes his

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman from Iowa takes his seat, the Chair desires to make this suggestion with reference to the pending point, that there is a distinction between the present appropriation and the questions raised to which the gentleman has referred.

has referred.

Here is a general appropriation bill making provision for hospitals without applying it to specific hospitals. Certain sums are appropriated, and then the proviso is suggested that no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used for a certain hospital, to wit, the hospital at Hot Springs. The Chair has held that to be a change of existing law.

Mr. LACEY. It is precisely the same as in the railroad case. The two points were identical.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the case is entirely different. If an amount of money was appropriated—so many thou-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair times the case is entirely different. If an amount of money was appropriated—so many thousand dollars—for a hospital at any point, so many thousand dollars for a hospital at another point, and so on, and no appropriation was made for Hot Springs at all, it would present a different question. That would be the kind of a case the gentleman presents. But where there is a general appropriation as in the tree. sents. But where there is a general appropriation, as in the present instance, you must have new legislation in order that the amount of money that you appropriate shall be diverted from any one of the hospitals which have been heretofore supported by the It is, as the gentleman will see, a different propo-Government. Government. It is, as the gentleman will see, a different proposition from where a salary is provided, where the salary at $3,000, for instance, and only $2,000 is appropriated. The reason that the Chair, in that instance, held that there was no change in existing law was because it was left optional with the party to accept the $2,000 or not, specifically holding that it did not affect the rights of the party to receive the $3,000, and collect it, if he saw proper to go into the Court of Claims for that

Mr. LACEY. But the Chair, with all due deference, loses sight of the decision in the case where there was a specific appropria-tion for the transportation of troops—a general appropriation, a lump sum to be used, in the appropriation bill, and an amendment providing that the money should not be paid out of the appropriation for carrying troops over a certain line, specifying the particular road. That was held to be a proper limitation on the appropriation, and not a change of existing law. When the word "hereafter" was inserted in the first instance in the amendment it was held to be a change of existing law. But when that word was eliminated it was held that the House had the right to determine eliminated it was held that the House had the right to determine how the money should be expended which it appropriated, and that the provision was in order.

Now the pending amendment is limited to a specific appropriation before the committee, that is to say, it provides that it shall not be expended at Hot Springs. Why, on what principle, or under what provision of the rules, can we not limit the appropriation? It is a general appropriation for general purposes, just as in the case I have illustrated in the Fifty-first Congress.

It is a power that is inherent in the House, which was so held in all the decisions heretofore, and it can not afford to relinquish or surrender it in this manner.

or surrender it in this manner.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question with his consent.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I was not present when the point of order was

Mr. CANNON. I was not present when the point of order was made upon which the committee voted a few minutes ago, and did not hear the decision of the Chair. I want to see if I understand exactly what is involved in the controversy.

Mr. PARKER. I offered the amendment, and I should like to explain it.

Mr. CANNON. - Well, in a moment. I merely want to ask a question. I have not found the general provision that the gentleman refers to. On what page is it?

Mr. LACEY. The provision is not in the printed bill. It is in an amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] at the close of this paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. Where do you mean?

Mr. PARKER. I believe we are on page 20.

Mr. LACEY. Will the Clerk read the proposed amendment?

Mr. PARKER. I merely inserted the words—

Except the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.

That goes in after the word "diseases," in line 15. Mr. HULL.

Mr. PARKER. Yes.
Mr. CANNON. Then I want to ask if the effect of that lan-Mr. CANNON. Then I want to ask if the effect of that language is to appropriate for the maintenance of hospitals other than the Hot Springs hospital?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.
Mr. MILES. Certainly.
Mr. LACEY. And you omit that hospital.
Mr. CANNON. And the effect of the language is to omit to appropriate for the hospital at Hot Springs?
Mr. PARKER. Yes, that is all.
Mr. LACEY. That is all there is to it.
Mr. CANNON. Well, it seems to me, with all due regard to the Chair, if that is the effect of it, that the Chair could not have understood the case as put to the committee.

understood the case as put to the committee.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, it was in deference to the Chair that I offered this last amendment; it was because I did not want to say that there was any doubt as between us as to the meaning of the previous amendment. I could see that the proviso that I had offered-looks as if it were a creation of law; but I have put it in different words. Here is a general appropriation for hospitals. It will cover this hospital unless some exception be made. The House has the right to say whether or not it will appropriate for this hospital, and I therefore, in deference to the opinion of the Chair and the decision of the House, have put it in other words, which simply omit this hospital from the appropriations made by this House. Thereby the House makes no ordinance of law against the hospital, but simply says that it has omitted this one and does not constitute it one of the hospitals for which appropriation is made by the House.

Provided, That no part of this money shall be expended for the Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs—

Now, the rule as to retrenchment does not at present apply. We can not argue on the old decisions as to that matter; but we can, under the general powers of this House—its constitutional powers under the general powers of this house—as constituting powers under all circumstances—say whether we will appropriate in an appropriation bill for a particular purpose. And if the bill has been drawn in such general terms that this matter can not be got before the House except by putting in an exception, it has the right to assert that exception as part of its constitutional power and to declare that in making that general appropriation it appropriates for everything except a certain thing. That is the point that I make.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair in sustaining the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] to the pending bill stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. McRAE. Before the vote is taken, I want to state that the decision quoted by my friend from Iowa [Mr. Lacey] was made during the Fifty-second Congress, when the rule under which we are now operating was not in force. That was a correct ruling then, but it is not applicable to the pending question under the present rules. I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that if the House by a general appropriation for the pay of Members and Senators should appropriate, as usual, a lump sum, but should except a particular member by name and say that he should not have his salary, the exception would be out of order, and I think the exception of this hospital is a violation of the spirit of the rule.

I think the Chair has correctly held that in this general appropriation for all the hospitals you can not except any particular one without changing the general law that allows the Secretary of War to distribute the lump sum, and if you do that you violate the rule which declares that there shall be no change of existing law in an appropriation bill.

I think it would be a great injustice to abandon or cripple this magnificent institution located at Hot Springs.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of sustaining the decision of the Chair

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a single word. I do not care whether this hospital at Hot Springs is appropriated for or not. I have no opinion whether it ought to be appropriated for, because I have not investigated the matter; but it does seem to me, as this matter is presented under the rules of the House, that we are liable to get a very awkward precedent here unless we are careful. It seems to me that this decision goes to the point that it is not in order by amendment in Committee of the Whole to test the sense of the committee whether we will withhold money to carry out any given law.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the decision of the Chair, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. All right; then I misunderstood the Chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The decision of the Chair is that this amendment which is offered is a change of existing law and in violation of the rule adopted by the House relating to this subject.
Mr. CANNON. Well, now, let me read it, and see if the Chair is right.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Were any points of order reserved against this bill?
Mr. HULL. All points of order were reserved.

Mr. HULL. All points of order were reserved. Mr. CANNON. I will read it:

Medical and hospital department-

I have no interest in the matter except not to get an awkward precedent, if it be an awkward precedent. I want to get right myself and in harmony with the Chair if I am mistaken.

Medical and hospital department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for general post sanitation, expenses of medical supply depots, pay of employees, medical care and treatment of officers and enlisted men of the Army on duty at posts and stations for which no other provision is made; for the proper care and treatment of cases in the Army suffering from contagious or epidemic diseases, except—

Now read the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Except in the Army and Naval Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.

Mr. CANNON. That does not change existing law. It does Mr. CANNON. That does not change existing law. It does not abolish the hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., if I understand the English language. This is a matter sounding of appropriations, and the amendment merely has the effect to withhold the appropriation for the coming fiscal year for this hospital. If it does not mean that I do not understand the English language. Now, then, so far as I have any recollection, the authorities are uniform. Let me read one that has not been read. I read from the

The failure of Congress to appropriate money, in the appropriation act for the current fiscal year, for an object authorized by law, does not repeal such law; and an amendment providing for such object is in order on an appropriation bill, notwithstanding its omission from the previous appropriation act.—Journal, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, page 1005.

Now, then, it seems to me that I can not multiply words about his matter. If the amendment is not adopted the money approthis matter. priated in this paragraph can be used for every army hospital— every one. If this amendment is adopted it can be used for the support of every army hospital the coming fiscal year except the one at Hot Springs; and there we make no appropriation. That is all I desire to say about it, and I do it, as the gentleman in the chair will understand, with hesitation, because I like to agree with the Chair. I think it is a mistake of the Chair, with all due deference to the Chair, upon the question of fact. It seems to me if ence to the Chair, upon the question of fact. It seems to me if the Chair will take this and look at it closely he will see that it the Chair will take this and look at it closely he will see that it does not change existing law, but has the effect merely of withholding the appropriation for the fiscal year.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I want to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield to me.

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understand that all this discussion has taken place on an appeal made by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HULL. On an appeal of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Of course I do not understand that from anything that has been said on the appeal, but recollect that he took an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa appealed from the decision the Chair made on the amendment offered by the gen-

mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, That is what I understand.
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And we have not voted upon that Mr. CANNON (to Mr. Stewart of New Jersey). Certainly.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Supposing that one of these points for which disinfectants is provided is abandoned, would there be any question that we could except that from the appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. Not in my judgment.
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does not that cover the rule?
Mr. CANNON. Certainly. I say this—that it has been uniformly held in Committee of the Whole that it is always competent by amendment to refuse to appropriate to carry out any law. This Congress might adjourn, so far as the rules of the House are concerned, without appropriating a cent of money. That is a power which has always been insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say, so that there may be no misunderstanding of the Chair's decision, that the Chair holds that the amendment changes existing legislation.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair will allow me, I will say respectfully that the Chair seems to me to place the question merely upon the manner of doing it. In other words, the suggestion of the Chair is that by doing in detail for fifty other institutions we can fail to do in detail for this one institution. Now, I think we can in one wholesale provision do for the fifty others and except this one.

Mr. HULL. If the Chair will indulge me in an additional word, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the language of the appropriation bills heretofore passed providing for this hospital. In those bills this language is used: "Including the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark." The amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] changes just one word. That amendment reads: "Except the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark," and the question for the committee to determine is whether we have the power to change one word in an appropriation bill if a point of order is made upon it.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to see whether I understand this point or not. I understand the Chair to hold that this amendment changes existing law because it changes a general appropriation by making an exception. What I want to know is, Where is the general appropriation to which the Chair refers? Is it in this bill?

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that.

is, Where is the Is it in this bill?

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a member of the House has no right to cross-examine the Chair.

[Laughter.]
Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I think a member of the House who lacks information on any particular subject may seek light from the Chair. [Laughter.] The CHAIRMAN.

This bill makes a general appropriation for

The CHAIRMAN. This bill makes a general appropriation for all these institutions.

Mr. DALZELL. But the pending bill can make no general appropriation until it has passed. The question now is whether or not we shall make a general appropriation in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It seeks to make a general appropriation.

Mr. DALZELL. Exactly; but this bill has the same right to make a special appropriation that it has to make a general appropriation, and there can be no change of existing law in this case when the question is whether or not this provision shall be law. That is the question now before the committee, and if I understand the Chair—and I went to understand him—he is treating what is the Chair-and I want to understand him-he is treating what is proposed to be enacted into law as if it were already enacted into law; whereas the real question is whether we shall make a general appropriation or whether we shall make a special appropriation in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question to the committee

Mr. LACEY. Before the question is submitted let me suggest one further point. This committee would have the right to strike out this entire appropriation. Now, does not the greater include the less; does not the right to strike out the entire appropriation for army hospitals include the right to strike out the appropria-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] offered an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 20, in line 15, after the word "diseases," insert the words "except the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made against that amendment by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE], and the Chair sustained the point. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has appealed from the decision of the Chair. The question now is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 57, noes 84.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 57 and the noes are 84. The decision of the Chair is overruled, so the amendment is in order, ment is in order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the adoption of this amendment, and I want to state a few additional reasons. Upon investigation, I find that the amount of money expended at this hospital in 1896 was $3,600. I find that out of 43 completed rheumatic patients, 36 went back to the service from the hospital cured. There were 80 in all during the year 1896, and 36 of them were cured of rheumatism, and a great many others were cured and improved of other diseases. Now, it does seem to me that this small pittance should be allowed to go to this hospital, which was established at the instance of men who were supposed to be the special friends of the soldier.

This hospital is a monument to the memory of that gallant soldier, Gen. John A. Logan, of Illinois. It was built almost exclusively at his instance during his public service in Congress. I regret very much to see the rule of strict economy begin at this

I regret very much to see the rule of strict economy begin at this point, when at best there will be a saving of but little over $3,000, because the Government employees who are there, the hospital nurses and others, will continue to draw their salaries, if not at

Hot Springs at some other post. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Payne] chose a while ago to pass some animadversions upon the people of Hot Springs. I do not know why the gentleman should have felt called on to do so, but I learn that fifteen or twenty years ago, when the town had a few sports in it, some of them given to playing poker and such games, looking out for "suckers," the gentleman visited Hot Springs. [Laughter.] I do not know what happened to him there [laughter], but I can assure him that he will encounter no such dangers if he will return now. [Laughter.]

At that time the town was a small place. Now it is a beautiful

At that time the town was a small place. Now it is a beautiful city of 18,000 people, with splendid police regulations, and no visitor, not even from New York, need be uneasy. Then the Government property was a mere waste. Now it is a valuable property and is of real interest and value to the Government. The money that has been appropriated for the improvement of Hot Springs has been more than reimbursed. More than $100,000 of the property of the United States was sold at one offering, and more than $100,000 of it remains a part of the general reservation. The people of Hot Springs are not different from the people of any other gits of this country.

The people of Hot Springs are not different from the people of any other city of this country.

I do not know why my friend wants to "jump" indiscriminately upon the people of Hot Springs. I know many of those people personally. The statement of the gentleman that they are a progressive people is true. I would add that they are an honest people, an industrious people, a people who love their city, a people who are proud of the Government reservation at that place, proud of the description of the waters that flow from who are proud of the Government reservation at that place, proud of its adornments, proud of the efficacy of the waters that flow from those mountains, proud of the hospital that stands as a monument to General Logan, who often enjoyed the benefits of these waters. They believe that this institution, which could be worth so much to the Army, ought not to be stricken down, but should be perpetuated. No better people, no grander citizenship exists anywhere. For intelligence, for patriotism, for morality they will compare favorably with any citizenship in the nation.

In the statement which I read a few moments are when some

In the statement which I read a few moments ago when some gentlemen who are here now were not present, the Surgeon-General indicates that it is hard to make the surgeons of the Army understand the curative powers of these waters and the splendid facilities of this institution. He recommends, therefore, a relaxafacilities of this institution. He recommends, therefore, a relaxation of the present regulations, so that persons suffering from the diseases for which these waters are so valuable may go to that institution before their diseases have so far progressed as to render their cure doubtful. I speak the truth, as it will be confirmed by the declaration of every man of medical learning who has investigated the subject, when I say that the waters of the Hot Springs are a specific—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I should like to occupy a few moments more.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more. He has reached a very interesting point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Arkansas to proceed for five minutes longer? The Chair

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, as I was about to remark, every learned man in the profession of medicine who has investigated this subject agrees that the waters of Hot Springs are a specific for rheumatism, neuralgia, and for other diseases to which, unfortunately, humanity is heir. Persons whose diseases can not be reached by any other remedies go to the city of Hot Springs, halt and lame, and after remaining there a comparatively short time are able to "take up their beds and walk" as of old.

A MEMBER. Do they have to drink the water, or is it applied externally? Mr. LITTLE. Mr. LITTLE. They drink the water, and they bathe in it. Those waters are charged with medicinal qualities which will cure afflicted humanity when nothing else will. Rheumatism and neuafflicted humanity when nothing else will. Rheumatism and neuralgia are diseases peculiarly prevalent in the Army; and for those diseases these waters are practically a specific, to say nothing about other diseases for which the efficacy of the waters is well recognized. For the diseases peculiar to the soldier on account of his exposure to the weather and the other hardships which he endures these waters are almost a specific. Of 43 such cases received at that institution in 1896, 36 went away cured, and the parties remained well, according to the report of the Surgeon-General

Now, if this institution were costing the Government its millions, how, it this institution were costing the Government its millions, there might be objection to appropriating money for its maintenance; but the expenditure last year was only $3,600.

Mr. HULL. Was not that for the payment of employees only?

Mr. LITTLE. That was for medicine and other expenses, exclusive of the pay of regular Government employees. Of course it does not include pay of officers, nurses, etc., because they are on the pay roll. the pay roll.

Why is there not more effort to enlarge the usefulness of this hospital, which can be done without any serious outlay, and to extend the opportunities for receiving the treatment furnished there? The Surgeon-General says that the facilities are not exceeded elsewhere in the United States. This being true, I say that instead of attempting to strike down this institution by withdrawing these small appropriations for its support, we had better make provision for opening the doors of the institution wider, so as to admit the suffering veterans of the various Soldiers' Homes of the United States. I believe that if this hospital, under proper legislation and with such additions as may be necessary, could be opened to those veterans—it is now opened only to the active members of the Army-if that institution could be opened to the rheumatic and the neuralgic sufferers who are to-day in our Soldiers' Homes and fast breathing away their lives for want of adequate treatment—if those sufferers could be carried to that institution for treatment and restored or relieved, as they might be, we should do honor to ourselves and do honor to the memory of John A. Logan, the man who really established that hospital, and do justice to the suffering man who contracted his diseases while in line of duty, defending his country.

It was said by the chairman of the committee that I did not seem to be the friend of the people of Hot Springs, or I would not insist on this proposition. Let me tell him that whether it would be best for the people of Hot Springs or not, I believe that the doors of this institution should not be closed. I do not believe the institution apply to be presed over to the Secretary of the Interior institution ought to be passed over to the Secretary of the Interior to be by him leased to private parties. We have now our thousands of bath tubs open to the suffering public. We have our pools open to those who are unable to pay for medicinal treatment; and 75 per cent of the poor unfortunate creatures who go there to take advantage of those waters leave the city healed and return to bless their homes and love their country. [Applause.]

homes and love their country. [Applause.]
[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, only a few words in reply to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE]. He has dealt largely in sentimental considerations, but this is simply a practical question. The Surgeon-General of the Army, after paying his tribute to the splendid facilities at Hot Springs for the treatment of disease, acknowledges that we can not get the patients there. The Secretary of War appointed a commission to investigate this question. The officers went to Hot Springs and made a thorough investigation, and the result of their findings is crystallized in the report of the Secretary of War. of the Secretary of War.

I notice that on this question the division of votes in the Committee of the Whole has been somewhat on party lines. The gentleman who submits this report to the Congress of the United States is a Democrat. This is not a party question; and I want to call the attention of the House again to the language of the Secretary of War. He says:

The experience gained in carrying on the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., does not appear to have sustained expectations in regard to its value to the officers and men of the Army and Navy, nor do those expectations appear to be realizable.

In another place he says:

It does not seem that the establishment should be maintained by the War Department. I therefore recommend that authority be granted by Congress for its transfer to the Interior Department and lease for private use, the same as building sites and spring-water privileges on the Government Hot Springs Reservation are now leased. If this is done, a considerable revenue should be derived, and the hospital and Army appropriations somewhat relieved.

I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact: That I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact: That with 1 surgeon, 1 assistant surgeon, 12 members of the Hospital Corps, and the large number of civilian employees necessary to keep up the grounds, and with the large drafts made on the Army appropriation bill every year for medical supplies, they had an average of about 20 patients only this last year. The Secretary of War tells us in his report that if you want to care for them at Hot Springs, as a matter of economy for the Government you could keep them—every one of them—at a first-class hotel and employ the best medical attendance in the United States for a less sum than you have been paying to keep up this hospital—a hospiemploy the best medical attendance in the United States for a less sum than you have been paying to keep up this hospital—a hospital to which patients will not go.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there should be no division of sentiment on a question of this character. It seems to me that it should have been transferred as we suggested. That, of course, is past now and can not be undone. But I believe that at least there should be a limitation put on the provisions of the bill, to show the people at Hot Springs that they can no longer depend on show the people at Hot Springs that they can no longer depend on the Government of the United States for keeping up this utterly mseless place for the care of persons who will not resort to it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Did not the Committee on Military Affairs report in favor of keeping this up?

Mr. HULL. No, sir. The committee reported against it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I thought the design of the com-

Department in the Army, established heretofore, and would have included Hot Springs—that is to say, it would include the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs. But this year we left that out and put in a proviso that this hospital should be abandoned and turned over to the Interior Department. We did not make, therefore, the usual appropriation for it.

The provision that the committee put in the bill, however, was stricken out on the point of order on the ground that it changed existing law. I then offered an amendment providing that no part of the money appropriated should be used at Hot Springs. That was ruled out by the Chair, and the Chair was sustained by the committee by a vote of some 69, I think, to about 53. My assothe committee by a vote of some 69, I think, to about 53. My associate on the committee from New Jersey then offered the amendment that is now pending, excepting the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs from the operation of this appropriation, which will reach the point that we have in view—the point we are trying to reach—in a very much worse way, however, than by the adoption of the provision we had incorporated in the bill.

For my own part, and I think I may speak for the entire committee and the War Department, and all those who are familiar with the workings of this institution, this limitation is entirely proper and should be placed upon the bill.

Mr. HUBBARD. Let me ask the gentleman when this hospital was established?

pital was established?

pital was established?

Mr. HULL. In 1882.

Mr. HUBBARD. By what means are patients sent to that hospital?

Mr. HULL. They are sent by the Army. They can apply and go there on a special order sending them if they desire it.

Mr. HUBBARD. In view of the fact that it is a well-understood fact that the Hot Springs hospital is particularly adapted to the treatment of rheumatic and neuralize diseases, it seems to me it should not be abolished, and perhaps the medical board did not take into consideration that fact in their recommendation. Let me ask the gentleman how far this is from the next hospital?

Mr. HULL. The medical board does not recommend this. It is the recommendation of the Secretary of War. There are hospitals at all of the army posts; every army post has one.

Mr. HUBBARD. How far from Hot Springs is the next hospital?

A MEMBER. Does this also include patients from the Navy?
Mr. HULL. Originally they had a few patients from the Navy, but for years past none have come to the institution from the Navy. And although the law authorizes the appointment of a surgeon of the Navy to look after the sailors, it has been inoperative for some years, because there were no patients, and the surgeon has not been detailed because of that fact.

on has not been detailed by the sentleman from Iowa allow WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly, if the committee will permit.

Mr. WASHINGTON. There is no law now by which patients can be compelled to go to this hospital if they do not choose to go

Mr. HULL. None whatever.
Mr. WASHINGTON. Then if we are compelled to keep it open, it may stand idle, without a single patient, and yet this expenditure of public money will go on?
Mr. HULL. Undoubtedly; that is correct.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I understand the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, polydy is entitled to admission to this hospital but soldiers?

mobody is entitled to admission to this hospital but soldiers?

Mr. HULL. Only soldiers and sailors.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But I understand the gentleman to say that no patients from the Navy have been received there to say that no patients from the Navy have been received there for some years?

Mr. HULL. That is correct. None have entered.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And no soldiers unless they are sent from other places?

Mr. HULL. None; and they decline to go there. I would infer from a speech made on the other side that the impression prevails that there was something connected with the location of this hospital which induced the committee to make the recommendations they have made. That is incorrect. It is solely a matter of economy.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It has nothing to do, then, with the people or the location?

Mr. HULL. Nothing whatever. It is simply carrying out a

Mr. HULL. Nothing whatever. It is simply carrying out a recommendation which was made by the officials in charge, who are thoroughly informed as to the existing conditions and necessities of that branch of the service.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It is dispensing with a post hospital that has become unnecessary.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I thought the design of the committee was only to limit the expenditure.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania misapprehends the bill. The appropriation here is for the Medical and Hospital service, I understand.

Mr. HULL. That is all.

Mr. KIEFER. Not for veterans of the late war. Mr. HULL. It is a Regular Army hospital, the same as any other post hospital.

Mr. LITTLE. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, line 15, after the word "diseases," insert: "And the supply of the Army and Navy General Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark."

Mr. HULL. That is not a substitute, but we can vote it down easier than we can discuss the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. I intend the substitute to come at the same point where the amendment is proposed. I offer it as a substitute for the amendment.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order—Mr. HULL. Oh, let us vote it down. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Iowa make the point of order?

Mr. HULL. I did not make any point of order.
Mr. TRACEY. I made the point of order that it is not a substitute for the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on

Mr. LITTLE. I think it is a substitute. It is a question as to what disposition shall be made of the money. One is that it shall not be appropriated and the other is that it shall.

Mr. TRACEY. I do not care to discuss the matter, Mr. Chair-

Mr. LITTLE. The House has decided that a good many things are in order

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will overrule the point of order and will put the question on the substitute.

Mr. LITTLE. I want to be heard for just a moment on the substitute. I want to answer the question which my friend Mr. HUB-BARD asked of the chairman of the committee a moment ago, as to how men were admitted to this hospital. They are admitted at the instance of the local surgeons in charge of the army posts wherever they may be, or of the hospitals at other points. Now, the Surgeon-General says that—

The special advantages afforded by the Government in this general hospital in the treatment of the diseases mentioned in circular No. 16 do not seem to be appreciated properly by medical officers of the Army.

Mr. HUBBARD. That is just it exactly.
Mr. LITTLE. I say if proper regulations could be had we could fill this hospital to overflowing. It is not idle. They treated 80 patients there last year and cured 60 leaving 17 uncompleted cases. The Surgeon-General says further:

It is believed that if cases suitable for treatment at the springs were sent earlier in the progress of the disease many serious complications might be prevented and a larger percentage of recoveries be effected.

The Surgeon-General has not recommended the abolishment of this hospital. He recommends its improvement, and it ought to be done in justice to the country and in justice to the soldiers. I desire to insert the following extract from Circular No. 16, issued by the War Department, showing how these waters are estimated, and then ask if this hospital should be abandoned:

and then ask if this hospital should be abandoned:

In accordance with the provisions of General Orders, No. 60, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, D. C., September 3, 1892, the following information is published to the Army:

The Army and Navy General Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., is designed for the treatment of officers and enlisted men who are ill with diseases for which the Hot Springs waters seem better suited than any methods of treatment available at their respective stations. Relief may reasonably be expected at the Hot Springs in the following conditions:

In the various forms of gout and rheumatism after the acute or inflammatory stage; neuralgia, especially when depending upon gout, rheumatism, metallic or malarial poisoning; paralysis not of organic origin; the earlier stages of locomotor ataxia, or tabes: the early stages only of Bright's disease; diseases of the urinary organs; functional diseases of the liver; gastric dyspepsia not of organic origin; chronic diarrhea; catarrhal affections of the digestive and respiratory tracts; chronic skin diseases, especially the squamous varieties, and chronic conditions due to malarial infection.

Speaking generally, treatment by the Hot Springs water may be said to stimulate all the secretions and the organic functions, to promote digestion and assimilation, and to favor tissue metamorphosis and excretion, thereby relieving internal congestions, stimulating blood making, increasing the appetite, and favoring new and healthy tissues at the expense of the old and inactive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE]. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

LITTLE) there were—ayes 59, noes 72.

Accordingly the substitute was rejected.

The amendment offered by Mr. Parker was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as fol-

For the expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including absolutely necessary meteorological instruments for use in target ranges; telephone apparatus (excluding exchange service) and maintenance of the same; maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise, $15,000.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to come in after line 2, on page 25, after the word "dollars."

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 25, line 2, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "Provided, That department commanders may detail two enlisted men from each army post in their respective departments, under such arrangements as they may deem best, to report to the chief signal officer of the department for instruction and duty."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not raise any point of order on that, but I do not see any necessity for it. Nothing has been brought to the attention of our committee to indicate the necessity for it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no offered will be considered as adopted. If there be no objection, the amendment as

There was no objection.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

To defray the contingent expenses of the Commanding-General's Office, $1,750.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert in lieu of that the words:

To defray the contingent expenses of the Commanding-General's Office, in his discretion, $1,750.

It simply inserts the words "in his discretion." Those words have been in every appropriation bill for several years past, including that of last year, and the change has arisen simply from copying the words of the estimate instead of the words of the bill of last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25 strike out lines 4, 5, and 6 and insert in lieu thereof the words "To defray the contingent expenses of the Commanding General's Office, in his discretion, $1,750."

Mr. HULL. The only change which that makes in the bill is to insert the words "in his discretion."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. With the consent of the committee, I should like to return to page 23, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. HULL. Suppose we get through with the bill, and then I will not object.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.
Mr. HULL. Now the gentleman from New Jersey desires to return to page 23 for what purpose?
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I move to strike out from line 16 to line 21, with reference to firing the morning and evening salutation, as a useless and expensive practice.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that will not be done.

Mr. MILNES. How much will it strike out?

Mr. HULL. Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, that is about the only semblance of war we have, and we ought to keep it up.

Mr. HULL. Let us have a vote upon it. We can vote it down.

Mr. HULL. Let us have a vote upon it. We can vote it down. The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to surike out of the bill, wherever it occurs, the amount of the appropriation of last year. It was put in the bill simply for the convenience of members. The CHAIRMAN. It will be so ordered, unless objection is made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLUE. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question, if he will permit me. In these blanket provisions, which cover very large amounts, in which there is no specific amount given, have the committee investigated those to ascertain whether the amounts are correct or not in the estimate?

Mr. HULL. They are exactly the estimates submitted by the ecretary of War, except where we have cut them down.
Mr. BLUE. Are those items of the estimate made singly or in aggregate?

Mr. HULL. They are made in the aggregate, as you will see from the Book of Estimates. We had the generals of the Army before us, who testified as to the amount needed in each appropriation. Now, I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments back to the House with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9638) and had directed him to report the same back with amendments, and that as amended the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. LITTLE. I desire a separate vote on the amendment referring to the hospital at Hot Springs, on page 20 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question then will be on the other amend-

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Hot Springs amend-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. TERRY. I would like to say a few words.
Mr. HULL. I object to any further discussion.

previous question is ordered.

The SPEAKER. There has been debate.

Mr. HULL. The matter has been debated in the committee. object to any further discussion of it now. We want to pass

Mr. HULL. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LITTLE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 42.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House do now adjourn. [Cries gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER put the motion.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Before the vote is announced, the gentleman from Arkansas says he only wants a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. HULL. But we can not get a quorum.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated. Mr. PLATT. What was the request?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will please repeat his request.

Mr. ALLEN. They are resolutions adopted by the central committee of the Democratic party of Cook County, Ill. They are very brief and very important, as I view it, and I ask that they may be read and appropriately referred.

Mr. PLATT. Resolutions of all political bodies before the country are important, I suppose, but I do not think we ought to put them in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator objects, I will take the resolutions and see that they get into the RECORD at the proper time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there further petitions and memorials?

Mr. CHANDLER. I present the petitions of James Arrington and 31 other citizens of Cherokee County, Ala.; of H. D. Wright and 28 other citizens of Cherokee County, Ala.; of J. S. Harper and 37 other citizens of Cherokee County, Ala.; of R. T. Ewing and 46 other citizens of Cherokee County, Ala.; of W. M. Wilson and 40 other citizens of Cherokee County, Ala.; of J. T. Milner and 63 other citizens of Dekalb County, Ala.; of John A. Milner and 63 other citizens of Talladega County, Ala.; and of W. A. Smith and 20 other citizens of Dale County, Ala.; setting out at full length that by reason of the system of election that exists in the State of Alabama there is no lawful State government there elected by the people, and that Alabama has not really at this time a republican form of government.

These petitions are in aid of the resolution presented by the Sen-form of government.

These petitions are in aid of the resolution presented by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Allen], which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and reported favorably, and is now upon the Calendar. As the resolution is now upon the Calendar, I ask that these petitions may be received and laid on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. I beg to correct the Senator from New Hampshire. The resolution was brought up and voted on and defeated at the last session of Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator is mistaken about the defeat of the resolution.

defeat of the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. The resolution was defeated, having received 6 votes on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think that was on some motion to take it up, or some— Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. ALLEN. No.
Mr. CHANDLER. I remember, Mr. President, it was disposed of in some way by reason of an indiscreet speech made by the mover of the resolution, attributing motives to Senators upon this side of the Chamber which did not exist. I had forgotten that. But the resolution can be taken up at any time and acted upon.

Mr. ALLEN. I beg to correct the Senator from New Hampshire again. There was nothing said by the Senator from Nebraska respecting the motive inspiring the breasts of Senators on the other side until after the resolution was determined. I may say, however, in this connection, that I had a grave suspicion before the resolution was voted upon that it never would be acted upon in good faith by the other side of the Chamber with the exception of a few Senators a few Senators

Mr. CHANDLER. I repeat, that the Senator managed his resolution badly, and I leave the case there. But it is not beyond the hope of resurrection, if the Senator will now aid me in getting it up again and will present it to the Senate for a vote under more favorable conditions than he selected in bringing it up at the last session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petitions will lie on the table.
Mr. THURSTON. I present a petition of sundry sheep raisers of Nebraska, praying for the passage of the Dingley tariff bill.
I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance for postmortem consideration cyclone in October last in the State of Florida; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I move the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations, and pending the motion I desire to accompany it with a very brief statement.

Last fall a cyclone and tidal wave approached the coast of Florida and a wind storm perhaps 15 or 20 miles in width passed over the entire breadth of the State. It destroyed all the farms, blew down all the timber, destroyed all the turpentine farms, destroyed the crops, and left the people in that part of the State in entire destitution. destitution.

Contributions have been made liberally from the different societies, corporations, and individuals of the State, and some from abroad. There are still a large number of persons without houses to live in, without seed to plant for the coming year, without means of removing the fallen timber from their fields, and in a state of great destitution. The legislature does not meet until April, and that will be too late to enable them to plant their crops and work their farms for the coming year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWPORT, KY.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment to take up and consider House bill 9472, which simply corrects a mistake made in the act providing for a public building at the city of Newport, Ky. The original bill required the space of 50 feet to protect the building from fire. This House bill simply reduces that space from 50 to 40 feet, which is the law that obtains and applies in all cases. The bill is reported favorably upon by every member of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds who is in the city and I ask the Senate to allow apon by every member of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds who is in the city, and I ask the Senate to allow it to be considered now, in order that the Department may go on during the recess to locate the site.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1552) for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator would not object to unanimous consent after the morning hour. if I get an expectation to the constant of the constant of mous consent after the morning hour, if I get an opportunity to ask consent? Is not that the Senator's position?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, after the recess. I am perfectly willing for it to come up after the recess. I do not know about agreeing that it shall come up by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. In the morning hour.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the morning hour. I would be reasonable about it, but I should dislike to promise that I would give unanimous consent in the morning hour, because something else might be brought up that I would prefer to have considered. But really I have not had time to look into this measure since I have received the removement against it and I was not expecting it.

received the remonstrances against it, and I was not expecting it to come up just at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had intended to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill if objection should be made, but of course I always want to be extremely courteous to the Senator from Missouri, as he is always courteous to me. If the Senator wishes the bill to go over until after the recess, the misfortune on my part is that I shall not be here for nearly a month after the recess. If the Senator would endeaver to look into the bill between now and to-morrow, I should seek an opportunity to get consideration for it then.

Mr. HAWLEY. We have agreed to adjourn until Monday. Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that we are to adjourn from to-day until Monday. I shall have to accede, of course, to the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

SABINE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to place upon its passage the bill (S. 3303) to authorize the construction by the Kansas City, Shreveport and Gulf Railroad Company of a bridge across the Sabine River, between the States of Louisiana and Texas.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the order of business?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state that the bill was reported this morning favorably from the Committee on Commerce by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest]. It does not appear upon the Cal-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first case will be stated.

The bill (S. 1544) to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, was announced

Mr. HALE. That ought to go over, Mr. President.

READJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNTS OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 2570) to authorize the readjustment of the accounts of army officers who were graduates of West Point Military Academy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs emy was considered as in committee of the whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury, by his accounting officers, on appli-cation being made by any person, or his legal representative, an officer or ex-officer of the United States Army and a graduate of West Point, to readjust his accounts previously settled and paid under an erroneous construction of law as subsequently declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, and to pay any bal-ance which may be found due in accordance with the law appli-cable thereto as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases of Captains Morton and Watson against the United States

Mr. COCKRELL. There is an amendment which should have been offered to that bill, which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Davis] had in charge. It is in line 7, after the words "West Point," to insert "or who, being an enlisted man at the time of such commission, has been commissioned as an officer in the Reg-ular Army." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

MAJ. WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

The bill (S. 1731) for the relief of Maj. William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to William M. Maynadier $3,726.50, the amount paid by him into the Treasury of the United States in liquidation of a deficiency in his accounts as paymaster at Prescott, Ariz., caused by robbery committed by his clerk, D. D. Chandler, at Prescott, April 3, 1876, as shown by the finding and report of a board of inquiry appointed by General Kautz, commanding that military department, to investigate the circumstances of the loss; and also the further sum of $100 paid by him for the arrest of Chandler, the restoration of both sums having been recommended by the board of inquiry.

PROPOSED RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in accordance with notice yester-day given by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Chandler], I now move to take up the immigration bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States Mr. PALMER. I desire to inquire whether the amendment I proposed a few days ago is still pending—to strike out the word "fourteen" and insert "twenty-one?" I ask the status of that amendment at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Sewell] is pending. After that is disposed of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois will be considered.

Mr. QUAY. There is an important public bill on the Calendar to which I think there is no objection. It is Order of Business 628, and was reported by the Senator from California [Mr. Perkins], from the Committee on Education and Labor. I should be greatly obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts if he would permit me to call up that bill and have it passed. I think it will ead to no debate.

Mr. LODGE. I make no objection if there is to be no debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill (H. R. 9188) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital, but before concluding was interrupted by

Mr. ALDRICH. Is it asked that this bill shall be considered by unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it had better go over until after the holidays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed, the bill will go over. The immigration bill is before the Senate, the pending amendment being that submitted by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Sewell], which will be stated.

Mr. PASCO. I thought the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] was pending—to strike out the word

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator from Florida will allow me, I will offer the amendment, with a change in its phraseology. It may not be practical as it stands, and I desire to put it in different language.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated, after which the Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida [Mr.

Pasco].

The Secretary. In line 9, on page 3, after the word "language," in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out:

Except that an aged person, not so able to read and write, who is the parent or grandparent of an admissible immigrant may accompany or be sent for by such immigrant.

But an admissible immigrant over such age of 14 years may bring in with him or send for his wife or parent or grandparent or minor child or grand-child, notwithstanding the inability of such relative to read and write as aforesaid.

So that if so amended the clause will read:

All persons over 14 years of age who can not read and write the language of their native country or some other language, but an admissible immigrant over such age of 14 years, may bring in with him or send for his wife or parent or grandparent or minor child or grandchild, notwithstanding the inability of such relative to read and write as aforesaid.

Mr. PASCO. I understand this is the language I suggested to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that is the amendment the Senator showed me, and I make no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. The next amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The Secondary by Julius 7 on page 3 after the word "all" it.

The Secretary. In line 7, on page 3, after the word "all," it proposed to insert the word "male."
Mr. VEST. With the consent of the Senate, I will withdraw the amendment I offered. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out the word "fourteen" where it occurs and insert "sixteen," so as to make the age at which or above which a party can come into the United States as an immigrant 16 years.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 7 of the committee amendment, after the word "over," it is proposed to strike out "fourteen" and insert "sixteen;" so as to read:

All persons over 16 years of age who can not read and write, etc.

Mr. PALMER. If in order, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Missouri by striking out the word "fourteen" and inserting "twenty-one."

Mr. LODGE. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is to raise the age to 21 years. Am I correct? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to say, as I said the other day, that I regard that amendment as almost equivalent to a destruction of the object of the bill, and I trust that carrying the age to that point will not pass. I do not desire to discuss it.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I beg to say that the effect of this bill, if the word "fourteen" is retained, will be to practically separate families. Now, it may happen that a father may be able to read and write as required by the bill, and it may happen that the family will consist of male persons who have passed the age of 14 and are yet under the age of 21. The effect would be that the father who could read might himself be admitted into this country, and his children under 14 years of age might be admitted, but that the proper officers would be compelled to reject such of his children as were between the ages of 14 and 21. As I said on a former occasion, in most countries, especially in the countries from which we derive most of our institutions, the age of majority of children is 21, and the condition of pupilage continues until the

This bill as it now stands would present this remarkable state of facts, that the father himself being able to read and write, as required by the bill, his children under 14 years of age might be required by the bill, his children under 14 years of age might be admitted, but his children over 14 years of age and under 21, members of his family, for whose care and maintenance he would be responsible by the laws of all civilized countries, could not be admitted, and he would be compelled either to return with the whole family or he would be compelled to permit the return of his children between those ages to the country from which they came. In the family relation of a man of fair intelligence the nurture and parental care of the father over his children, in my judgment, would be worth more than mere literary training. I assume that the law now forbids the admission into this country of immoral persons. The law is familiar to members of the Senate. Now, the remarkable state of the case would be that the father, although qualified for admission under this law and all the statutes on the subject, would be compelled either to break up his family or return with his family to the country from which they came.

Such a consequence ought to be avoided in any bill passed by the American Congress. It ought not to be passed, because if we assume that the father has all the necessary qualifications of admission, and for reasons of either poverty or neglect, as the case may be—poverty might be supposed to be the reason—the father has been unable to educate his children, and he proposes to introduce them into this country, not 21 yet, but 15, 16, 17, 18, all years of parental care, he would be compelled under those circumstances to abandon the control of them, and compelled to abandon the advantages for which he may have brought his children to this advantages for which he may have brought his children to this country, the benefit of our free schools. I will not and can not, in my view of this case, consent to such a provision as would compel the father of an immigrant, possessing all the qualifications required by our laws, to abandon his children between 14 and 21 years of age, to give them up, and either return them to his native land, where there would be no provision made for their care, or himself to return, he being permitted by this proposed statute to himself enter the country and bring with him all his children under 14 years of age, but those who are between those ages he would be necessarily compelled to abandon or to abandon his hope, the hope that might have inspired his desire to emigrate to this country. This view of the ages seems to me to be absolutely. This view of the case seems to me to be absolutely conclusive on this subject.

I know the Senator said a few days ago that young men came to this country and may return. I believe where young men have sufficient enterprise and energy to emigrate from foreign countries to the United States, the mere spirit of adventure which dictates that migration furnishes an evidence that they are themselves good citizens, bad citizens being excluded by our existing

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I wish the attention of the Senator from Illinois a moment in order that I may ask him whether the troublewhich he has stated is not entirely obviated by the suggestion which I made the other day, that it will require only a few months' delay on the part of the father and the mother in coming here with children to enable them to instruct their children how to read and write either the English language or their native language? Does the Senator realize that this bill is no hardship upon his own statement of the case, because it can only exclude the children of this father and mother and delay them for a period of time sufficient to enable them to educate those children? Take the case of a father and mother, say 40 years of age. The law requires that that father and mother shall read and write, and the Senator does not propose to change that requirement. Now, here is a father and mother who can read and write, the parents of a family in Italy or in England. They want to come to this country. They have children land. They want to come to this country. They have children between the ages of 16 and 21 who can not read or write. They ought to have had their children taught to read and write, but they find that when they desire to come to this country they have not so taught them. Now, I ask the Senator if it is a hardship which would make him wish to amend this bill simply to say to that father and mother: "You can read and write; and now before coming to America you wait until your children can read and write your own language." That is my answer to the Senator from Illinois, as it was my answer to the Senator from Missouri the other day.

This is a mild bill; it is a weak bill, in the opinion of many of us, because it does not go far enough. It does nothing in the world but detain abroad in their own countries for a sufficient length of time the persons who want to come here so that they length of time the persons who want to come here so that they may obtain the simplest rudiments of education, to wit, the reading and writing of their own language.

Mr. President, this bill has been purposely made mild in order that it may receive the support of members of all political parties, and with the hope that it would go through the Senate without any objection from any quarter, in accordance with the pledges of both the great political parties of the country. I am confident the Senator from Illinois, who I know is astute in debate, acute in limitations and definitions, and strong in argument, will be mable to answer this argument.

ment, will be unable to answer this argument.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the remark of the Senator from New Hampshire goes upon the assumption that the father and mother have the means of educating their children and that they have the opportunity of doing so. It means that they will know what the laws of the United States are in that respect; it means an indefinite delay in the matter of emigration. My own observation is that emigration very often is the result of necessity or the result of an ambitious and earnest spirit and desire for the well-being of of an ambitious and earnest spirit and desire for the well-being of the emigrant. I can see no reason, assuming that the law is already in force which excludes improper persons, for a regulation like this, aside from its injustice.

I believe in the right of expatriation. I believe in the right of emigration. I believe that this world was made by the Almighty, and that these attempts at controlling the movements of good people.

and that these attempts at controlling the movements of good peo-ple are wrong. I admit the right of any Government to exclude from its borders persons of bad character, persons addicted to crime, dangerous persons of all classes, but I want to say that I have no idea in the world that the class of persons whom it is nave no idea in the world that the class of persons whom it is really desirable to exclude from the country will be affected by this bill. I understand the dangerous classes more generally read and write than the classes which are not so dangerous. I claim, however, the right of any person of good character and industrious habits to come into the United States at his pleasure, and bring with him his wife and his children. I believe in that right. While I would consent to any other limitation aside from that of good character and industrious habits, still I would not consent to the separation of families which this bill would necessarily

The Senator says let them wait a while. It is not always easy for the persons who wish to come to the United States to wait. It would be, whatever else may be said about it, an exclusion of those who are illiterate, persons who have every other merit than the merit of literacy. Such persons it is the purpose by this act to exclude, and to impose no other requirement than that they shall read and write. I feel that, while the proposition of the Senator is plausible, it has no merit whatever, no foundation in Senator is plausible, it has no merit whatever, no foundation in justice or reason.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am sorry the Senator from Illinois does not recognize the merit of my suggestion. I will ask the Senator a question. Suppose a father and mother, who can read and write, in order to come to this country from a foreign country, have bright children between the ages of 16 and 21—how long does the Senator think it would take the father and mother to teach those children to read and write? The Senator says they have not the means to do it. They have in the family the personal ability to do it. Now, I ask the Senator how long it would take the father and mother to qualify those children to come over with them and and mother to qualify those children to come over with them, and and mother to qualify those children to come over with them, and if they can read and write, which is what we propose to require, and have children between the ages of 16 and 21 whom they have not taught to read and write, is it not a very useful and wholesome law for us to say to them by our statute, by our notice to them before they come, that they have neglected a duty, which duty they shall fulfill before they take ship for this land of liberty and intelligence? I think the Senator will see that it is a recommendation. and intelligence? I think the Senator will see that it is a very slight requirement which is imposed in this case, and that the Senator ought not to insist upon his amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to observe that this is not really so important a matter as it seems, for it is almost never that you would find two parents, father and mother, both able to read and would find two parents, rather and mother, both able to read and write and their children unable to do so. Once in a very great while it may happen, but that is not the rule in such matters.

Mr. LODGE. I hope we may have a vote on the amendment, and I trust it will be defeated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Palmer] to the amendment of the Senator from Misseuri [Mr. Palmer]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The vice-president to the amendment was rejected.

The vice-president submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MORGAN. What is the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, it is proposed to strike out "four-teen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen;" so as to read: All persons over 16 years of age who can read and write, etc.

Mr. VEST. I understand there is no opposition to that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I make no objection to it. I would rather have it "fourteen," but I will not press the point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Is there any other amendment pending now?
Mr. HILL. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Elkins] offered an amendment the other day.
Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment which I think the com-

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment which I think the committee will accept.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Sewell], which has been agreed to, will have to be changed in one part. The Secretary will read that portion of the amendment, and the Senate can take such action as it desires.

The Secretary. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey reads as follows:

But an admissible immigrant over such age of 14 years, etc.

Mr. LODGE. If there is no objection, I ask that that may be changed so as to conform to the amendment just made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That course will be pursued, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Now let my amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as an additional section the following: This act shall not apply to persons arriving in the United States from any port or place in the Island of Cuba: Provided, That such persons have here-tofore been inhabitants of that island.

Mr. LODGE. I make no objection to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. PLATT. Why should we make a distinction as to countries?

Mr. ALDRICH. Can we do it under the treaties?
Mr. PLATT. If we are going to restrict the immigration from one country and not restrict it from another country with these conditions, it seems to me there should be some explanation at least. I am not sure now that it would not interfere with the most-least. I am not sure now that it would not interfere with the most-favored-nation clause in treaties.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama whether, from the considerations which influence him and which appeal to me in this case, if we are to admit Cubans without this qualification, we would not also be bound from motives of humanity to make an exception in favor of the Armenians. Now they are coming to our doors. They are not able to come in under existing law. Some of them are sent back. Can we open our doors through special statutes to all the oppressed peoples of the earth or make exceptions in their behalf to our general laws as to the admission of immigrants? I suggest to the Senator from Alabama whether we can do that wisely.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in undertaking to provide for the refugees driven from the Island of Cuba by cruelties which we all recognize, and which the President's message fully states and portrays, I confined myself to their case because I did not know how to formulate a general rule for the admission of refugees from Armenia or from any other country where persecutions gees from Armenia or from any other country where persecutions may prevail.

It has been the theory of our Government in regard to immigration, as I understand it, that we open the doors of hospitality to all the citizens of the nations of the earth where they feel that to all the citizens of the nations of the earth where they feel that they are oppressed in their own country. This is a welcome home to the oppressed, as I understand, and perhaps that feature of the bill may be in conflict with those provisions. I have no desire at this time to make a criticism of that sort. But the demand, on the ground of humanity, is so obvious in respect of Cuba at this moment of time that we can not pass the pending bill as it is without doing violence to those instincts which cause us to welcome to our shores the refugees from the most tyrannical of all oppressors, for the safety of their lives as well as for other reasons.

This bill turns an immigrant back at the seaboard and requires him to be able to read the Constitution of the United States from selected slips. Of course he has to be familiar with the whole instrument in order to read it. He must read it in some language, either his own or some other. Very likely the Constitution of the United States has never been translated into many of the languages which are prominent in Christendom; therefore, of course guages which are prominent in Christendom; therefore, or course a man would find more difficulty in educating himself at home on the subject of the Constitution of the United States and in attaining the ability to read the peculiar idiom that is found in the technical expressions in that very important and peculiar instrument. So I thought we would not do any wrong to any human being or to any nation in the world, or to the favored-nation clause in a treaty with any government in the world, by making this exception in favor of Cuba.

We can not afford, Mr. President, to turn back a Cuban who escapes from that island now, and say that he shall not put his foot on this shore. After he has attempted to flee from that country we can not afford to return him to the merciless grasp of the men whom he has escaped. I could go over a number of instances personally known to me where that sort of restriction would be extremely cruel, unjust, and un-American. I do not believe, of course, that this would be making a discrimination as to the favored-nation clause against any nation in the world. If it would, that is sufficient reason for an act of Congress to abolish the would, that is sufficient reason for an act of Congress to abolish the favored-nation clause, which I think ought to be abolished anyhow, out of all the treaties we have. That would be reason enough. But how can any enlightened nation in the world, when she is inflicting upon her people in a time of public, general insurrection, if you please to call it such, the terrible evils and consequences that are visited upon the Cubans, complain that we have provided in advance that those people shall have refuge in America if they choose to come here? choose to come here?

I do not see how any nation could make complaint, nor do I see that it would be in the slightest degree just if it should be made. On the contrary, a nation who would make a complaint of that kind would subject herself to criticism that ought to abolish her from the family of nations. Would Turkey be heard if she were kind would subject herself to criticism that ought to abolish her from the family of nations. Would Turkey be heard if she were to complain, in the event that we pass the proposed statute, that the Armenians who have fled from her borders are not allowed the same privileges that Cubans are? Certainly not. Would England or France complain because we undertook to extend hospitality to the Cubans or Armenians? Certainly not. So the question is immaterial, and we can make this exception in favor of Cuba without in the slightest degree interfering with any of our foreign relations or the general clause about the most favored nation. A nation can not be considered as being favored by having an exportantly to prevent its people from coming to our shores. ing an opportunity to prevent its people from coming to our shores when the persecutions that drive them here are of such a character as those which exist in Cuba or Armenia.

That is my reason for introducing the amendment, and not to make a discrimination.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. Will my colleague allow me to make a suggestion? It seems to me it is unwise to accomplish the purpose the Senator from Alabama has in mind, which everybody who knows him will be assured is a humane and wise purpose, by a general provision of this kind. I think my colleague will see that it is hardly wise to exempt persons from this entire bill by permanent legislation merely on the ground of the place from which they come, so that any ignorant person, any criminal person, if they are affected by this act and not by the previous act, or any pauper coming from Cuba will be admitted.

Now, what I should like to suggest to my honorable friend the Senator from Alabama, and to my colleague, would be a provision like this:

"That the President of the United States," or the Secretary of that the President of the United States, or the Secretary of State, or whatever public official should have the discretion—I think the President of the United States probably, if it is to be permanent through all time—"may in his discretion provide for the admission of any immigrants who are flying from war or political oppression abroad on being satisfied that they are persons of good character, seeking an asylum here in good faith."

Perhaps my language is not accurate enough, but I should my-self like such a provision very much better than the Senator's amendment, applicable to a particular district of country and excepting persons coming from that district of country for all time from all the constraints of the act.

time from all the constraints of the act.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to say a few words to the senior Senator from Massachusetts, if I am not interrupting his colleague. I thought over a general provision of that kind and tried to frame it so as to fit the case, to meet the very arguments which are suggested now, but I could not do it without putting it into the hands of the President of the United States to say what people should be admitted here and what people should be excluded. While I certainly have no reason to expect or believe or think that the present Executive would have any motive whatever in a matter of this kind other than to act with perfect fairness about it, the time may arrive when the question would be raised upon the Executive as to the propriety of his action in admitting certain people from certain countries and refusing others. More than Executive as to the propriety of his action in admitting certain people from certain countries and refusing others. More than that, for the President of the United States to say by proclamation in regard to a particular nation, "We admit the people from that nation, because they are persecuted at home," is casting a diplomatic slur upon the condition of those people in their own government, which would be extremely unpleasant, and might lead to very unpleasant consequences. It would put the President upon very serious inquiry as to whether he should recognize the complaints of those people against their own government.

In looking through our treaty with Spain I found ample reason for introducing this amendment in the form in which I have presented it. Thousands of refugees have come from Cuba to the sented it. Thousands of refugees have come from Cuba to the United States, so many, indeed, that the President has mentioned it in his message almost in a complaining way. But they are here, and amongst our people they are very welcome, and I supterm in the message almost in a complaining way. But they are here, and amongst our people they are very welcome, and I suppose that if we had the power to extradite them, or if it was our duty to extradite a single one of them to Cuba, to answer his responsibility to the Spanish Government, the people of the United States would almost rise in revolt before they would see it done. It would be a very much more distressing state of public sentiment than occurred many years ago when fugitive slaves were being captured in the Northeast, in Pennsylvania and other States, and returned to the South. The sentiment of the people of the country would be so violently opposed to an extradition of that kind that I think no Executive would be prepared to favor it, or even to attempt to execute it. But the treaty expressly provides that there shall be no extradition for political offenses.

Now, no man who lives in Cuba now—and the amendment confines its application to those who live there now or have heretofore inhabited Cuba—escapes from the island to-day unless he comes driven away by political differences there. It makes no difference whether you call it insurrection or war.

Mr. HOAR. Will my honorable friend, at some convenient time, allow me to read for his consideration what I have drawn up on this point?

up on this point?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Considering that there may be necessity for prompt action, and considering the large duties of the President of the United States, perhaps it would be better to give the power to the Secretary of State. So I have drawn up what I will read:

The Secretary of State may, in his discretion, provide, either by general regulation or special order, for the admission of immigrants flying from war or political oppression, or in consequence of political disorder, on being satisfied that they are persons of good character, seeking an asylum in this country in good faith.

Now, if the Senator from Alabama will allow me just one word, I will say that I have given the power to the Secretary of State, as I said, and I have not required that officer to find that what they fly from is political oppression, because it may be said that that would give offense to some country with which we are at peace.

Take the case of a man who came from Germany, or England, or Switzerland, or anywhere else. So I have made the provision read, "flying from war or political oppression or in consequence of political disorder, on being satisfied that they are persons of good political disorder, on being satisfied that they are persons of good character, seeking an asylum in this country in good faith."

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senate wants to spread the doctrine over the whole area of this subject, that is a very good form in which to do it. It is liable to but one single objection which I can see now, and that is, we are making a difference between the President of the United States and his clerk, the Secretary of State, because the President and the Secretary of State under our system of governmental administration are master and clerk, and that is all. The Secretary never acts without the authority of the President. all. The Secretary never acts without the authority of the President. He never pretends to act except by the authority of the President. Therefore, if the Secretary of State should make these exemptions it would be attributed necessarily to the President of the United States. That does not relieve the difficulty, which I the United States. That does not relieve the difficulty, which I have suggested, of involving the President in making a declaration that civil war or insurrection or rebellion or political disorder exists in a State sufficient to justify the migration of its citizens; and that would probably be a cause of offense.

I was about to state that my amendment has reference to a particular provision of our treaty with Spain, and I had gone on to state that thousands of immigrants were here, and none of them had been extradited, nor has any demand for their extradition been made. We know perfectly well that there are men here to-day who would be extradited to Spain or to Cuba for trial there for their lives for offenses alleged to have been committed against the Spanish Crown if extradition were possible.

Now, why is it not possible? It is because the treaty provides that there shall be no extradition for a political offense.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.
Mr. CAFFERY. Is not the clause in the treaty with Spain that political offenses are nonextraditable common to all treaties with foreign nations? It is not singular and peculiar to the treaty with Spain.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not prepared to say that it applies to every treaty, and it would take some time to look up that point. As a general proposition, what the Senator from Louisiana says is true. There is no extradition for political offenses, although treaties vary very much in their language as to the definition of political offenses.

We had serious trouble in regard to a treaty with Russia on we had serious trother in regard to a treaty with Russia on that account. In the treaty which we negotiated and concluded with Russia that question arose as to the actual murder of a mem-ber of the royal family. It was concluded that that was not a political offense; that it need not necessarily be a political offense.

It might be done through the purpose of a single anarchist. So that while the general rule of course is as stated, there may be exceptions to it. In the case of Russia there is an exception, and as to one other Government—I believe it is that of Belgium—there as to one other Government—I believe it is such an exception.

I have no disposition to make any particular discrimination in favor of the Cubans as exhibiting my sympathy with those people. My sympathy for Cuba rests upon very much higher ground than that, and in what I have had to do with the Cuban question in a vote. in the Senate I have never been moved for one moment in a vote I have given or in a speech I have made by motives of sympathy for the Cubans. There has been working in my bosom sympathy enough to have urged me to do anything as a private citizen, but as a Senator of the United States my course in regard to Cuba has been predicated entirely and exclusively upon justice to our own country and our own people.

So this is not an amendment which smacks of Cuban sympathy any more than it does of sympathy for any other oppressed people—the Armenians or any other. The right of expatriation is a right which we recognize distinctly. When a man expatriates himself for reasons which are satisfactory to him, whether dislike of his own government or a greater fondness for ours, or to escape some evil or peril in his own government, whatever his motive may be, our doors stand wide open to receive him upon the ground that he has a right to expatriate himself and apply his allegiance to this country.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator apply that principle to paupers and ignorant persons?

Mr. MORGAN. Paupers seem to have no rights except those which the public chooses to give them.

Mr. HOAR. I do not use the word "paupers" in an offensive sense. I mean persons who have no property, no present capacity to earn their own living. I refer to the persons who are excluded by this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. They are thrown through the mercy of God and the cruelty of the human family upon public benefaction and public trusteeship. They become the wards of the world, and are thrown upon the benevolence of the Christian world for the sake of living and having a place where they can breathe out the remnant of their miserable lives. They are excepted out of the general rules, because they are of no use in political circles. They do not belong in the political circles where they are capable of conducting some part of the strife that illustrates and adorns our political quarrels with each other. Paupers are considered as a peculiar condition of humanity that demands universal benevolence, and therefore, being thrown upon the pity of society, we say to the people abroad: "You must provide through your own charitable institutions for your own people needing charity." That is what we say when we send a pauper back. "You belong to a different beat, a different ward, a different jurisdiction. You are a charge upon the world, but you are a charge upon a particular part of it, because you happened to have been born there or live part of it, because you happened to have been born there or live there, and you can not come and give us that guardianship by your own voluntary act."

They are excluded. They have no option in the matter. The criminal classes are excluded because they are dangerous to society. We exclude them upon the same grounds or very similar grounds to those upon which we exclude immoral publications and some species of deadly instrumentalities which are put under the ban. A criminal is considered as a man who has no right to the protection of any country at all in the choice of his demicile. He must tion of any country at all in the choice of his domicile. He must stay in the country against which he committed the crime, and suffer his penalties there, and if his own country has branded and stamped him as a criminal, then he has no appeal either to our mercy or to our sense of justice in welcoming him to this country.

I do not in my heart and mind and conscience place the illiterate upon the ground either of paupers or criminals. Illiteracy may be a misfortune, and is a misfortune in the general sense, although I have seen a great many people educated out of all ability to earn a living, out of all capacity for any usefulness in life. I have seen them educated in those arts and practices of crime which excel almost the imagination of man as to their ingenuity and the persistence with which they are pursued. It is not to be said that education in letters is the reformer of the human to be said that education in letters is the reformer of the human heart. It is a higher power that reforms the human heart. It is the law of morality that does it. Politics does not do it. Education in the schools does not do it. It requires some power of regeneration that is stronger and better than either of those to take a bad man and make a good man out of him. But that is a matter which I need not discuss at this moment of time.

Coming to the particular amendment which I have offered, I still believe it is better than the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and I do not think that the parallel which he draws between illiteracy and crime holds good at all. I think we have special reasons under the treaty with Spain and under existing conditions in Cuba, of which our President has recently informed us in a very distinct and very bold way, why in passing this bill we should not instantly cut off the refugees from Cuba from the right to land upon our shores unless they can trans-late the Constitution of the United States in their thoughts at least from one language to another.

Now, upon the question of the Constitution, I have thought that the committee made a very difficult selection of an instrument by which to test the civil-service qualifications of a man who may which to test the civil-service qualifications of a man who may enter into the United States from a foreign country. It is the most puzzling instrument that ever had any attention paid to it in the Senate of the United States. We are very prone to get up here when certain measures are before us and ask each other the question whether the measure has been read in connection with the Constitution, and what the Constitution means. In its expressions it is bound to be very technical, for the reason that it is a new expression of governmental organization and powers and liberty. It does not read like any other instrument in the world, although some portions of it were somewhat conied from ancient although some portions of it were somewhat copied from ancient British laws and German laws.

But the Constitution as an instrument is one that is extremely technical in its expressions. I think I could quote a dozen here that would puzzle a well-educated American on first thought to interpret exactly as to what they meant, or to understand them on first reading. It requires a pretty high state of education for a man even to understand the text of the Constitution of the United States, to say nothing of its interpretation. I think that they made a very difficult selection; and I shall make a different proposition in another amendment that I shall offer, having reference to naturalization, which is the real pith and merit of this whole business after all, so far as the influx of foreign people into our country is concerned. The question of naturalization is the question of citizenship; and I have another amendment which question of citizenship; and I have another amendment which relates to that subject and incorporates a knowledge of the Constitution of the United States, or a capacity to read it, along with the Ten Commandments. If every man who is naturalized in the United States is compelled to read the Ten Commandments, that man will not die without having had an opportunity to understand the groundwork of the civilization and the Government of the United States. It can not do him any harm. Whether he reads it understandingly or not (I mean understandingly in the sense of a conviction of its truth), I propose that man shall not go to his grave harmed by the fact that he has not read the Ten Commandments.

There are a great many men in the United States to-day, native

There are a great many men in the United States to-day, native born and naturalized, who have never read the Ten Commandments. They are none the better for that. The country is none the better off because those men have not been compelled in the presence of some officer of the Government, if you please, or some one else, to recite or to read that basis of all Christian law. some one else, to recite or to read that basis of all Christian law. So I put that in now for the purpose of giving the man who wants to be naturalized a double opportunity to study the two great things that control in American civilization—the Constitution of the United States and the Ten Commandments. I am in the habit of calling the first ten amendments to the Constitution of the United States the ten political commandments.

Mr. MILLS. That is about right.

Mr. MORGAN. It is about right. But when a man is naturalized from a foreign country there must be better security for that man's intelligence in regard to the true virtues and the true powers and duties of an American citizen when he can satisfy the court by ostensible demonstration that he has really read the Ten Commandments.

Commandments.

I would not undertake, Mr. President, to put that sacred body of laws, or any allusion to it, in a bill to come before the Senate of the United States unless I was most profoundly impressed with the necessity of making the allusion. Otherwise it would be in some sense a sacrilege to do it. But when we are making qualifi-cations for those who are to become citizens of the United States, who were not born here and who must come upon some knowlwho were not born here and who must come upon some knowledge that they possess of our institutions, I insist that they shall show they have had some education of heart and conscience as well as of political conditions. That is the best thing after all. If I believed that every man and every woman who emigrates to the United States would be obedient to the Ten Commandments you might take all political conditions and throw them to the winds, so far as I am concerned. I should feel that we were secure in a higher class of citizenship, affected by loftier and better motives, than I could feel at all assured of if the man understood rething of our latterage events perhaps he had been stuffed be tives, than I could feel at all assured of if the man understood nothing of our latiguage except perhaps he had been stuffed before he came with a reading of the Constitution of our country. I would not take the exposition of the Constitution of the United States from Hon. Carl Schurz, and yet he stands, I think, to-day eminent among the immigrants from foreign countries in official rank, in literary qualifications, in powers of mind, and in exaltation of character. He could not read the Constitution of the United States to me as an expounder. Why? He was not raised under it. He was not raised in an American atmosphere. He did not imbibe with the very first breath of his life that splendid and beautiful system which no man can inherit except an American. He may adopt it; he can not get it by inheritance; and he will never feel it and understand it exactly like an American.

never feel it and understand it exactly like an American.

I believe in educating people in the atmosphere of the Constitution of the United States. It does not make much difference to me whether they have the power of analysis so as to detect all the elements of that atmosphere and apply them at will to the different subjects as they arise. Give me the spirit of a man educated beneath that splendid record of organic law. Let him understand the spirit of it and feel it. That man can be always appealed to to observe his own rights and those of his fellows, the equal justice between man and man, and to put the bridle of restraint upon usurpation and power. After all, one of the highest offices that a private American citizen ever has to execute is to stand upon his manhood, to stand upon his rights under the Constand upon his manhood, to stand upon his rights under the Con-stitution of the United States, and put the bridle of restraint upon those high servants who undertake to rule and control him under those high servants who undertake to rule and control him under the Government of the country.

This, Mr. President, is all I have to say. I shall offer the other amendment when the proper time comes.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Alabama seems to have wandered quite far away from the precise point.

Mr. MORGAN. I have another amendment that covers some of my remarks, and which I shall offer when it is in order.

Mr. PLATT. He has said very much that appeals both by its eloquence and by its good sense to the judgment of all. What he has said should be the character of citizenship in the littled States will meet with the hearty approval of every Senator. But has said should be the character of citizenship in the United States will meet with the hearty approval of every Senator. But the precise question, it seems to me, he largely left untouched.

I am sorry that the Cuban question has been mixed up with the immigration question, or that an attempt should be made to combine the two in one bill. If the proposed amendment, however, simply provided that nothing in the bill contained should prevent the landing upon our shores of Cuban refugees, that would be one thing.

Mr. MORGAN. I am willing to put it in that form.

Mr. PLATT. It would then be defective in that it did not pro-Mr. PLATT. It would then be defective in that it did not provide for the future, and admit refugees from other countries vide for the future, and admit refugees from other countries where similar circumstances might prevail. I do not know whether under our law the bill would exclude political refugees or refugees fleeing from the horrors of war or oppression in their own country. I do not know whether the bill would at all exclude them; but surely we ought not to go further than to say it should not apply to refugees, if that can be defined. We ought not, for the purpose of providing that it shall not exclude the refugees from Cuba, admit all immigrants from Cuba from now forward for all time who come within the restricted clauses of the bill. That was my objection.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I have provided against that by saying "who have heretofore inhabited Cuba."

Mr. PLATT. But the amendment of the Senator, if adopted, will allow for all time, whatever the fate of the Cuban con-

Mr. PLATT. But the amendment of the Senator, if adopted, will allow for all time, whatever the fate of the Cuban controversy may be, illiterate persons to come from Cuba as immigrants—after the war is over, after the Republic of Cuba has been established, and for all time. If this matter of excluding persons because they are illiterate is a correct test by which we shall regulate our immigration, and I think it is, it does not seem to me because there is imminent trouble in Cuba now that we should make a distinction in favor of Cuba, and, no matter what the fate of the country may be or what its future government may be, allow illiterate immigrants from Cuba to come to our shores.

If the purpose of the Senator is what he says it is, then the amendment ought to be framed in some other way.

amendment ought to be framed in some other way

Now, the bill will stand as a law on our statute books. We do not know where the next struggle for liberty may occur. We do not know in what country the patriotic, liberty-loving sentiment may attack monarchical or despotic government. But if the amendment be adopted, then the immigrants or refugees from the country where the next conflict may take place will be excluded by the bill, while political refugees and immigrants from Cuba, which by that time may have been composed into a settled government, will be admitted under the bill.

It is a discrimination, Mr. President, that we can not justly or logically make in the form in which it is proposed to make it. If the Senator had confined it to an amendment which would allow refugees from Cuba to come to our shores, and that only, and not affect the future immigration from the country when matters shall have been composed there, and allow ignorant people to come from that future country when they can come from no other country, much as I dislike to see the two questions combined, I should not have felt like making any suggestion whatever on the amendment. Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to say, first, in regard to the precise effect of the amendment, that it applies only to the proposed law. Hitherto our legislation in regard to immigration has excluded persons liable to become a charge on the community, criminal or diseased persons, and contract laborers—objectionable classes which the United States shut out on account of objections to them. This is the first measure of a general restrictive character, and it applies the test of illiteracy with a view of excluding acter, and it applies the test of illiteracy with a view of excluding also the ignorant.

The Cuban amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama applies only to the pending bill, not to the prior immigration laws of the United States, as I understand it. I think that the amendment is rather too broadly drawn, and is obnoxious to the objection that has just been made by the Senator from Connecticut; that is, I think after Cuba has become, as we all hope it will become, an independent and settled government, it would still allow immigrants from that country, and favor them over the immigrants from other countries. That I do not think ought to be the case. I believe it should apply to the Cubans only during the time when they are engaged in war with Spain or suffering from the oppressions of that country. There is no reason for excepting them after they reach a period of peace and prosperity, and the amendment would lead to that result.

Now, I want to say a single word as to the point which has been

Now, I want to say a single word as to the point which has been raised about commercial treaties and the favored-nation clause. The favored-nation clause has no bearing whatsoever on the question of immigration. No nation in the world, no independent The favored-nation clause has no bearing whatsoever on the question of immigration. No nation in the world, no independent nation, has ever given up the right, or ever would give up the right by treaty, to say who should come and who should not come within its boundaries. That is an absolute sovereign right which every nation must retain and uphold. We singled out the Empire of China and excluded her citizens by name, as we had an undoubted right to do, just as we have an undoubted right to single out any other country, and say there shall be no immigrants from that country. If that country chooses to retaliate, well and good. But we have never given up our rights by any form of treaty on that point. Our rights are absolute in dealing with the question of immigration to the United States.

I think the Cuban case can be distinguished from other cases very easily. Those people are right at our doors. They have suffered under the most terrible oppression. They are now engaged in a desperate struggle for liberty. If they desire to flee for safety, if they desire to put their women and children in a place of safety, they have no country to turn to but the United States. We are their next-door neighbor. The Armenian fleeing from oppression can cross—as thousands of them have done—the nearest boundary to Russia. He is surrounded by countries in which he will be ento Russia. He is surrounded by countries in which he will be en-The Cuban refugee has no place to go except to the United States. For that reason it seems to me we can properly make an exception for the Cubans while they are refugees, while war and oppression exist in the island, and for no longer time.

The amendment offered by my colleague seems to me to be too sweeping. It would be only necessary then for any European country which had a class of citizens that they found objection-

Mr. HOAR. I will say to my colleague, with his leave, that I think my amendment, which was very hastily drawn, is a little too sweeping, and I shall not press it, but will vote for an amendtoo sweeping, and I shall not press it, but will vote for an amend-ment exactly on the lines my colleague has just stated, if he pleases; that is, I would be willing to agree that the bill should not apply to persons fleeing from Cuba during the continuance of the present disorders in that island, if that will cover the case. I should not be willing to limit it to the recognition of belligerency, because I do not think anyone wants to put that in this bill.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.
Mr. MORGAN. The senior Senator from Massachusetts would not say "persons fleeing from Cuba." He would say "persons arriving from Cuba."

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I mean to say persons who flee to get rid of the disorders there, and they are not criminals who escape.

Mr. MORGAN. I am perfectly content with that suggestion.

Mr. MORGAN. I am perfectly content with that suggestion. I think it covers the whole case.

Mr. HOAR. I will not interrupt my colleague now, but when he gets through I will ask the clerks to take down a modification of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. LODGE. I was only going to say, in conclusion, as my colleague has withdrawn his amendment, that the objection to legislation of that kind is that then any country which desires to get rid, we will say, of a class of citizens whom it may find it difficult to support, paupers, persons of any kind who are a charge on the community, can simply by the passage of an oppressive law bring them within the exception of political oppression. We have lately seen one country which has undertaken to drive out a whole class seen one country which has undertaken to drive out a whole class of its citizens. Large funds were raised to project suddenly into this country some 5,000,000 persons in a state of complete indigence and to throw them into the labor market of America and gence and to throw them into the labor market of America and on our people for support by taxation.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think in making exceptions we should be very careful. I am entirely in favor of making an exception which will give the Cuban refugees admission to this country, the only place where they can take refuge if they desire to flee from the disorders and oppressions now existing in the island. If the Senator will limit it as he has manifested a readiness to do, I think there ought to be no objection to it. I am perfectly sure that we have an absolute right to make any exceptions we choose. We can admit whom we please. We can exclude whom we please. They undertook once in Europe to make objection to our giving asylum to Kossuth. That was resented by this country. That covers the whole principle. The soil of the United States is the possession of its people; they, and they alone, can say who shall come upon that soil and who shall not. If they choose to say that one people in Europe shall not come in the form of immigrants, but that they will open their doors to refugees from the Island of Cuba, it is entirely within their right so to do. I think the only question for us to consider now is whether it is not advisable to make a very strict and limited exception which shall permit the Cubans during the continuance of the present struggle to find refuge in this country, but that after the restoration of the island to independence and prosperity that exemption shall cease. ness to do, I think there ought to be no objection to it. I am per-restoration of the island to independence and prosperity that exemption shall cease.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Louisiana will allow me one moment, my object will be entirely accomplished by what I understand the Senator from Alabama to approve by inserting in his amendment the words "during the continuance of the present disorders there;" so that it will read:

This act shall not apply to persons arriving in the United States from any port or place in the Island of Cuba during the continuance of the present disorders there: And provided, That such persons shall heretofore have been inhabitants of that island.

That is the Senator's amendment.

Mr. McGAN. I am content with that, Mr. President.
Mr. HOAR. Very well.
Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Platt] that an exception in the pending immigration bill in favor of Cuba would be a discrimination against other people or other nations in a like or similar condition. I understand from Senators who have spoken on this subject that there is no disposition to limit the hospitality of the United States in cases of emergency, of a character induced by political oppression at home. If the exception incorporated in the bill should be made and there should be either far or near from our shores oppression of any people in any country and those people sought refuge in our borders, they could not obtain it. I can see no reason who tays ruly we should make a precial exemption in our of the whatever why we should make a special exemption in favor of the Cubans.

The junior Senator from Massachusetts says that the Cubans have no other shore to fly to. They have the adjacent country of South America. They have the Republic of Argentina. They have the Republic of Mexico. They have more opportunities of near-refuge than have people oppressed in Europe, because those people would have to fly to the United States in order to obviate the necessity of going to other countries ruled perhaps in the same despotic manner as the country from which they desire to expatriate themselves.

It occurs to me that the difficulties suggested by the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, and the attempt to remedy that amendment by the Senator from Massachusetts, are very suggestive of grave objections to the whole bill. Under the present bill none but criminals, paupers, diseased persons, as I understand, are excluded from the United States as immigrants. The shores of the United States are open now under our laws to all people who are oppressed in any quarter of the globe, provided they do not come within the classes mentioned here. If we admit political refugees from one country we may make an invidious distinction, or we may make a very serious mistake.

I am not in favor of closing our doors against political refugees from any country if they have the requisite qualifications of our It occurs to me that the difficulties suggested by the amendment from any country if they have the requisite qualifications of our present immigration laws. I think it would be a bad distinction. I think it would be unwise, because people who, at home, have that sense of liberty which impels them to rebel against monarchical and oppressive institutions are very likely to make the very best citizens for the United States.

best citizens for the United States.

I was heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Palmer]. I thought if an educational qualification were to be imposed as a condition of immigration that that qualification ought to be as light as possible, and I was perfectly willing to extend the period to 21 years of age in order to obviate the apparent danger of dividing parent and child, as would almost inevitably occur where the limit of illiteracy was placed at 14 years of age, for the child might be illiterate, or, vice versa, the parent illiterate. At 21 years of age the parental relations cease, and there would be no objection on the ground of separation of the family.

I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to allow the present immigration laws to stand as they are. I am of opinion that the difficulty suggested by the amendment of the Senator from Alabama will disclose the weakness of any attempt to impose a qualification of illiteracy. I would inquire whether it follows as a matter of course that an illiterate immigrant makes a good citizen of the United States, and I would inquire whether the vast domain of the South and West are now so full of workthe vast domain of the South and West are now so full of working people, of hardy immigrants, as to justify or necessitate the limitation of immigration proposed in this bill. A class of immigrants termed undesirable (I think the Italians have been called "undesirable" in debate; if not so, I beg pardon) have largely flowed toward my part of the country. They make very excellent citizens. They are a hard-working, industrious people. Those of them who come from Sicily betake themselves more to fishing and oystering than to agricultural nursuits: but those fishing and oystering than to agricultural pursuits; but those who go to the fields and work, either as tenants or for wages, who go to the fields and work, either as tenants of for wages, develop into hard-working, industrious citizens. I have no disposition whatever to exclude them. As a matter of course, a great many of them would be excluded under the operation of this proposed law, because the Italians have no system of public schools of which I am aware. I think their education is mostly based upon private resources and private means. On that point, however, I am not well informed.

But, Mr. President, I think the needs of the South and the West require a larger amount of immigration than now comes to them, and I think that any law not manifestly and obviously necessary to the common weal of a country, excluding immigrants from that country, is unnecessary and indefensible. I further think that any attempt to modify the law so as to admit that very class of persons whom we are most anxious to admit that very class of persons whom we are most anxious to admit, to wit, political refugees, who would be excluded upon the ground of illiteracy, shows the danger of altering or impairing in any wise the laws as they now stand.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama proposes to exempt Cubans during the continuance of the present war in the Island of Cuba. I will ask the Senator if I am correct in that supposition?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, my amendment as amended on the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts has that object.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not in the Chamber when that amendment was submitted. In view of that fact, it strikes me when I cast my vote for this measure I shall cast it in sympathy with the great heart of the American people. It seems to me that for the Government of the United States to return to Cuba under existing conditions a refugee from that island, sending back that man who is fighting for freedom and independence and giving him into the power of the cruel, despotic, and murderous Spanish Government, would be an act of cruelty and injustice and inhumanity that no American citizen ought to tolerate by his vote or by his words.

I am in profound sympathy with that people, who are battling, as I understand the matter, for precisely the same principles for which our forefathers contended against the great power of the British Empire; and, Mr. President, I should feel that I was doing my own convictions a profound injustice and that I was voting in favor of cruelty and oppression if I failed to record my vote in favor of exempting those men during the continuance of the war favor of exempting those men during the continuance of the war in Cuba from the provisions of this proposed act.

I am in sympathy with and in favor of this bill, but I trust in enacting it we shall not lose sight of those great principles of humanity, and of justice, and of equality, and of right which have always heretofore, as I look at it, animated the Congress of the United States in making statutes for the government of our people and for the control of our great public concerns.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill with the amendment placed upon it by the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Massachusetts, allowing the Cubans to come into the country during the present disorder, but I can hardly see the justification of the principles upon which the bill is based. Intercourse with foreign nations is either desirable or undesirable. If justification of the principles upon which the bill is based. Intercourse with foreign nations is either desirable or undesirable. If all commercial intercourse by the coming or going of the inhabitants of different countries is to be entirely prohibited, we return to the condition of China. If it is to be limited intercourse between the persons of different populations and different countries, how is it to be limited? This bill proposes to limit it by the ability to read and write, adding to it the exclusion because of criminal conduct contained in the act of Congress of which this is to be an amendment. Is that a test? Is a country filled with people who can read and write of necessity a country capable of advancing the arts of civilization? Does the skilled laborer, the man of inventive genius, always have this qualification accompanied by the capacity to read and write?

That is not my observation of mankind. It is desirable that the country should teach every citizen to read and write. That it is country should teach every citizen to read and write. That it is a means of acquiring intelligence, that it expands thought, that it is a necessity for higher civilization is beyond doubt; but have we no need of the sturdy laborer in the intercontinental railroad between this country and South America, which is soon to be built? Do the great public works have no need of the sturdy hand and the strong limb and the muscle of the laborer who can not read and write? Is it true that we have in our country a dearth of necessary employment—I do not mean from transitory causes, but a permanent surplus of labor, more than the necessities of this Western Hemisphere demand? I doubt it, Mr. President. I question that when we consider the vast area of desert land, with the as yet uncultivated land areas not only in this country, but of the as yet uncultivated land areas not only in this country, but of the adjacent Island of Cuba, capable of sustaining a population of 10,000,000 or 12,000,000, now only 1,500,000, which population will be supplied from this country, because it will not be six months after the recognition by this country of the independence of Cuba shall be made before there will be 100,000 Americans there, and their places will need to be supplied. So of Mexico. The overflow of our population will go into Mexico, it will go into the Central American Republics, and it is a grave question whether or not we should exclude the honest, the laborious, the capable laboring man of other countries who is not able to read and write.

I question the efficacy of this restriction. It would seem to me that it would have been the wiser policy, acknowledging the sovereign right of every nation to admit or exclude that class of population which would benefit or injure it, that in the treaty-making power there should be ample means of limiting or enlarging the admission of people of different countries into our country. We may say that we will not admit immigrants, persons coming here for a permanent residence. We may say that we will exclude them from coming into the country at all. We will let every man who can read and write come for a temporary sojourn, but we will not allow him, if he can not read and write, even to touch our soil.

In the treaty-making power we have the means of suspending all intercourse with foreign countries, or of opening or continuing all intercourse with foreign countries, or of opening or continuing immigration or prohibiting it.

It seems to me that this is a serious defect, and that it will be wiser to establish some system of treaty stipulation by which we can exclude objectionable people from our shores, rather than by an act of Congress, which provides a restriction including all the sturdy laborers who may come from other countries, however good their character may be.

The question of suffrage or how far aliens should be admitted to the rights of suffrage and citizenship is an entirely different question. Residence and commerce rest on different grounds from itizenship and a participation in the government of a country.

Intercourse, commerce, and the advantages of it, or the disadvantages, is one thing and the participation in the government of a country is a different thing, and the reasons which demand the one and prohibit the other are entirely distinct. But I have no intention of going into this subject further. I shall vote for the bill with the amendment I suggest in deference to the opinion of

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, as I intend to vote against this bill, I think it proper that I should briefly give some of the reasons which constrain me to that vote.

I do not believe that the ability to read and write constitutes the whole sum of what it takes to make a good average citizen of the United States. This is a change of the policy of our Government adopted at its very foundation. We are losing sight of a fundamental transfer with the transfer the leaves of the policy of the pol fundamental truth that was at the bottom of our Government when it was formed, that we were erecting on this continent a Government which was to be free and the home of a free people, Government which was to be free and the home of a free people, that it was to be the asylum of the downtrodden and the oppressed of other countries. We admitted all to come to our shores except paupers and criminals. The pauper who could do nothing to support the Government or to help build up the society which sustained him had no right to put himself upon our society to become a charge. The criminal is a violator of law, and we have a natural right to exclude all such from coming to our shores. That has been the policy of our Government from its foundation. That has been the policy of our Government from its foundation until the present time. Now, sir, it seems that the civil-service idea has taken such a hold upon the American people that we are extending it to the immigration of foreigners coming to this country; and we are, I imagine, to establish a civil-service commission to try these people so as to determine whether they can read and write, and whether they understand the Ten Commandments in white, and whether they understand the Ten Commandments in the Bible or the ten commandments in the Constitution which were referred to by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan].

I remember some years ago a distinguished citizen of the State of Ohio was telling me about some Irishmen who sought naturalization in one of the courts of Cincinnati. One of the judges told the leading Irishman who had his fellow-countrymen in charge to take them out, to read to them the Constitution of the United States, to explain it to them, and see whether or not they understood it, and then to come back and report in court after he had performed this duty. He took them out and read the Constitution to them from beginning to end, explained it to them, and brought them back into court. The judge said: "Pat, have you read the Constitution to them?" "Yes, sir." "Have you explained it to them?" "Yes, sir." "Yes, sir." "Yes, your honor; they understand it and are delighted with it." [Laughter.]

So it is with a great many of our people who seem to understand the Constitution and are delighted with it; yet, Mr. President, it is a fact which has existed from the beginning of our Government to the present day that the most intellectual men in our country do not comprehend it. The Senate and House of Representatives have been quibbling over almost every provision of that Constitution for a hundred years. The Supreme Court have declared at one time that the Constitution meant so and so and at another time they have said it did not mean that. They have been reversing their decisions over and over again and the arguments which have been made in this body and the other in the legislative branches, and all over the country by the most intelligent men, show that there has been a constant misunderstanding of both the provisions and the meaning of the Constitution of the United States.

States.

I am opposed to making an educational test of citizenship for those who are coming to this country. I am willing to receive them if they are not paupers and criminals and give them an opportunity to be educated and become good citizens here. Some of the very best citizens we have in this country are men who have come to us from foreign countries. Our forefathers were foreigners; great numbers of them could not read and write; and yet they laid the foundation of the greatest republic of the earth.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion to him?

tion to him?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.
Mr. CAFFERY. The Constitution of the United States prescribes no qualification for suffrage. That is a matter within the province of the States exclusively.

Mr. MILLS. Of course; and the State of Texas has just adopted an article of amendment to its constitution on the subject of suffrage.

Mr. MILLS. Of course; and the State of Texas has just adopted an article of amendment to its constitution on the subject of suffrage.

But I was going to say that we have a great body of foreign people in this country who are good citizens. They are laborers; they have helped to build up this great hive of American industry, and there is room for more of them in the United States. Speaking for my own State, I would be glad to welcome 100,000 Germans to come to Texas; I would be glad to welcome 100,000 Fishmen; I would be glad to welcome 100,000 Fishmen; I would be glad to welcome 100,000 Scandinavians. There is a large number of these three races of foreigners living in the State of Texas. I have known many of them, and known them for many years, and I know them to be good citizens. Suppose that the people from some of these foreign countries wish to come and bring their children and they have not had the opportunity to have them educated under the despotic governments of Europe, they are to be kept away and to wait until they can educate their children, and the Government can make no provision for them. This is a free country. We have hitherto invited them to come and enjoy the blessings of liberty with ourselves, and now we say: "Because your government as despotic government and has enslaved you and your children and it is impossible for you ever to educate them, you shall be proscribed from coming to this country and enjoying the blessings of free government."

This is the only really free country in the world. It is a peculiar Government among the governments and nationalities of the world. This continent was dedicated to liberty when this Government was erected, to be the home of a free people, of a self-governing people, of a people who held their liberties in their own hands; and now we are told that the civil service must apply to the immigration of people coming from foreign countries, and a man or his children who can not stand the test of a civil-service examination must be remanded back to despotis people in this country and in other countries who can not read and write. I doubt very much if one in ten of the men or women who first came to this country could read and write; but yet see what a precious heritage they have created in this country and bequeathed to us.

These, sir, are the reasons which constrain me to vote against this bill, and to preserve and persevere and continue in the policy of our fathers to keep the test of pauperism and crime the only test to be applied to foreigners coming to enjoy this heritage of liberty with us.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator from Texas to say that Texas was about to adopt an intelligence qualification of Mr. MILLS. I said that Texas had already adopted an amendment to her constitution in reference to suffrage.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator what that is?

Mr. MILLS. I do not remember just the exact provisions of it.
Mr. CHANDLER. Is it applying an intelligence qualification to voters?

Mr. MILLS. It is not. It is a residence qualification.
Mr. CHANDLER. The speech of the Senator from Texas would seem to me to be a sort of apotheosis of ignorance. The Senator has argued that we ought not to undertake to require the immigrants into this country who are capable of reading and writing to learn to read and write before they come here. The Senator denounces this and waves element over it at the restriction. denounces this and waxes eloquent over it, at the very same time that his own State and the State of Mississippi have adopted an intelligence clause to keep the negro from voting. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator ought to be willing that we should apply to immigrants coming into this country the simple test which the people of his State apply to keep ignorant negroes, as he would call them, from the ballot box. If the State of Texas is authorized in making that requirement as a condition of suffrage, it seems to me that the people of the United States have a perfect right to make it a condition of the admission of immigrants to enjoy the make it a condition of the admission of immigrants to enjoy the citizenship of this country.

Mr. MILLS. Perhaps I ought to say, as to the amendment of the constitution of Texas, that I voted against it. I held the same views then that I hold now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Thurston in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] as modified by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar]. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add as an additional section the following.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to call up the amendment which I have heretofore offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from West Virginia will be read.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add the following as an additional section:

SEC. 3. That in addition to the restrictions now provided by law there shall be collected a head tax of $10 on all immigrants coming to the United States in vessels not of the United States; and any and all clauses in existing treaties in contravention hereof, and all acts of Congress contrary hereto, are hereby abrogated and repealed.

Mr. FRYE. Did the Senator from West Virginia consider at all the effect that his amendment might have to compel all the immigrants to go into Canada and then come across on the cars?

Mr. ELKINS. They would not then come in vessels of the Mr. ELKINS. They would not then come in vessels of the United States. Immigrants from Canada merely cross the river or the border.

Mr. FRYE. But suppose the vessel lands them in Canada?
Mr. ELKINS. Then it would apply to them, I should think.
Mr. FRYE. It would not apply to them if the vessel landed them in Canada, because we can not legislate so as to impose a tax on an immigrant who lands in Canada.

Mr. ELKINS. If they want to come to the United States by want.

Mr. ELKINS. If they want to come to the United States by way of Canada it would be a restriction in a certain sense, but they would rather come in vessels of the United States or pay the head tax than come by Canada, because in the end it would be more expensive.

Mr. FRYE. I should think the effect of it would be as I have stated, although the Senator from West Virginia knows better than I do.

Mr. ELKINS. When I drew the amendment I inserted the prowision abrogating "any and all clauses in existing treaties in contravention hereof." On further examination, however, I find that the amendment will not abrogate any treaty of the United States with any foreign government. The amendment, to my mind, offers an opportunity to Congress to restrict immigration, or failing to do so encourage American chiralysis. I believe all posting to do so, encourage American shipping. I believe all parties have declared in favor of the principle of restriction. The amendment would also encourage American shipping. It is easily understood, and I think it will accomplish to some extent both purposes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I regret that I have to differ with my amiable friend the Senator from West Virginia [Mr.

ELKINS] in reference to this amendment. I heartily concur in and ELKINS] in reference to this amendment. I heartily concur in and approve of the bill as reported from the committee of which I am a member, especially as modified by the amendments of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Sewell] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan]. I think the policy of an educational test is entirely in harmony with the principles of our institutions and our form of government. Our Government is based on the foundation of education and intelligence. It is a Government in which all the people have a voice, and such a Government can only prosper and exist if it is based upon intelligence. A government with popular suffrage in the hands of ignorant, uneducated people, like certain peoples of the Old World, especially in the Russian Empire, would be as dangerous as gunpowder in the hands

Free governments, free constitutions, can only flourish and exist where the people are intelligent, educated, and cultivated. So, in harmony with our institutions and our form of government, it is just and proper to make this educational test. We have a right—it is not only a right inherent in every government, but we have peculiarly that right, being the freest Government on the face of the earth—to say to immigrants when we admit them to fellowship among our own people that they shall approximate the standard of the intelligence and culture of our own people.

But this amendment destroys the singleness and unity of the pending measure a chief factor of its strength. The amendment pending measure, a chief factor of its strength. The amendment seeks to enforce another test, ostensibly on the plea of encouraging or building up American commerce. It will do nothing of the kind, Mr. President. A mere tax of $10 a head can neither bring us any revenue—at best it would produce only a paltry three to four million dollars a year--nor increase our commerce on the high four million dollars a year—nor increase our commerce on the high seas. We can not increase it by any such method. Neither would it in a material degree retard immigration. All that it would accomplish would be merely to impose a burdensome tax upon those whom I regard as among the best and worthiest of our immigrants. There are two classes of immigrants that I think are undesirable. It is not only the criminal, the ignorant, whom we should exclude, but I do not think we crave any capitalists or men of wealth in this country. I think it is the people who represent the middle classes, the people without any money reserve, the intelligent working people of the Old World, who are the most desirable of our immigrants.

The amendment amounts to nothing but a tax, a burden. Let

The amendment amounts to nothing but a tax, a burden. Let us look at the state of the transportation lines which are plying between this country and Europe. The Government report shows that there are upward of 300 foreign vessels which are licensed to carry passengers, but leaving those out of the question which chiefly carry freight, and taking into account only the great transtanting responsers, lines we find this to be the state of the case. atlantic passenger lines, we find this to be the state of the case. There are the following foreign lines, with the following number of steamers and ports of destination:

Die Ste	amers.
Vhite Star Line—to Queenstown and Liverpool	6
led Star Line—to Antwerp Inchor Line—to Glasgow, Leghorn, Genoa, and Naples Junard Line—to Liverpool and Queenstown	6
Chingvalla Line—to Christiania, Copenhagen, and Stettin Iamburg-American Line—to Hamburg Iolland-American Line—to Rotterdam and Amsterdam	8
rench Line—to Havre .llen State Line—to Glasgow .tlantic Line—to Naples, Genoa, and Leghorn	2
Total	49

As against this total of foreign lines and steamers we have only one line, the American Line, with 4 steamers, running only to Southampton. Out of a total of 53 steamers—passenger steamers—that are plying across the Atlantic, we have only 7½ per cent. It is evident, therefore, that to put a tax of $10 a head upon every passenger who does not come in an American ship would not help to encourage American shipping, would not retard immigration; it would merely impose a head tax upon humanity.

I would rather vote for a bill which would exclude immigration altogether than to yote for a measure of this kind. I think one of altogether than to vote for a measure of this kind. I think one of the last subjects of taxation to which we ought to resort in this country is a tax upon our common humanity, upon those who are less fortunate than we are. That would make this country, now the land and the home of the free and the model country of the world, the most mercenary and most selfish of all the nations on the face of the earth.

Mr. President, we can not build up the commerce of this country by any such Lilliputian and paltry plan. I have in my hand a list of the five leading maritime nations of the world, with the tonnage of their merchant marines. First, at the head of the list, is Great Britain, with a total tonnage of 12,293,539 and 40,000,000 people. Next comes the United States, with a tonnage of 2,234,725 and 72,000,000 people; next comes the German Empire, with a tonnage of 1,943,761 and 45,000,000 people, and fourth comes little Norway, with 1,669,468 and only 2,000,000 people. Next to Norway comes France, with 1,129,575 tons and 39,000,000 people. Having lived nearly all my life on the broad prairies of the West, the next reader to the broad pr

I do not understand this question of shipping as I would like, but I know that the little country of Norway, with only 2,000,000 of people and a merchant marine the fourth in the world, makes a success in that line on the ocean by methods entirely different, in some respects, from those which have been pursued in this country, and while I believe in the principle of protection, I have sometimes thought we could learn a lesson from some of the countries of the Old World in the way of encouraging American shipping and increasing our merchant marine.

But I shall not enter into a discussion of that question at this time. I submit again that the amendment is entirely out of har-mony with the spirit of the bill; that it can not increase our merchant marine; that it can not materially retard immigration; that it can only be a tax and burden upon the best and most desirable of our immigrants, and that for these reasons it ought not to or our immigrants, and that for these reasons it ought not to be injected into this wholesome measure.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, like my colleague, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], I do not care to go into any extended discussion of the amendment. I believe that the average number of immigrants coming into this country annually for the last ten years, according to the Commissioner's recent report, is about 425,000. The foreign steamship lines make out of this business, on an average, $20 a head. From some countries it is greater and some countries less, but I take it from what I can gather from statistics that it is about $20, or something over $8,000,000 per annum. This $8,000,000 is paid to foreign shipowners for the transportation of immigrants to this country, and one of the evils growing out of immigration to the United States, to my mind, is that those foreign shipowners and this foreign shipping interest, through their agents abroad, encourage persons all over Europe to come to this country for the sake of the money the steamship lines get out of the business. Everybody who can raise enough money or have it provided who wants to come to the United States is reached by the agents of the steamship companies and brought to this country. In some way or other paupers and criminals are supplied with money to come to this country; the cities of Europe get rid of this population largely by the aid of foreign shipping interest. number of immigrants coming into this country annually for the shipping interest.

I do not agree with the Senator from Minnesota when he says that the amendment is prohibitory. There is a way left open in the amendment by which the immigrants can reach this country without paying the head tax. It is by coming in American ships. It is humiliating, I confess, that we have only one American line, although the Senator omitted to state that a great many immigrants come to the United States in sailing vessels. But I venture to state that the present American line can bring all the immigrants to this country that want to come in American ships, and grants to this country that want to come in American ships, and would be willing to engage to do it. If the present American line could not bring all the immigrants, then other lines would be established at once. There is about $8,000,000 in the business per annum, and I am sure that if the amendment prevails the American shipowners will get some of this traffic. The amendment does not necessarily exclude people who want to come to this country. I hope it will not always be the case that we will only have one American line to Europe, but that we may have many, and regain American line to Europe, but that we may have many, and regain the commerce on the seas which we once enjoyed.

In discussing the amendment, I will not go into the subject of American shipping. I do not offer it as the best means of promoting American shipping; far from it; but it is one of the means, and it is the sense of this country, if I understand it, agreed to by nearly all parties, that there should be some proper restriction.

The amendment would be in a certain sense upon immigration. The amendment would be in a certain sense a restriction, and if not a restriction, it would encourage American shipping.

It would not hurt an immigrant to come to our country in an American ship, and by doing so he could come as cheaply as now

American ship, and by doing so he could come as cheaply as now and at the same time encourage American shipping.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am unable to vote for the amendment, and I will state briefly my reasons. The amendment is very adroitly contrived by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Elkins], who is always zealous and astute in behalf of any cause he seeks to promote to kill two birds with one stone—to help the American steamship lines and to limit immigration. I am unable to follow the Senator in his attempts to do both of those things by means of this amendment. I am willing to vote to aid the American line of steamships. I believe it now has a large subsidy in the way of mail money from this Government. During the last session we passed a law giving to that steamship line the exclusive carriage of express packages between Europe and this country by a discrimination which we made. If it is necessary to keep the American line running, or to establish another American line, I am willing to vote to aid the lines from the Treasury of the United States to any reasonable extent, but I am not in favor of doing it by imposing a head tax upon immigrants coming to this country.

I am in favor of as rigid immigration laws as any Senator in this Chamber. I have endeavored to contribute to the enactment of laws for the limitation of immigration, but the policy as to the imposition of a head tax has been to levy only such a head tax as would pay the expenses of administering the immigration laws. It is right to pay for administering the laws, to pay for taking care but there is no way, if the Senator will allow me, to define it. If any distinguished European citizen comes to this country we do not interrogate him as to whether or not he intends to remain.

Mr. MORGAN. If, as the Senator will allow me, to define it. If any distinguished European citizen comes to this country we do not interrogate him as to whether or not he intends to remain.

Mr. MORGAN. If, as the Senator from New Hampshire asserts, there is no way to make a definition on this subject, or to make a of the paupers who come here through the year, after they come, to sustain them until they can be sent back to their native country. That principle is justifiable—to make the immigrants pay the expenses of administering these laws. But, Mr. President, the last thing in the world that this country ought to do is to raise money by putting a tax upon immigrants coming here, to be put into the Treasury of the United States. A tax of one or two dollars a head pays all the bills. If this tax is imposed, we will take out of the pocket of every immigrant who comes here $8.

So far as the imposition of the tax might tend to keep immigrants from coming, I sympathize with the motive, but we have to consider it with reference to the immigrants who come. an immigrant comes here, a single man, a single woman, a man and wife, or family, if there is any good use to which they can put $8 each that will benefit this country it is to their own use. They need it when they come here. They are not allowed by existing laws to come here with any contract that they may go to work and earn a living. If they have any such contract, either express or implied, they are sent back, and so they come here poor and, as we are going to require now, intelligent immigrants to become a part of our social and political system. They come here to go out on the Western prairies, into the State of the Senator who addressed the Senate in opposition to the amendment, to make their homes there. The very best use to which that money can be put is to leave it in the hands of the immigrant, and I for one repudiate the idea that under any policy of restriction of immigration the United States ought by a head tax to take money out of the immigrants who come here and seek to become citizens of the United States and put it into the Treasury.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question before he takes his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I find no definition in the pending bill, and I find none in any law which I have seen yet, as to what it is that constitutes an immigrant. That particular character who is denounced in this bill and kept out of the country because he can not read is not defined in any statute so far as I know.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not defined anywhere, I will say to the Senator. The duty of determining whether a person who comes to this country has come as a visitor or has come as an immigrant has to be left necessarily to the immigration officers who administer these laws.

Mr. MORGAN. The man comes; he lands in Philadelphia or Boston, and he is inquired of by the immigration agent whether he is an immigrant. He says, "No; I am a visitor." How soon is he compelled to return to his country if he gets in here as a visitor? Mr. CHANDLER. Practically, the question is settled by exercising a stricter supervision over steerage passengers than over cabin passengers. At the same time the immigration inspectors cabin passengers. At the same time the immigration inspectors do examine the lists of cabin passengers and take all the pains they can to apply the immigration laws to cabin passengers as well as to steerage passengers. But necessarily the question whether a person comes as an immigrant or as a visitor must be decided by the immigrant inspector at the docks on our seaboard. Mr. MORGAN. After all, it is a question of intention on the part of the immigrant, and there is nobody who can decide the intention but the immigrant himself. No man can inspect another man's mind or heart and find out what he means to do another man's mind or heart and find out what he means to do except by what he says. When the man lands at Boston and is inquired of whether he is an immigrant, he says: "No; I am not an immigrant." He does not say he will not become one to-morrow. He does not say that to-morrow he may marry some woman in this country and make up his mind to live here permanently. Mr. CHANDLER. What is the object of the Senator in making the inquiry?

Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. MORGAN. My difficulty— Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator that the present head tax of $1 is imposed not only upon immigrants, but on all passengers. The present $1 head tax, which we use to pay the expenses of administering the immigration laws, we collect from every passenger who comes by sea from a foreign country except American citizens.

Mr. MORGAN. My object in making the inquiry is to ascertain whether there is in this bill which we are proposing to enact, or in any law of the United States, a legal test of who is an immigrant, because unless you make a test of that kind the law is entirely at the mercy of the man who comes here to say whether he is an immigrant or not.

Mr. CHANDLER. That may be a defect of the existing system, but there is no way, if the Senator will allow me, to define it. If any distinguished European citizen comes to this country we do law by which a man can be excluded as an immigrant because he comes in that character, of course he is bound to say that the law we are trying to enact is of no use. If you can not enforce the law against the man's declarations, whether the declarations are false or not, of course the law is of no service. He can evade it by merely making a declaration of his intention to be or not to be an immigrant, and yet after he has landed here he may in a day change his intention from that of a mere visitor to that of an immigrant to this country for purposes of settlement and natu-

I call the attention of the Senate to this subject because I believe this legislation is not going upon the proper line. I believe that the way to reach the evil we are trying to remedy, in addition, if you please, to what you have in the pending bill, is to make it applicable to the right of naturalization, to make it applicable to the right to file an application to become a citizen. For instance, provide that no man can become a citizen of the United States by naturalization unless he can read and write in some language. The law might declare that no man can become a citizen of the United States except upon an application filed after five years of ornited States except upon an application field after five years of permanent residence in the United States and proof of good character. We might raise the time to five years in reference to citizenship. If you apply your legislation to that subject, then you will have some chance to enforce penalties and restrictions upon foreign immigration. But if you leave it merely to the declaration of the immigrant himself as to whether he is coming here as an immigrant of college a visitor your leave an not possible. an immigrant or only as a visitor, your law can not possibly an immigrant or only as a visitor, your law can not possibly amount to anything.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I hope the bill will pass as reported by the committee. If it should be found after testing it that it is leaky, we can apply the exact remedy. It certainly has very important provisions in it. The clause for a test as to reading and writing is important in many respects. I will state that I have given a little attention to the condition of our insane asylums, and I am informed in a general way that more than three-fourths of the insane in many of the States are foreigners. I visited the insane asylum of Nevada recently, while I was at home, and I ascertained that over 90 per cent of the inmates are foreigners. The physician in charge told me that the majority of those of foreign birth had been insane practically from infancy. They never had been competent to take care of themselves; they had always been helpless; and he explained the reasons, stating what ailed them.

Certainly if you apply the test of reading and writing it will exclude that class of imbeciles who are becoming a tremendous charge in the various States. I think very important information would be obtained if we could have reports from the different States as to their insane asylums, giving the percentage of foreigners and the percentage of those who have been always helpses. I think it would show that Europe has been sending to this country vast numbers of imbeciles whom we put in our insane asylums as insane who never were sane, and whom it was the duty of the foreign countries to provide for. Applying this test will stop that evil.

stop that evil.

Further investigation will show how very extensive it has been.

I believe that if we should pass this bill as it is, when it went into I believe that if we should pass this bill as it is, when it went into operation we would learn any defects it may have, and a slight amendment would correct them. I do not now see how we can apply the provision to charge a certain amount of money, with a guaranty that the immigrant will go back, and all that. That complicates it. We do not know how to do it. Nobody seems to be clear as to how it would work. The bill as reported is certainly simple; its provisions can be executed; I think it will be very valuable; and I hope it will pass as it comes from the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I can not agree with my friend from New Hampshire that the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia is imposing a head tax upon immigrants into from New Hampshire that the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia is imposing a head tax upon immigrants into this country. The amendment, if I understand it correctly, provides that those who come to this country as immigrants in ships flying the Stars and Stripes shall have a special concession made to them of $10 per head. Surely, Mr. President, it seems to me any immigrant inspired by the right principle, who comes here with the right motives, because he is attached to our institutions and desires to better his condition and become a citizen of this Republic, would wait a week or two and take passage in an American ship. It is a proper elementary school for him to take his first lesson in American citizenship by being under the influence of a ship flying Old Glory at her peak, officered by American citizens, and with a crew composed mostly of American citizens. citizens, and with a crew composed mostly of American citizens. I think it is a wise provision that this amendment should be incorporated into the law, for after the immigrant has made the passage across the Atlantic Ocean surrounded by those influences he porated into the law, for after the immigrant has made the passage across the Atlantic Ocean surrounded by those influences he will, perhaps, be better able to fully appreciate the beneficent influences that are to surround him in the country which he proposes to make his future home.

It is a right step, too, I think, to give this crumb of comfort, financially, to American ships. The English line of steamers, which has been referred to by my friend from Minnesota, the German line of steamers, the French line, the Italian line, are all receiving large subsidies from their respective Governments, amounting to treble, ayequadruple, that paid to American ships, and it is proper, I think, that this discrimination should be made in favor of our own vessels. It is a crumb of comfort, and at the same time it is civilized as a compared to our American ships, and it is civilized to the compared to our American ships, and the same time it is civilized as a compared to our American ships, and it is civilized to the compared to our American ships, and the same compared to our American ships, and the same compared to our American ships.

time it is giving encouragement to our American shipbuilders in leading them to hope that Congress will hereafter do more for them.

There is another phase of this question that has not been presented here. In the State of California we were flooded a few years ago by Chinese who came into that State and the other States of the Pacific Coast. It was only after appealing to Congress for many years that relief came to us and that class of servile labor was prevented, in a degree, from overrunning our State and taking the bread from our own people who were seeking, and and taking the bread from our own people who were seeking, and are to-day seeking, employment. But we are threatened and menaced by another evil almost as great. There is the Japanese menaced by another evil almost as great. There is the Japanese nation—the Yankees of the West, you may call them. They are coming into the States of Oregon and California and they are making their way East. Wages for skilled labor in Japan are one-tenth of the amount they are in this country, and for ordinary workmen perhaps an amount twenty times less than here is paid. Already the Japanese Government is offering a subsidy. I have the figures here with me. It is almost appalling to our American shipowners to think that the Japanese Government to-day is offering a subsidy of 25 cents on a minimum tonnage of 700 tons register. It is one quarter of a dollar of our money per ton for a thousand miles run at a minimum of 10 knots speed per hour; and there is an extra 10 per cent for each 500 tons of increased tonnage over a thousand tons and up to 6,000 tons, and a speed suband there is an extra 10 per centror each 500 tons of increased ton-nage over a thousand tons and up to 6,000 tons, and a speed sub-sidy increase of 20 per cent for each knot over 10 knots additional speed up to 17 knots. I do not want to weary the Senate by giving the data in relation to what they are doing to encourage their ships which are bringing emigrants from that country, who are immigrants into this country, to compete with our people; but the subsidy on a ship of 5,000 tons register of foreign build making 15 subsidy on a sinp of 5,000 tons register of foreign build making 15 knots speed amounts in round numbers to $31,500 per voyage between the ports on the Pacific Coast and Japan.

Mr. FRYE. The round trip?

Mr. PERKINS. The round trip, paying the expenses really of the ship for the round voyage between Japan and the Pacific Coast. Is it a tax upon immigrants to say that if they come in those ships subsidized by the Japanese Government they shall pay $10 more than when they come in an American-built ship manned by Americans? I can not agree with my friend from New Hampshire in the position he takes upon this question.

Referring to the remarks of my friend from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] on the great progress made by the Scandinavians of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden in their successful navigation of the ocean, let me ask why it is. There are two reasons, but the principal reason is because their wages are but 25 per cent of the sum which we are paying those who man our American ships. The Scandinavians are the best sallors in the world and they are among Scandinavians are the best sailors in the world and they are among the best citizens we have in this country; but it is not the fault of foreigners that they do not come here and dominate our coast trade and take it from us and pay the small wages they are paying in those countries.

Only a few days ago I read in one of the exchanges that English shipowners had placed some of their ships under the Norwegian flag. Why? Because the sailors' associations of those countries why? Because the sallors' associations of those countries were not so organized that they could command the wages that were paid by the English shipowners; and the reason why the number of ships under the flag of Norway and Sweden to-day is increasing is simply because they operate their vessels cheaper than we operate our vessels.

But I will not weary the Senate. I hope the amendment will be adopted. It is on the right lines. It is on the lines of progressive American shipping interests. It is on the lines of true Americanism. The immigrant is not worthy to come to this country and become an American citizen if he will not wait one week, aye, two weeks, to come in an American ship, and thereby save the $10 that my friend from New Hampshire says is a head tax imposed upon

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in my humble opinion the pending amendment is entirely in the wrong direction. There are several grounds upon which the amendment is defended. First, upon the ground that we need the revenue; second, upon the ground that it is desirable for the purpose of hindering and preventing immigration, and, third, upon the broad ground that it is necessary for the purposes of protection.

country bills can be introduced for that purpose, having for their direct and principal object the raising of revenue. If Senators desire to restrict immigration there are ample methods by which desire to restrict immigration there are ample methods by which to do it. If they desire to prevent all immigration an amendment can be made to this bill for that purpose.

Again, the amendment is defended upon the high ground—the high and lofty ground, if I may use that word—of protection. It is the principle of protection run mad that you are to seize hold of this subject of immigration, which should be treated upon higher and different ground that the high world restrict the test of the series of t higher and different grounds than that which would regulate the question of protection. You are to take hold of it and use it for the purpose of giving a monopoly to certain ships that sail across the Atlantic, and upon that ground you are to place substantially the Atlantic, and upon that ground you are to place substantially the entire immigration of the country.

Mr. President, where does this lead? If we are to protect American shipping by this discrimination, why limit it to the ten-dollar matter? Why not provide that there shall be no immigration at all, except by those who come over in American ships? That is the bold, that is the manly way of reaching the point desired to be reached. But it is proposed to take hold of the taxing power of the Government and do indirectly what they have not the courage the Government and do indirectly what they have not the courage to do directly.

Mr. President, where will this lead? Is it so necessary for the interests of this country to build up the passenger service and freight service of American ships that we must violate every just principle of legislation to do it? Have there not been enough steps in the wrong direction heretofore? What will we hear at the extraordinary session which yesterday seemed to be conceded by both sides of the Chamber would be convened? When the tariff bill comes before the Senate, if this principle shall be sustained and approved now, we will hear the argument advanced that certain rates of duties shall be placed upon articles, but that those duties shall be reduced if they come here in American botthat certain rates of duties shall be placed upon articles, but that those duties shall be reduced if they come here in American bottoms. That is the principle that will be insisted upon. It will be claimed that you must take away all the taxing power of the Government, which gives you a right to discriminate upon the duties that you shall provide; that if the goods come in American ships they shall pay only so much; and if they shall come in other ships they shall pay so much more—losing sight of the great and high purpose of the Government in the raising of revenue by the taxing powers of the Government. Unquestionably that will be resorted to when the tariff shall be again revised. It is the spirit of paternalism run mad. It is an effort on your part not to legislate directly in a manly way, in a straightforward way, in the lines that you want. If you want more revenue, introduce your revenue bill. If you want to restrict immigration, restrict it in some proper and legitimate way. If you want to protect American industries, it must be done in some other way than by using the taxing power of the Government to build up monopolies.

the taxing power of the Government to build up monopolies.

Mr. President, upon every sort of ground it is a bad principle which is invoked here, and the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from California [Mr. Perkins] and others who advocate the pending amendment have abandoned the notion that it is in the slightest degree restrictive of immigration or intended in the control of the control slightest degree to affect favorably the immigration to this country. The open purpose of the amendment is to further subsidize certain steamship lines. We have had a good deal of experience in the Senate with these American lines of steamers. We pay to-day $14,400 for every trip the ships make from New York to Southampton. We pay them $4 for every sea mile they travel as a bonus for carrying the American flag upon a line which has two ships, and two ships only, which were built in this country. Not only that, Mr. President, but when the bill allowed them $4 a mile they contended successfully that a mile meant a land mile and not a sea mile and so a few thousand dollars a trip was added and not a sea mile, and so a few thousand dollars a trip was added to that subsidy. In the last half of the last session of Congress we passed a law which provided that nobody could ship an express package of a small size, of certain dimensions, unless he shipped it by an American line of steamers.

That much we are doing for the line, and now we are asked to legislate as to the steamers which, so far as the Atlantic trade is legislate as to the steamers which, so far as the Atlantic trade is concerned, sail practically only from Southampton that every immigrant must come by that line or pay a penalty of $10. It will defeat its purpose, Mr. President. It will defeat the purpose of the makers of the amendment. The effect of it must be of course that the other lines will have to carry their passengers for $10 less than an American line will carry theirs for, and the American line will receive the benefit of $10 upon each passenger.

If that were the only effect we could bear it with equanimity, But it is going to have a more far-reaching effect. It means that the St. Lawrence River will be filled with steamers bringing immigrants to the United States. It means on the other side of the ocean that the lines to Vancouver of the Canadian Pacific will bring the immigrants and land them at Vancouver. Wherever bring the immigrants and land them at Vancouver. Wherever an immigrant comes by land to this country he is exempted from the provisions of the law.

Then, further, look at the hardship that is imposed upon the Then, further, look at the hardship that is imposed upon the immigrant. Among the best immigrants we get are the few we get from France, the immigrants from Norway, and elsewhere. Those people have got to come to Southampton to take their steamer, and they have got to pay that additional expense. That they must pay or else they must forfeit the sum of $10, which neither restricts immigration nor affects it in any way except to impose an additional and unjust burden and hardship upon the immigrants to this country, whom we welcome under the conditions prescribed in the pending bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to offer an amendment to the amendment before he proceeds with his remarks?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.
Mr. MORGAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Add the following to the amendment already

Seagoing vessels built in any foreign country, that are owned exclusively by citizens of the United States who reside therein, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of vessels built and owned in the United States, as to registry and nationality, except as to the coastwise trade, upon the payment of an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent at the time of making the registry

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am entirely in favor of the principle of discriminating duties in favor of American shipping. I do not know that I am opposed to a head tax on immigrants. I think that this amendment complicates the bill with a question which ought to be kept entirely apart from the question of immigration.

A great many Senators who are in favor of the pending bill as it stands would be opposed, and properly opposed, very probably, to the introduction into it of provisions which bring up totally different principles of legislation upon which parties are divided.

ferent principles of legislation upon which parties are divided. As it now stands it is not in any sense a party measure. If we add to it an amendment prohibiting discriminating duties we immediately carry it into the region of the much-mooted tariff question.

It will be seen from the character of the free-ship amendment, offered by the Senator from Alabama, just where it would lead us. Speaking as the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, I should regret very much to see the bill, which I deem of very great importance, complicated by other and extraneous questions. However much the propositions of the original amendment commend themselves to me on independent grounds. I think it is the mend themselves to me on independent grounds, I think it is the part of wisdom not to add this amendment to the bill, and I trust

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I desire to correct the impression which seems to have been created in connection with the American Steamship Line. From an intimate knowledge of the affairs of the line, I think I can state positively that they had no interest in and no knowledge of the amendment. While I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that it would be a good thing some day to take up the question of discriminating duties, I do not want this company, who are doing their full duty to the country, to be saddled with the odium of trying to get money in

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the amendment and the amendment to the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President—
Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw my motion for the present.
Mr. ELKINS. In justice to the American Line, and answering the question asked by the Senator from New Jersey, I wish to state that I do not think any officer of that line or anybody interested in it knew anything about the introduction of this amendment. I never discussed the matter with any person connected with the American Line, and I do not know whether the American Line favors the amendment or not. I state that for the information of the state of of the sta Line favors the amendment or not. I state that for the informa-

Inter layors the amendment or not. I state that for the information of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I did not hear what the Senator stated.

Mr. ELKINS. I only know one officer of the American line, and no officer of the line and no one interested, so far as I know, knew anything about my introducing the amendment. I introduced it long access an original hill duced it long ago as an original bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I certainly did not mean to intimate that this bill was being pressed by the American Steamship Line. I have no doubt the Senator from West Virginia intended it as a Christmas present to the American Line without their knowledge.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to help the American Line, and I tell the Senator from Colorado I should like to help all American steamship lines and help American shipping generally.

Mr. WOLCOTT. So would I.

Mr. ELKINS. But the Senator is entirely wrong in saying that there was any purpose here to benefit them directly or that the bill concerns them in any way so far as I have anything to do with it. It was not introduced at their request and I have never with it. It was not introduced at their request and I have never spoken to any officer or agent or any person connected with or interested in the American Line on the subject.

The Senator from Colorado makes the point that Chinese and Japanese coming to the United States, to save $10, will land at Vancouver. When a Japanese wants to get to Colorado he would have a hard time to save $10 by paying out $50 to come by railroad from Vancouver to Denver. Even the Japanese know more than this. this. The Senator also declares the St. Lawrence River would be filled with ships bringing immigrants to the United States who want to avoid the payment of the ten-dollar head tax. But suppose they wanted to come to West Virginia. They would have to pay $25 or $30 to come by rail, in order to save $10. I say to the Senator from Colorado this fully answers the practical point raised by him.

Now, Mr. President, here is an opportunity to make a distinction between foreign ships and home ships, American interests and foreign interests. I am not afraid to stand here and advocate American shipping and American interests. from New Hampshire is entirely mistaken when he calls this a head tax. Any immigrant coming into this country can avoid this tax by coming in an American ship; and I repeat, that it would help not only the American Line, but it would help American lines that might hereafter be established, and American shipping generally.

American shipping needs all the aid it now enjoys and more to sustain itself against English opposition.

I doubt whether the American line can live even with the aid from the Government it now enjoys. It is a great question—one full of doubt. Where the United States gives one dollar toward aiding American shipping, England gives three times as much to encourage English shipping. If we pursue our present policy, no matter how liberal it may seem, England will in time drive our ships off both the Atlantic and the Pacific.

I believe it to be the sense of this country and the judgment of the people of this country, particularly the wage earners, that there should be some restriction which is substantial and not theoretical and sentimental upon immigrants coming here to compete with the American laborer.

I believe, again, that at all times and on all occasions and whenever an opportunity offers we ought to encourage American shipping. The Senator from New York is entirely mistaken in the statement that nobody wants the revenue which may come from this provision. I admit it is not nor was it intended as a revenue measure, but since the party which has honored him and to which he formerly belonged has bankrupted the Government in four short years, even a few thousand dollars would be a help when we face a deficiency for the current year of fifty millions, and which is still increasing.

Mr. CHANDLER. I renew my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, to lay on the table the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as separate sections to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add as additional sections the following:

SEC. —. That no person, being a subject or citizen of any foreign government, shall be admitted to citizenship under the laws of the United States who, when application for naturalization is made, can not read correctly the Ten Commandments and the Constitution of the United States printed in some language.

SEC. —. That no application for citizenship in the United States and no declaration of intention to become such citizenshall be filed in any court or have validity for any purpose until it shall be first established by proof, to the satisfaction of the court or judge before whom such declaration is made or filed, that such immigrant has, in good faith, resided in the United States continuously for the period of five years prior to the date of such application.

Mr. MORGGAN. Mr. President Law offscinet that amondment

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I am offering that amendment in perfect good faith, because I believe that that is the only point in which we can touch the question of immigration with any real value to the United States. A number of the States of this Union, including my own, exercising that sovereign right which they have of regulating the suffrage prescribing the conditions. they have of regulating the suffrage, prescribing the conditions of suffrage, admit men to vote who have come into the United States and filed a declaration of their intention to become citizens of this country. The only restriction that is put upon that by the different States is a certain time of residence within the State. The immigrant may come here and the next day he may declare his intention before a court to become a citizen of the United States and renounce his allegiance to all foreign potentates and powers. Thereupon, under the law as it is now, I believe he is required to reside here three years before he can be admitted to full citizenship by naturalization, which must also be done by the

These State constitutions which admit men to this right of suffrage, which is exclusively a State right, are all predicated upon an act of Congress. The act of Congress defines—and it is only that law which can define—the persons who have applied for citizenship in the United States who declare their intention to become citizens. So these constitutional declarations in the different States, and all of the State laws predicated upon those constitutional provisions, hinge and hang upon the provisions in our law that a man may file his declaration of his intention to become a citizen on the day after or the day of his arrival in the United States if he chooses to do so. Therefore, a man who has no interest in this country, who can withdraw at pleasure his application to become a naturalized citizen, or ignore it, can go to Alabama and can ver in the elections there equally with the States is working a very serious injury upon the whole population of the country. It is admitting unqualified and unprepared men into the exercise of that suffrage about which we have so many complaints made at so many different times.

Now, I propose to enlarge the time to five years, so that a man can not file his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States until after he has lived here five years continuously and in good faith, leaving it to the law as it stands to regulate his other qualifications, such as good conduct and devotion to our institutions, and all of that, which I do not propose to change in the slightest degree. My proposition is a simple one, and a very distinct one, and it is only this: That the time for filing the declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States shall be extended to the period of five years, and that until that period has elapsed and has been ascertained by the judge at the time of the filing of the application his declaration of intention to become a citizen shall not be valid for any purpose whatever. That is my point; that is my proposition.

Mr. President, if we are in earnest in trying to improve the real citizenship of the United States, which relates so necessarily to participation in the political privileges of this country, I do not see how we can avoid passing these additional sections to this bill. Leave the bill, if you please, standing where it is in respect of the right of coming ashore, the right of landing here, but when you come to provide for its effect upon the suffrage, upon participation in the political powers and privileges of this country, let us say that no State of the American Union shall admit that man to suffrage upon the declaration of his intention to become a citizen until he has been here five years and has established his character according to the requirements of what is a pretty severe and strict law, if it is honestly administered.

I put in the amendment, in addition to being able to read the Constitution of the United States, that he should be able to read the Ten Commandments; and as I stated before, it is in no spirit of levity that I introduce what I consider to be very much the most important feature of education into this measure, for an education in the Christian basis of the American Government is something which every man ought to have before he acquires at least the rights of citizenship by adoption of this Government. I need not enlarge upon that. I only want to disabuse any impression that possibly might arise in the minds of the Senate or the country that in the introduction of this feature of the case I have anything else then the most serious intention of making agests. anything else than the most serious intention of making every man who comes to the test to acquire American citizenship show man who comes to the test to acquire American cutzenship show before the officer, the judge who admits him, that he knows the foundations of the Christian religion as they are taught in the Ten Commandments. If he can read the Ten Commandments in his own way, whether he pursues them or not, whether he obeys that law or not, he is that far advanced toward real civilization, and until he is advanced that far toward real civilization he has never made one step in the march in that direction. The man who has not taken that step, the man whose mind and conscience do not recognize the supreme and divine authority of the Ten Commandments as the basis of all jurisprudence and all law, has no right or qualification under the flag of the United States. That is not a religious test by any means. It is a test that goes to the constitution of society; it is a test which relates to that organism constitution of society; it is a test which relates to that organism which pervades all Christendom, and it is a test which no nation in this world and no people in this world would dispense with or can afford to dispense with without invoking upon themselves the destruction of the Almighty.

So, Mr. President, with due regard to these fundamental and foundation tests in all of our legislation, the Christian Sabbath, which is observed in this country from end to end and enforced by State laws and even by the laws of the United States Govern-by State laws and even by the laws of the United States Government, is one of the recognized institutions of every form of Christianity, whether Protestant or Catholic, but it is a regulation of Christianity that this nation could not and would not dispense with. There are not a thousand votes, I suppose, in the United States to-day that would strike from our Constitution and from our laws the distinct recognition of that divinely ordained day of rest. So what we may say about it makes no difference when we continually recognize in all of our social, domestic, political, national, and State relations, and relations to the laws of our country, the great underlying foundation of the Ten Commandments, for they all rest upon that. Let a man believe them as he will or practice them as he will, but let it be understood that he must know this before he can acquire citizenship in this country. I believe, and I believe it firmly, that if every man who comes up and upon oath accepts citizenship and naturalization at the hands of our judicial officers were required to read the Ten Commandand upon oath accepts citizenship and naturalization at the hands of our judicial officers were required to read the Ten Commandments, though it might be the only time in a man's life when he did read them, when it is associated with that act which changes his citizenship from one sovereign to another, that man's mind will be impressed by the fundamental principles of that great code to such an extent that he at least will stand in a better light, a purer atmosphere in respect of the citizenship with which we are about to crown him; for, Mr. President, it is a crown of glory that we set upon the head of every man who comes to this country from any monarchic region when we admit him to the great privileges, immunities, and responsibilities of American citizenship. The citizenship of Rome of which Paul boasted was as nothing compared with the citizenship that we put like a crown of glory upon the head of a man who comes here from a foreign country seeking refuge and hospitality on our shores and under glory upon the head of a man who comes here from a foreign country seeking refuge and hospitality on our shores and under our laws, and accepting upon his sworn petition that great privilege of American citizenship. Let him be qualified, let him be prepared, at least if it is an educational test, by proving that he has had that much education in addition to his knowledge of the fundamental law of our institutions.

I therefore move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] that citizenship in the United States is treated altogether too lightly under our laws. The naturalization

Alabama [Mr. Morgan] that citizenship in the United States is treated altogether too lightly under our laws. The naturalization laws need improvement and amendment, but I feel about this as I did about the last amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Elkins], that it is opening up a new and a very large question which is not strictly within the scope of this bill. The amendment deals with the naturalization laws and with admission to citizenship. This bill is intended to deal solely with admission to citizenship. This bill is intended to deal solely with the admission of immigrants.

If I am not greatly mistaken, this bill as it stands has very nearly the unanimous support of the Senate. I do not want to encumber it with other questions or with amendments, however meritorious, which will open up new questions and divide the Senate on the great point of the restriction of immigration by the test proposed in this bill. It is for that reason that I feel obliged to oppose this amendment as I opposed the last.

It is now nearly 4 o'clock, and I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays. Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts with-

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his motion for a moment, that I may say a word?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. At the request of my colleague [Mr. GIBSON], who was taken suddenly ill several days since, the question of the consideration of this bill was postponed, and an agreement was entered into to finally vote on the bill at 4 o'clock to-day without further debate. My colleague was exceedingly anxious to participate in this debate, and had some remarks prepared and some amendments to offer. He had hoped to be able to reach here to-day, but was positively forbidden by his physician to leave his quarters. I do not want to ask any further postponement of the matter, nor does he, but I wish simply to state that it is owing to his unfortunate indisposition at this time that he is unable to present his views and to offer such amendments as he desires.

Mr. LODGE. I now renew the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this day having been substituted for Monday for the consideration of District business, I call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 213) to permit railroads in the District to occupy additional parts of streets to accommodate the traveling public attending the inaugural ceremonies.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to issue to steam railroad companies in said District permits to temporarily occupy additional parts of streets for the purpose of accommodating the traveling public attending the inaugural ceremonies in March, 1897: Provided, That such temporary occupation shall not exceed the period of fifteen days, and shall be subject to conditions prescribed by said Commissioners.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is the resolution usually adopted on such occasions, for the purpose of accommodating the large amount of extra travel which the inauguration brings to Washington.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 214) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permits to the executive committee on inaugural ceremonies for use of reservations or public spaces in city of Washington on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1897, etc.

sion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1897, etc.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant permits to the executive committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of any reservations or other public spaces in the city of Washington on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on the 4th day of March, 1897, which, in his opinion, will inflict no serious or permanent injuries upon such reservations or public spaces or statuary thereon; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes on the occasion aforesaid such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the said city of Washington as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands or platforms that may be erected on the public spaces aforesaid shall be under the supervision of the said executive committee and in accordance with plans and designs to be approved by the Architect of the Capitol, the commissioner of public buildings and grounds, and the building inspector of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this also is a customary resolution, and it has been submitted to the committee by the marshal of the District, with a view to granting the use of parks and other public places during the inaugural ceremonies.

Mr. COX. Does it include any public buildings?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir; simply streets and parks.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and passed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent.

time, and passed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a bill (H. R. 9700) authorizing the issuing and loaning of the ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., of the United States, for the purpose of decorating the streets of the city of Washington on the occasion of the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1897.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the Citizens' Reception Committee of the District of Columbia, for the entertainment of the citizens of the Republic at the inauguration of the President of the United States on the 4th day of March, 1897, within the city of Washington, desires to add to the pleasure of the occasion by an extensive decoration of the streets of the city, and in order that the General Government may render such assistance as may be within its power: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to loan to Louis D. Wine, chairman of the subcommittee in charge of street decorations, or his successor in said office, for the purpose of decorating the streets in the city of Washington in the District of Columbia, on the occasion of the inauguration of the President of the United States on the 4th day of March, 1897, all of the United States ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., belonging to the Government of the United States, as in their judgment can be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the inauguration. The loan of said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., belonging to the protection and the return of said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., the said Louis D. Wine, or his successor in office, shall execute and deliver to the President of the United States, or to such officer as he may designate, a satisfactory bond in the sum of $50,000: And provided, That the said committee shall indemnify the said Departments, or either of them, for any loss or damage to said ensigns, flags, etc., not necessarily incident to the use heretofore specified.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, it is necessary, I believe, to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this joint resolution. It is a copy of two resolutions which have heretofore been passed by the House, but this particular resolution is not on the Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the considera-tion of the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the two joint resolutions and one bill have just been passed, and I also move that in each case the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 9469) to constitute a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for holding of terms of court at Beaumont, Tex., and for the appointment of a clerk for said court;

A bill (H. R. 6533) for the relief of A. A. Hosmer; and A bill (H. R. 9472) to amend chapter 111 of the acts of the third session of the Fifty-third Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1624) to quiet title and possession with respect to cer-tain unconfirmed and located private land claims in the State of Louisiana; and A bill (S. 3401) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo., approved July 26, 1894."

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1832) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Hill, Mr. Platt, and Mr. Clark as the conference on the part of the Senate.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I observe from the message just sent to us by the Senate that that body has disagreed to the amend-ments of the House to the bill with reference to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company. I move that the House insist on its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 3401) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.," approved July 26, 1894—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 1624) to quiet title and possession with respect to certain unconfirmed and located private land claims in the State of Louisiana—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up the bill (H.R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Metropolitan Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized to extend the lines of its underground electric railroad from the intersection of Connecticut and Florida avenues northward along Columbia road to a point on the west line of Eighteenth street extended: Provided, That the said extension be completed within six months from the date of the passage of this act, and the said company is hereby authorized and empowered to increase its capital stock for the purpose of making and equipping the extension of its route authorized by this act, but the amount of the capital stock so to be issued, as aforesaid, shall not exceed the cost of the making and equipment of the extension herein provided for: Provided further, That the Metropolitan Railroad Company is hereby authorized to issue such an additional amount of capital stock as will provide for the conversion into such stock of its outstanding certificates of indebtedness, amounting to $250,000, heretofore issued for the completion and equipment of its road.

Mr. BABCOCK. This bill proposes to extend the line of the

Mr. BABCOCK. This bill proposes to extend the line of the Metropolitan Railroad about 1,200 feet beyond its present terminus on Connecticut avenue, up Columbia road. A measure of this kind passed the House at its last session, and was attached as an amendment to what was known as the Eckington bill, which finally went to conference. In the conference, upon the demand of the Senate committee, this provision was stricken from the bill.

The only point in which this bill differs from the measure which then passed the House is that it provides in addition for converting $250,000 worth of certificates into stock. These certificates were issued in the construction of two loops, one around Lincoln Park, and in the erection of the car stable at Fourteenth and East Capitol streets.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to the proviso in this bill, which I see authorizes an additional amount of capital stock for the conversion of outstanding certificates of indebtedness amounting to $250,000. Are those certificates of indebtedness to that amount to be funded

Are those certificates of indeptendess to that all of the into stock at par?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir; I so understand.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then the holders of those certificates, in view of the market price of the stock, would receive, instead of $250,000, $540,000, would they not?

Mr. BABCOCK. It ought to be well understood by any business man that the stockholders would be entitled pro rata to any additional amount of stock that may be issued. As among the stockholders there can be no hardship.

holders there can be no hardship.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That may be true, as far as the stockholders are concerned. If these certificates of indebtedness were held entirely by the stockholders, the gentleman might be correct; but I understand that is not the case. cates of indebtedness have been sold around the city and upon the stock board for months; they are sold daily. And under the provision now contained in this bill the holders of those certifi-cates will actually receive two dollars for one. The increase which they would receive, counting back to the time the certificates were issued, would be equal to an interest of about 110 per cent. I move, therefore, to amend the bill by striking out, in lines 16 and 17, the words "capital stock" and inserting the word "bonds;" so that the proviso will read:

That the Metropolitan Railroad Company is hereby authorized to issue such an additional amount of bonds as will provide for the conversion into such bonds of its outstanding certificates of indebtedness, etc.

Mr. BABCOCK. These certificates are good only for the amount represented by their face. They represent so much money; they do not represent so much stock.

Now, when additional stock is issued, the rule practically in all corporations is that the opportunity to subscribe for the additional stock is offered first to those who are already stockholders. This money will go into the treasury, and then the certificates will be paid off. The holders of the certificates do not get the stock. Smith or Brown, simply because he holds a certificate, will not be entitled to stock; he gets his money.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The proviso is that—

The Metropolitan Railroad Company is hereby authorized to issue such an additional amount of capital stock as will provide for the conversion into such stock of its outstanding certificates of indebtedness, etc.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is right.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I have been informed by officers of the company that it is their intention to issue stock, and that no harm will result, for the reason, as urged by the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the stock will go to the existing stockholders and not to outsiders.

Now, the whole question practically resolves itself into this: This amount of money presumably was expended for the improvements of the road; for that purpose the $1,800,000 worth of bonds authorized by Congress were issued. Following in the line of previous legislation, if it be necessary for us to proceed further in this direction, we should authorize the issue of an additional amount of bonds, leaving the capital stock exactly where it is. If we authorize the company to issue this additional amount of stock, then after a while, after the company has been making big profits and paying large dividends, if anything should happen to destroy that prosperity it may come here and say: "We must have this or we must have that, otherwise we shall be unable to pay the interest on our stock." On the other hand, if now, while this road is in its present condition of prosperity, we provide for the issue of these bonds and their payment from time to time, the indebtedness of the company will be diminished while the stock capitalization will remain exactly the same; so that it will not become at some future time a charge upon the people who may Now, the whole question practically resolves itself into this: become at some future time a charge upon the people who may ride on this road

Mr. DOCKERY. The proposition of the gentleman from New Hampshire, as I understand it, is to convert the outstanding floating indebtedness, known as certificates of indebtedness, into bonds?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Yes, sir; bonds instead of

Mr. DOCKERY. That seems to me to be a very businesslike

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I therefore move to strike out the words "capital stock" in the lines to which I have referred, and also, in line 17, the word "stock," and insert the word "bonds," so as to accomplish the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would call the attention of the gentleman to this fact: I do not know what the officers of the road may say on the proposition, but in passing the original bill it provided not only for the issue of bonds, but also for the issue of stock, and the two, that is to say, the bonds and the stock so issued, were used the two, that is to say, the bonds and the stock so issued, were used to raise enough money to construct the road on the new plan.

Now, I would ask the gentleman why he would charge it all to bonds instead of part to bonds and part to stock?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I think the gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken, and that the authorization was only for stock.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not the bill before me, but I am quite sure that in the authorization granted by Congress for the present system in use on that road both bonds and stock were authorized.

authorized.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I am talking of the Metropolitan road. Its indebtedness, except these certificates, is all in bonds, and I do not see why this additional expenditure should not be paid for in bonds in the same manner as heretofore.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question: Whether it is not a fact that this company is now building useless structures in this city, that they could easily dispense with, in order to absorb part of the great profits of the corporation, so that the dividends may not appear ridiculously excessive? I would also ask if it is not a further fact that the extension asked for in this case is to keep some other road from getting through to this this case is to keep some other road from getting through to this desirable point?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think the road has earned any dividends at all. It has just completed a very expensive new system—the best in the world, I think, the underground electric system—and I do not think that they have found it necessary to hide any dividends. In fact, my information is exactly the oppo-

Mr. STEELE. My information is that, right in the face of this construction of which the gentleman speaks, the dividends have been excessive, beyond what ought to be allowed in a great city line, to which this bill refers.

Mr. BABCOCK. I thinklikely that the gentleman from Indiana is confusing two roads. His question doubtless refers to the Washington and Georgetown Railroad, not to the Metropolitan line, to which this bill refers.

Mr. STEELE. I understand that it is the same thing.

Mr. BABCOCK. By no means.

Mr. STEELE. I understand that they are one and the same.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

There is no sort of connection between them, at least such has always been my information and understanding. They are exactly competitors, as I understand it and as the District Committee understand it.

tee understand it.
Mr. STEELE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But if the gentleman from Indiana has any information upon the subject he ought to furnish it to the any information upon the subject he ought to furnish it to the committee for its guidance.

Mr. STEELE. I have only verbal information, which, however, I think is reliable. I have not personally examined the question. I did not understand that they were going to ask any further favors this year, and supposed that they were done. I have not, therefore, taken the pains to inform myself.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What I mean to say is that in all the hearings and appearances before the committee these two lines seem to be utterly at variance with each other. I ask the chairman of the committee if this is not true?

man of the committee if this is not true?

Mr. BABCOCK. Undoubtedly.
Mr. RICHARDSON. And I have not seen any collusion or any evidence of collusion between them.
Mr. STEELE. It would doubtless be surprising to find people interested in these District charters and franchises coming before the District Committee and complaining of each other. are not going before the committee, as a rule, to complain of the corporations of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will answer the gentleman as to the road coming before Congress and asking for this additional legislation. That is a mistake. This is asked by the people of the city along the line of the proposed extension, unanimously asked by them; and the president of the road, as I have stated on the floor of the House before, told me that he did not care to have the bill passed; that they did not want to construct that piece of road at all. It is up the hill at the end of Connecticut avenue, and every property holder there—and it is all settled—is interested in this proposed extension, which extends for a distance of about 1,200 feet.

Mr. STEELE. Is there any limitation upon the time when it shall be completed?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir; six months.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I understand that that is entirely true, so far as the extension is concerned; but I do not understand it to be accurate in regard to the issuing of the stock or the bonds, and, as I said before, as bonds were authorized at the last session of Congress for this extension, and the ized at the last session of Congress for this extension, and the extension has cost $250,000 more than that authorization, the stockholders, or certain portions of them, having advanced the money, it is right that they should be reimbursed in bonds, but not in stock, and my amendment will go to that point.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will permit me—
Mr. ODELL. Do you consider it a good business policy to inflict a fixed charge upon this company rather than to convert this into stock that would only share in the profits of the company?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The same principle applies in relation to this that applied to the bond issues, as I have heretofore stated. This stock goes only to a portion of the stockholders and not to all; consequently, the stock being issued at the par value, which is only $50, and the stock selling for more than twice par, it is unjust to the other stockholders and it is unjust to the community.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will yield I will ask, If stock is issued is it not a fixed charge on the community perpetually?

New Hampshire. Absolutely.

issued is it not a fixed charge on the community perpetually?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Absolutely.

Mr. HULL. If bonds are issued they constitute only a fixed charge on the corporation until their revenues pay the bonds.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That is the fact.

Mr. ODELL. Theoretically that is the fact.

Mr. DOCKERY. In other words, this company has a form of indebtedness outstanding called certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now they propose to fund that floating debt. How should it be done? A bond is an evidence of indebtedness and the form of indebtedness the company ought to issue.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This represents money paid out.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the capital stock is the money on which the company does business, and this is an indebtedness of the company. The capital stock directs and controls the business of the company. The capital stock directs and controls the business of the company. As long as you can not change the rate of fare, how would an issue of stock be a charge upon the community? The rate of fare is fixed by law.

The rate of fare is fixed by law.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was not discussing that phase of the proposition.

Mr. ODELL. That is the phase presented by the suggestion that it will be a tax on the community.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The issue ought to be an issue of bonds, and not of stock, unquestionably.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, if the proposition as stated by the gentleman from New Hampshire is correct, it will be a very unusual proceeding on the part of a board of directors and an injustice upon the stockholders. I do not think the premises that he states are true, but I will accept the amendment, to make this an issue of bonds rather than of stock.

he states are true, but I will accept the amendment, to make this an issue of bonds rather than of stock.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is right.

Mr. BABCOCK. There certainly can be no harm in that, but it would be a very unbusinesslike proceeding to pay certificate holders 200 cents on the dollar if somebody owed them only 100 cents on the dollar. I will accept the amendment, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I ask to have the amendment reported from the desk.

reported from the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, lines 16 and 17, strike out the words "capital stock" and insert in lieu thereof the word "bonds."

In line 17, after the word "such," strike out "stock" and insert "bonds."

The question being taken on the amendment, the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire) there were—ayes 34, noes 31.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BEQUEST OF THE LATE PETER VON ESSEN.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill (H. R. 8472) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept the bequest of the late Peter Von Essen for the use of the public white schools of that portion of said District formerly known as Georgetown be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS IN THE CITY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I also ask that the bill S. 3008 be recommitted to the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3008) authorizing the employment of day labor in the construction of certain municipal buildings and works in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, here is a resolution of considerable importance that ought to be considered this morning.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 215) extending time for compliance by Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and the Belt Railway Company with provisions of section 1 of an act entitled an act to extend the routes of said railway companies, etc., approved June 10, 1896.

Resolved, etc., That the time within which the said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia and the Belt Railway Company of the District of Columbia shall begin to equip those portions of their respective lines which are situated within the boundary of the city of Washington with compressed-air motors be, and it is hereby, extended to July 1, 1897: Provided, That prior to said last-mentioned date the said rail way companies shall have become satisfied that said compressed-air motors are in all respects proper and satisfactory as a motive power for the speedy and convenient propulsion of street cars.

SEC. 2. That if said railway companies shall decide to adopt said motive power, they shall completely equip their respective lines with such motive power, they shall completely equip their respective lines with such motive power, they shall completely equip their respective lines in the city of Washington with an underground electric system.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in reference to this resolution, that the bill granting authority to put on compressed-air motors was passed by this House last June. A contract was let to one of the business houses of this country and an order given for what are known as compressed-air bottles to a firm the Carrent was let to one of the susiness houses of this country and an order given for what are known as compressed-air bottles to a firm the Carrent was let to construct the Car order given for what are known as compressed-air bottles to a firm in Germany owned by the German Government. The contract was made for delivery, it being the only place where these bottles could be satisfactorily constructed in that time. Shortly after the contract was let the whole institution burned down, and it the contract was let the whole institution burned down, and it has been impossible to secure them in time for use. I believe they have now one car and one only. Both roads, after the passage of the bill last year, went into the hands of receivers, in September. A hearing as to the sale under the creditors' bill is set for the 9th day of January; and unless the extension is granted the court will decree the sale of the road, thus losing to the stockholders the full amount of their stock, which I believe is $250,000.

Mr. HULICK. It is $250,000 on one road and $500,000 on the

Mr. BABCOCK. That is right—$250,000 on one road and $500,000 on the other. Mr. Schoepf, the receiver of the road, assures the committee that he has made arrangements for the money to take care of the indebtedness, providing for its equipment, if the extension of time is given, and thereby prevent the road being sold out by the sheriff. These are the facts in connection with the bill. Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that this extension ought not to be granted. I think that this House has sufficient evidence to satisfy it that this company up to this time has treated with absolute contempt every requirement that Congress has made with reference to various improvements required in the operation of this road. When the bill the provisions of which it is now proposed to extend was before the House we were assured that the contract had been made in this country for these mo-

Mr. BABCOCK. That is true; they were.
Mr. HEPBURN. When the facts are, as I am assured, Mr. Speaker, that there is no such motor in the United States; that there is no firm constructing them; and the whole pretense was based upon misrepresentation.

Mr. HULICK. Would the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULICK. Have you investigated this fact as to whether any of these motors are being used now? If you have, and that is your conclusion, it is directly opposite to the testimony considered and the evidence considered by the committee and the conclusions arrived at upon evidence satisfactory to eight members

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, my authority is derived from a committee or association of citizens of the northeast portion of this city that have been looking into this matter; that have been corresponding with the alleged firm from which these motors, it corresponding with the alleged firm from which these motors, it was said, were to be obtained—gentlemen who have been studying this question—and they tell me there is not in operation now in the United States one of these motors that has passed the experimental stage, nor is there any firm in the United States engaged in their manufacture; that there are one or two institutions that are experimenting with this kind of motor; but that the enterprise of construction has gone no further than the experiment.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me a word right there?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would rather you should wait till I get through; but if you prefer to do so, say it now.

Mr. Speaker, I want to call the gentleman's attention to another matter of history in connection with this company. They were given a time in which to begin the use of this motor. As I am informed, before the expiration of the time for using the new motor, in order to avoid that provision of the statute, there was begun a friendly suit that put these two roads in the hands of a receiver. The two roads are substantially the same. The receiver is the general manager of both, and, as I am informed, the whole movement was with a view to securing this extension and to give an excuse for not complying with the act of Congress

If this is true—and my authority is the same that I have cited, gentlemen who have investigated the matter, who are interested in it, and who are simply striving to compel this company to give them the facilities which the law requires them to give—I am satisfied that it ought to influence our action upon this bill. If this House knew the contumacious manner in which these companies have treated every requirement of the law, I am sure that no member would feel that they were in a position to ask any more favors from Congress. For example, one of these companies was required to build a line of road and operate it upon North Capitol street. That street had just been paved. The company tore up the pavement along a considerable portion of the street and put down its tracks and then instead of renguing the street with put down its tracks, and then, instead of repaving the street with concrete or with asphaltum so as to correspond with the general pavement, it filled it in with cobblestones, while along another portion of the line the company has not yet put down any pavement. Furthermore, it refused to operate a portion of the road. The act of June last required operation, and this requirement has either been disregarded or the operation has been of an inefficient

The people came here demanding that this corporation should be compelled to comply with the conditions of its grant, and, after be compelled to comply with the conditions of its grant, and, after great trouble, it did put on a line of cars which ran at long intervals, twenty minutes or half an hour apart, and that only during a portion of the day, until 8 o'clock in the evening. The Commissioners attempted to compel the company to reform its schedule, but they have not yet been able to secure service on that road at all commensurate with the demands of the thickly settled portion of the city through which it runs. I am informed that it is the belief of persons who have investigated this subject that the majority stockholders, those who have acquired by purchase the control of a bare majority of the stock, are pursuing that course which is known to many gentlemen engaged in corporate operations as "freezing out" the balance of the stockholders, that these various "freezing out" the balance of the stockholders, that these various delays, that these various suits, that putting the road into the hands of a receiver, are all parts of a scheme of those who hold a bare majority of the stock to freeze the minority out, and the whole course of the company indicates it. They pretend that the road is important, yet this very manager, whom the gentleman from Wisconsin quotes, has been heard to say, as I am informed, pluming himself upon his management, that the road which now management of the city was in the very first runs along C street, in this part of the city, was in the very first year of its operation a remunerative enterprise and was able to pay a dividend.

Now, if these statements are not true—and I give them as they come to me from reputable gentlemen who are representing their associates in that part of the city, endeavoring to look after their rights and to compel this corporation to respect those rights—if these statements are not true, I say, some of the gentlemen of the committee who have heard the other side of the story can doubtless correct me. But I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the statements are true, and if they are I am sure that this House will not desire to extend any additional facilities to this corporation.

Mr. HULICK. May I ask you another question before you take

Mr. HULICK. May I ask you another question before you take

mr. HULICA. May I ask you another question before you take your seat? You say that you have received these representations from parties in interest. Now, what interest have they—as stockholders, as bondholders, or as creditors?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; they are citizens of the northeastern portion of this city, which this corporation was chartered to serve, and who are groaning under the failure to receive the service which it was added to give the service. which it was pledged to give them and which Congress has said it should give.

Mr. HULICK. Then I understand that these complaints do not come from the minority stockholders or from the creditors of the ompany?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; I speak of no one and for no one but the citizens of that portion of the city, who almost universally, as I am told, feel that this railroad company is simply playing with their interests and their rights.

Mr. HULICK. What is their specific complaint against this company so far as the rights of the citizens and of the patrons of the read are concerned?

the road are concerned?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will try to tell you. They complain that along a part of the road there is an utter failure to give them any service at all. The company has laid its tracks in the streets, but refuses to operate the road. That is one complaint. Another is that the company refuses to give the citizens the improved facilities for travel which Congress has declared it should give, and that it is striving from day to day and month to month and from year to year to extend its privileges by fallacious excuses, while showing an utter contempt for the requirements of the law. Those are some of the complaints.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to answer a few of the propositions which the gentleman from Iowa has submitted. First, in reference to the air motors. There is a member of the committee here who resides in New York, where these air motors are in use, and who is familiar with their use. On one line in New York there are now six of these motors in operation. They are used on a cable road intermediately between the cable cars. The company has made a contract for 25 of them, 6 of which are now in operation. in operation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me ask the gentleman whether the use of Mr. HEPBURN. Let me ask the gentleman whether the use of those motors has gone beyond the mere experimental stage. Are they not being experimented with, just as one of our street railroad companies here experimented for months and months with the storage-battery cars? Gentlemen will remember when those cars were nominally in use upon the Metropolitan Railroad for a year or so, yet it was a mere experimental use, and they were finally abandoned.

Mr. BABCOCK. In New York a contract has been made for the entire equipment of the read with those maters and they are

Mr. BABCOCK. In New York a contract has been made for the entire equipment of the road with these motors, and they are being supplied as fast as the manufacturer can turn them out, so it is obvious that their use has gone beyond the experimental stage. In reference to the stockholders of this company, the gentleman has stated the facts as to the holding of the majority of the stock.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have stated the facts as they were reported to me.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, the facts are these: There are 10,000 shares of stock; 5,003 shares are held by what is termed the company—that is, the men who control the road; 4,997 shares are held by outside interests in small holdings, less than 200 shares in each holding

Mr. HEPBURN. One question right there. Are not the 5,003 shares held entirely by men who do not reside in the city of

Mr. BABCOCK. They are held by the controlling interest of the road-

Mr. HEPBURN. The controlling interest in other cities.
Mr. BABCOCK. I do not know whether the holders reside here or not. But that has nothing to do with the ownership or the rights of the stockholders.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, it might have in this "freezing-out"

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me to continue a few moments without interruption?

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman will excuse me.
Mr. BABCOCK. As I stated before, innocent holders hold nearly 5,000 shares of this stock—one-half of it within three shares. Now, would the gentleman advocate a policy which would compel the sale of this road? Does he favor a policy which would play into the hands of these foreign owners and sacrifice the interests of the people here in Washington who own one-half of the stock of the road lacking three shares?

Mr. Hepburn rose. Mr. BABCOCK. I trust the gentleman will not interrupt me at this moment.

Now, the object of this bill, and what it will accomplish, is to protect these stockholders—to adopt such legislation that there may be a chance to go ahead and develop this road. We have here the same old story that we had with the Metropolitan road. In reference to that road the same arguments were brought forward that are brought forward here to-day. The Metropolitan Company acknowledged, as this company now acknowledges, "We are in default before Congress.

This road has not given the people the service they are entitled to. Numerous complaints have come to us on this ground. I can show the gentleman two bushel baskets full of petitions directly in the the gentleman two bushel baskets full of petitions directly in the line of what he says. Now, the thing for Congress to do is the best thing that it is possible to do. What is that? To sell out the road, to put it into the hands of these gentlemen residing outside of Washington, to "freeze out" the stockholders who are here in this city? By no means. We are assured, as I said before, that if the receiver can convince the court that the money is forthcoming to pay this indebtedness—if the ability can be shown to handle the finances of the road—the court will hold the matter open and give an opportunity for doing so.

Now, these men ask for six months. Why do they ask for six months? Why do they ask for more than ninety days? Because the concern that had contracted to furnish 25 motors on this New York avenue line, of which 6 are now in operation, will require YOFR avenue line, of which 6 are now in operation, will require two or three months to finish that contract. They are people who are building these motors successfully, and those who will equip the first branch of this line, if it is done at all.

I fully sympathize with everything that the gentleman from Iowa has said in regard to the service of this road. I have stood on this floor and in committee and for days and weeks and months have fought property for extensions and smoother than the I fully sympathize with everything that the gentleman from Iowa has said in regard to the service of this road. I have stood on this floor and in committee and for days and weeks and months have fought propositions for extensions and amendments of this company's charter. I have said to these people that I would never vote to authorize them to lay down another rail in the city of Washington until they first rendered adequate service. Since the last bill in reference to this company was passed it appears that this factory has been burned, so that it would seem they have not been in default in not carrying out what they undertook to do. Now, shall we give them six months more time on this matter or shall we allow the creditors to foreclose the road and let the foreign stockholders take possession of it? That is the question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I can answer the gentleman's question. I would forfeit this charter if I had the power; and I would grant the franchise to that portion of these stockholders who have evinced a disposition and desire to conform to the action of Congress. That is what I would do. And I would refuse any grant or any further extension of any kind to these men who for years have refused to obey any of the orders that have been issued to them by Congress. Six months hence these men can make the same kind of an excuse with regard to their failure that they are mow making about the burning of the factory.

Mr. BABCOCK. No; this bill provides—

Mr. HEPBURN. I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I have not a particle of confidence in any statement in the nature of an excuse that is made by the management of these companies.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. I believe they are organized solely for the purpose of selfishly furthering their own interests to the detriment of the interests of the public. I have no idea that they intend to use the motors now spoken of. I believe it is their purpose of the public when they are believe it is their purpose of the public when they are believe it is their purpose of the public when they are believe it is their purpose of the public when they are believe it is their purpose of the public when they are believe it is their purpose of the public when they are believe it is their purpose of the public when they are the public when they are the public when they are they are the public that they are pose ultimately, when they can no longer delay, to put in the underground electric system. But they are trying to postpone that expenditure till the latest possible moment.

Let me remind the gentleman of some things which would seem to indicate that this is the fact. Did not this company go to the court that now has the custody of this property and ask authority to issue a new form of indebtedness for the purpose of further experimenting with these motors, and in that proceeding did they not seek for an order of the court to postpone in favor of this new debt the lien of the bondholders who, up to this time, have furnished the money for carrying on the operations of this road? Is not that true?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am not aware of the fact.
Mr. HEPBURN. And did not the court very properly and necessarily refuse assent to the proposition, and rebute the impunecessarily refuse assent to the proposition, and rebuke the impudence of those who asked to perpetrate an outrage of that kind?

But these gentlemen apparently think that they can control Congress and control the court just as they please. And they find advocates, it seems. I recognize the fact that the gentleman from Wisconsin was most earnest in his opposition to giving this company what he now seems anxious to grant them. Six months ago he was not willing that what is now asked should be done; and it was only with the greatest reluctance that he was persuaded to allow that bill to pass.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is correct.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, after they have had the six months which they asked and have made most dismal failure, I am astonished that he should come here advocating another six months.

tonished that he should come here advocating another six months. although no excuse of a respectable character has yet been made for the default already incurred.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to call the attention of my friend from Iowa to one provision in the pending bill that he has apparently overlooked; that is, the mandatory section 3, which

Sec. 3. That if said railway companies shall not, on or before July 1, 1897, decide to adopt compressed air motors, then said railway companies shall, within one year from July 1, 1897, equip the respective lines in the city of Washington with an underground electric system.

We gave the Metropolitan road two years to do it in.
Mr. HEPBURN. Well, will the gentleman consent to an additional amendment, forfeiting all the rights of the corporation if they fail to comply with what you call the mandatory requirements of this act?

Mr. BABCOCK.
Mr. HEPBURN.
pany like this? Well, that is a pretty arbitrary proposition. What is a mandatory requirement to a com-

Mr. BABCOCK. A penalty could be provided at $500 a day. Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. They would not pay it, and could not pay it, if it was provided.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let there be a forfeiture, or some guarantee of good faith on their part.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, as a further illustration of this matter, I ask the Clerk to read a part of the act of 1896, approved June 10 of that year, bearing upon this very a proper and satisfactory motive power for the speedy and convenient propulsion of street cars, then the said Commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to issue to the said railway companies, respectively, permits to equip their lines within the District of Columbia with such compressed-air motors; and within six months from the passage of this act the said railway companies shall cease to use horsepower on any and all of their respective lines. In the event that the said compressed-air motors shall not be approved as herein provided for, then within eighteen months from the passage of this act the said companies, respectively, shall construct and put into full operation on all their lines in the city of Washington the underground electric system.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. You will notice that by the act of the last session of Congress just read by the Clerk the same requirement was made of this company which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock] thinks would be improper at the present time.

There is another point to which I wish to call the attention of the House. That act provides that they shall begin to equip the road within three months. At the time it was under consideration in the House I objected to giving them three months in which to begin the equipment. We have practically now the same answer given then in regard to the necessity for an extension of the time. The gentlemen from Wisconsin has explained same answer given then in regard to the necessity for an extension of the time. The gentleman from Wisconsin has explained what he regards as the necessity for it. We yielded on that point in the last session, and at the expiration of the three months they had not begun to do what the law required them to do. They have not equipped one single portion of the road with one of these motors up to the present time.

Then the act goes on and says that they shall run their cars regularly over certain streets, mentioned in the bill which you then passed. They have not even done that.

Still again, the act of last June requires that these motors shall be satisfactory to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and that they shall not be used, even if found satisfactory to the company, until they have been approved and a permit granted by the Commissioners for that purpose.

In the resolution which is now before the House all of these clauses are omitted, and if the resolution should become operative the powers of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia relating to the road would be absolutely annihilated. There is not a word in the resolution requiring these motors to be satisfactory to the Commissioners, or that the cars to be operated by the motors shall be run to suit the Commissioners or the public.

I would like, therefore, some member of the committee to explain why these clauses of the act of last June are omitted from this provision.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit to the gentleman from New Hampshire that the resolution does not repeal those provisions, but simply extends the time, and the provisions to which he refers remain operative and in force. If there should even be any doubt upon the subject it can be put in by resolution.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. If it does not repeal it I can be provided the resolution of this resolution.

not understand the meaning of some portions of this resolution.

For instance, this proviso, on page 1:

Provided, That prior to said last mentioned date the said railway companies shall have become satisfied that said compressed-air motors are in all respects proper and satisfactory as a motive power for the speedy and convenient propulsion of street cars.

And again, section 2:

SEC. 2. That if said railway companies shall decide to adopt said motive power they shall completely equip their respective lines with such motive power on or before July 1, 1898.

Mr. MILNES. I will state to the gentleman from New Hampshire that that part of the bill was agreed in the committee to be stricken out.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It was not so reported to the

Mr. MILNES. It should have been, the committee having agreed upon it.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I do not know how that is, but it is not so stated before the House. I do not believe the House, and can not believe that the committee, is ready to turn over to this company absolute and conclusive power and judgment in relation to this question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all. It is at the discretion of the Commissioners

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then I shall be glad to have the committee in some way correct this bill, and then I will proceed with my argument. My attention has been called to the fact that, although the resolution is before the House, there has been no report made upon it and no statement made by the committee as to its purposes or its amendments, excepting the verbal report which has been made here this morning.

Mr. MODESE. Will the gentlemen from New Hampshire allow.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman from New Hampshire allow me a moment?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Yes.
Mr. MORSE. In that moment which the gentleman yields to me I should like to say that I have walked over some of the routes of these horse cars, and if the company are not going to change the motive power they should get some wagons and shovels and clean up the excrement of the horses on the lines of these roads. no wonder that the people of this District have malaria, because I do not believe there is a city in the United States where such a vile, filthy condition of the public streets is allowed as is permitted in this city. It is vile. Just walk down New Jersey avenue and strike this Belt Line. I have to put my handkerchief to my face every time I cross that track. It is an outrage upon the citizens of the District. of the District

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not the duty of the District Commissioners, instead of the railroad company, to keep the city clean?

Mr. MORSE. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that it seems to me that it is the duty of the Commissioners and of this House to see that the company abandons the antiquated fifteen-dollar horses that are hitched to these cars and substitutes for them electric power or cable power or motors run by some other power, and get rid of these filthy animals in the public streets.

Mr. BABCOCK. Is the gentleman aware that that is what Congress has been trying to do for some time? That is the object of this bill.

of this bill.

Mr. MORSE. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Baker] has just been pointing out that this bill fails to do it, and that these roads have not been held up to the conditions of the that these roads have not been held up to the conditions of the existing law.

Mr. BABCOCK. Has the gentleman read the bill?

Mr. MORSE. I have heard the statement of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to say that there is an abundant supply of both the bills and the reports in the House.

Mr. MORSE. Now, I want to continue that remark. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] the other day, in referring to the matter of "abundant supply," called the attention of the House and dwelt at great length upon the fact—

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is not the alcoholic-liquor bill that is under consideration.

Mr. MORSE. I beg your pardon.

Mr. BABCOCK. And the matter of time is very precious this afternoon.

afternoon.

Mr. MORSE. The gentleman from Wisconsin went back to the alcoholic-liquor debate. It was not myself that went back to it. I insist upon my position and statement that these railroad companies have not, as pointed out by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Baker], complied with the existing law, and that we have in this District, on the lines of these roads, still the antiquated horse car that is unknown in any other city in the Union of the size of the city of Washington.

Mr. ODELL. Except New York.

Mr. MORSE. And it is high time that the existing law was changed, and that the motive power of these lines was changed changed, and that the motive power of these lines was changed from horses to electric or cable power or some other form of motor. With that change I believe the health of the people of this District will be greatly improved, and the filth and excrement which is now allowed to accumulate on these tracks will be removed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Mr. Monsel with respect to horse cars. I want to say that he is [Mr. Morse] with respect to horse cars. I want to say that he is mistaken when he says horse cars are not used in any other city in the Union of the population of Washington, but that is immaterial. These roads that are involved in this controversy are largely suburban roads. One of them extends out into the country to Brookland, and for a mile or more along it there is scarcely a building. Now, it is true that they use horse cars on a part of their tracks, but this proposition is one which involves the removal of the horses. We are trying our best to get a provision enacted into law which will remove the horses and horse cars from these lines. We believe this is the best that can be done.

The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Baker] finds fault

The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Baker] finds fault with the roads because they have not complied with the act of Congress which was passed last June. They have not, but the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Baker] says that they were given three months within which to begin to comply with that act of Congress and that not one thing was done within the three months. That is the gentleman's statement. It is in evidence before the committee, Mr. Speaker, that within two days, and I believe on the first day after the passage of the law the and I believe on the first day after the passage of the law, the company made a contract with the manufacturers of these bottles or tubes to hold the compressed air for the motors, in order that they might comply with the act of Congress. The manager of the road stated—

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit a question there?
Mr. RICHARDSON. In a moment. The manager of the road stated in his testimony before the committee that within fortyeight hours, I believe, an agreement was made with the company in Germany to furnish these tubes or bottles. Now, that was a beginning. I will yield now to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] for his question.

Mr. Hepburn. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman if he did not state to the House when the bill which this one proposes to amend was under consideration that this company had then made contracts for those new machines with which to operate their road, and did he not make that statement in reply to a suggestion made by myself that no machines of that kind were manufactured in the United States?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There was some debate on the measure at that time, and it may be that I made some such remark, based upon the testimony before the committee at that time.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman will allow me—
Mr. RICHARDSON. In a moment. I do not remember that I

Mr. RICHARDSON. In a moment. I do not remember that I spoke then on the proposition to manufacture bottles or tubes. I do not think I did; but we did have testimony before the committee that an arrangement had been made that within thirty days they would operate some kind of compressed air motor car upon this line. That statement was made by a different gentleman than the one who has recently been before the committee with than the one who has recently been before the committee with respect to these matters.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very naturally.

Mr. RICHARDSON (continuing). And the assurance then was that within thirty days a compressed-air car would be in operation. An arrangement was made by the company to comply with the act of Congress passed in June with a company in Germany—and I am informed the only company—that manufactures these bottles which hold the compressed air; and, as I was about to remark, three months' time was given that company in the contract within which to manufacture these bottles. tract within which to manufacture these bottles.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before the gentleman gets away from that

I desire to ask him-

Mr. RICHARDSON. In a moment. Let me finish this idea, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

I do not know these things of my own personal knowledge; I do not know these things of my own personal knowledge; I only know from the testimony before the committee—they made the contract within forty-eight hours in their effort to comply with the act of Congress. It was made in June, and before the three months had expired. Near the close of the three months within which these bottles were to be supplied the manufactory, owned by the Government of Germany, that had the contract to supply them was burned. It was some time before they learned why it was the contract was not complied with within the three months. That is what I want to state with respect to the effort made by the company to secure the necessary supply. Whether it is true or not I do not know, but I believe it is.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman state what reason he has to believe in this second or revised statement in regard to the contract rather than he has to believe in the first that was made in tract rather than he has to believe in the first that was made in to believe in this second or revised statement in regard to the contract rather than he has to believe in the first that was made in June last or prior?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why, if their testimony is to be believed, it is true. I believe they told the truth.

Mr. HEPBURN. Of course. But do you believe it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do. I believe it. They come and tell us that the reason why they have not complied with this act was because there was a fire that destroyed the manufactory. I am compelled to believe them. Now, they say they can go forward within this time, presuming it should be given them. I do not know whether they can; but the question is, What are you going to do if they should not? Do you propose to repeal the charter?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What would become of the stockholders and those who have put their money into this road?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would regrant the franchise to those who would show some disposition to obey the commands of Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They are not here seeking or asking such relief. The road would be sold for less than half what the stockholders have paid for it.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no trouble in disposing of these valuable franchises of these people to sound and solvent corporations.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know about that.

Mr. HEPBURN. But right here I want to ask the gentleman. He tells us he believes this story about the burning of the factory in Germany.

He tells us he believes this story about the burning of the factory in Germany.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe it upon their statements. I believe the gentleman who testified about it is a reputable man, and entitled to full credit.

Mr. HEPBURN. But was not it a reputable man in the same sense that told the gentleman last June that they had already completed a contract with a firm in this country for twenty-five of these motors?

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the gentleman is making an assumption in that respect that I do not agree with him about.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am quite confident it was made. I think it was made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think I spoke on the occasion he refers to about these bottles.
Mr. MILNES. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest—
Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think I did.
Mr. HEPBURN. I remember that I called the gentleman's attention to this correspondence which the members of this association to this correspondence which the members of this asso-ciation in the northeastern part of the city had had with the alleged manufacturers of this machine.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am reminded by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Milnes] that there was a contract made with a firm in Pittsburg with reference to some portion of the machinery for this line, and that may be what was spoken of, but, as I under-stand it, there had been no contract made for these tubes or bottles, which are very peculiar in their construction, and about which I have not expert knowledge. The gentleman asks me why I believed the representations made at that time and why I believe them now. I reply that I believed them because I thought the persons making them were reputable gentlemen, and the company comes here and gives this excuse for not having complied with the act of Congress.

I believe it is to the interest of the minority stockholders, as well as to the interest of the majority, that this extension should be given, and that Congress should require this company to equip this road with a rapid-transit motor. I believe that this bill will accomplish that purpose and will give the people rapid transit on this line. The gentleman from Iowa speaks of a portion of the this line. The gentleman from Iowa speaks of a portion of the line paying its way from the time of its construction. I think he is correct in that. I think the line along C and D streets and along G street to the Treasury building did earn its expenses, but that is only a part of a system which extends, as I have said, out to Brookland; and as to a large portion of that system the reports show that it is not earning its expenses. These street railroads file their reports annually, and if gentlemen will take the trouble to examine them they will find that the greater portion of this line is not paying running expenses. Of course when you consider the receipts of any line of road you must take into account the whole of the road, and when you take in the whole of this Eckington road you find that it has not earned money for its stockholders.

or the road, and when you take in the whole or this Eckington road you find that it has not earned money for its stockholders.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that in this case we ought not to repeal the charter of the road, because I do not think that will accomplish the object we have in view. On the contrary, it would leave the people along the line of that suburban road utterly without street-car accommodation. Its effect would be to injure the people at Eckington, who are clamoring for legislation against this company, because they would be left without transportation facilities, and I venture to say that their property would be reduced 50 per cent in value in consequence of that deprivation. So, in my judgment, looking at the question conservatively, the best thing that we can do is to grant this extension of time, the best thing that we can do is to grant this extension of time, to require the company to put on rapid transit, and to impose such a penalty as will compel them to do it. If anybody desires to provide in this bill that if the company do not comply with the requirement of the act of Congress their charter shall be forfeited, I do not object. I am willing to put in a provision that in case of failure on their part to comply with the requirements of the law, steps shall at once be taken in the District courts to forfeit their charter. I think that about the best thing we can do is to grant the extension asked for with proper safeguards.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "Provided," in line 9, and all following it, in lines 10, 11, 12, and 13.

The amendment was agreed to.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.
Mr. HEPBURN. One moment, Mr. Speaker. I want to offer an amendment to the third section.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, the second section is quite as bad as that which has been struck out. It reads as follows: as follows:

That if said railway companies shall decide to adopt said motive power they shall completely equip their respective lines with such motive power on or before July 1, 1898.

That, again, leaves the entire discretion in this matter to the managers of the company.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I move to strike out section 2.
Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, that action would be simply ridiculous. This section provides that if these motors prove satisfactory the company must equip its road with them within six months

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. In his opinion it may be perfectly ridiculous now, Mr. Speaker, but it was not ridiculous in the opinion of the gentleman from Wisconsin last June to permit the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to decide whether these motors are fit for use or not, fit to accommodate the people who desire to travel upon this road, and the proposition is not ridiculous to-day. It is proper that this House should decide what this company shall do, and not that the company should decide for the House. Here is a company which, by existing law, is under certain restrictions, and it comes here now and asks an extension of time in order that it may accomplish certain things, while at the same time, by indirection, it asks that the House shall abdicate all the authority which it has heretofore reserved and placed in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and is a demand which I do not believe this House will grant.

call for a vote upon my motion.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Baker].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were-

-ayes 15, noes 25.

So the previous question was refused.

Mr. HÉPBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment to section 2 should be disposed of before an amendment to section 3 is received. The Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa to say that his amendment is to section 3. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire, striking out

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Let it be understood that the motion is to strike out section 2 absolutely. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa applies, I understand, to

The SPEAKER pro tempore. So the Chair understands. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire to strike out section 2.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, am I in order for a few remarks?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to striking out the clause referred to by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER for several reasons. It seems that this House is very much dissatisfied because this company has failed on the subject of compressed air. Now, I think that the House ought to have a very profound sympathy for the company on that very subject. [Laughter.] Then another brother—the gentleman from Massa-chusetts—comes here and indulges in a tirade against horses, which, historians have told us, have been the gauge and test of civilization from the beginning of the world.

This company, as I understand, is trying to do the best it can. It asks a little additional time to carry out the provisions of a contract into which it has entered. In the last Congress, or possibly at the last session—I have forgotten which—when we were dealing with the Metropolitan road, if the suggestions of certain gentlemen present in this House had been carried out, the road would have been ruined. Yet that road to-day, I undertake to say, is the

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. What is the gentleman's statement?

Mr. WILLIS. I say that the Metropolitan road is the best street railroad I ever traveled on.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Who was there in this House that undertook to "ruin" that road?

Mr. WILLIS. There was a measure before the House which, if it had been carried out, would have ruined the company.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I never heard of it.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I never heard of it.

Mr. WILLIS. If these gentlemen have had horsepower on their road, and the streets have been defiled because of that fact, that matter ought to have been attended to. If they have failed with regard to the matter of compressed air, we ought to give them a little time to introduce another motive power. The world was not made in a day. If we will not be too rapid, if we will not urge too precipitately our desires and opinions upon this road, we will give them the benefit of the provision which the gentleman from New Hampshire wishes to strike out. I believe they are honest enough and true enough to bring about righteous results. Let us not be precipitate on this subject; let us act with cool heads and with freedom from prejudice.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, this amendment should not be adopted, and the bill as now amended should be passed at once. adopted, and the bill as now amended should be passed at once. The interests of all the parties concerned in the successful operation of this road should be conserved; and they will be by the passage of this bill in its present form. On the 9th day of January next, unless some such measure as we are asked to adopt be taken, the court having jurisdiction of this case will order the road to be sold, thereby imperiling the rights and interests of the stockholders and of all parties concerned. I have no special sympathy for the majority who have the control of the stock of this road part for the minority. It is within the power of Congress to pronor for the minority. It is within the power of Congress to protect those rights and interests which are now imperfied. The action of the court, as I have said, will be taken on the 9th of January next. If the bill as it now stands be passed, it will relieve this corporation from its embarrassment and no injury will result

I wish to emphasize what has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee. And I will say I doubt the propriety of this House accepting the testimony of the gentleman [Mr. HEPBURN] who has opposed this measure so earnestly, because, although he is doubtless sincere and represents what he honestly believes to be true, nevertheless his statement is not that character of testimony that we should receive upon a question of this kind-not that kind of testimony which the committee is in the habit of receiving. Testimony received by the committee is of such character as to be accepted as true, unless evidence of like character shall come before the House so as to induce it to reverse the conclusion arrived at by the committee upon the facts before it. Now, the evidence before the committee apon the facts before it. Now, the evidence before the committee, as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, was that after the passage of the act of June, 1896, this company immediately entered into a contract for the purchase of the bottles in which to compress the air as a motor; and the testimony is undisputed, except for the declaration of the gentleman from Iowa on the floor here to-day that the contract could not be carried out, for the reason that the bottles containing the compressed air to be placed upon these cars could not, at the time, be manufactured in this country or anywhere else in the world. Hence it was practically impossible to carry out the contract.

The law passed by Congress provided that these two railroad companies must within three months after the passage of that act equip their respective lines with improved motive power. What did this company do in compliance with that legislation? As soon as it was within their power they found where some of these bottles could be purchased. It appears that before the destruction of the establishment in Germany a contract had been made by some par-ties in New York, and some of these bottles had been purchased by them. This company found out where those bottles were. was discovered they were owned by parties in the city of New York. It appeared further, before our committee, that this species of motive power has been used in that city with success, and is being so used to-day. We were advised this morning by parties who claim to know the facts that this motive power is now being used there on 3 miles of road, going out and returning—experimentally, I admit, but successfully nevertheless—and that contracts have been entered into there for the completion of cars to be provided with motors to be operated by this system of com-

Now, what is proposed here? This company say, and the testimony before the committee seemed to be satisfactory on that subject, that it will cost at least one-fourth less than any other system of power—electric, cable, or other motive power—that has been tried. Here, then, is a company in financial distress and embarrassment which, under the law, is seeking to adopt a motive power for the propulsion of its cars that is reasonable in cost and within the possibility of accomplishment with their present means.

Mr. MEREDITH. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. HULICK. Certainly.
Mr. MEREDITH. Is there any opposition, or was there any opposition, to this bill from any person in the world, so far as the committee is concerned or is aware?

Mr. HULICK. I am very glad the gentleman has asked that question, that the members of the House may know there has not been a whisper of any sort to the committee of opposition against the adoption of this measure, except such as came here from gen-tlemen who are opposed to the extension of time as provided by this bill

Mr. HEPBURN. If I may be permitted to suggest it, the absence of opposition before the committee may possibly be the result of the experience of gentlemen who have appeared before the committee and made opposition heretofore. Their remonstrances and objections have often been treated with no consideration.

Mr. HULICK. I do not know the observation and experience of the gentleman from Iowa in those committees in which he has the honor to be a member. But I wish to say to him that no such condition of affairs has ever prevailed in the District Committee, but, on the contrary, the most respectful consideration and attention has been given to all remonstrances or appeals of this character. And I will say further, that if there was anything of the kind before the committee, notwithstanding that this is reported favorably by the committee to the House, if there were any opposition to it based on the grounds that the gentleman has suggested, or for any good reason, I would myself either vote against the bill or would move to recommit it to the committee, and give a hearing to all interested parties on the points at issue. But nothing of the kind has been suggested since this bill was before us for consider-

Now, what does the gentleman from Iowa say? What does he base his opposition on? He says that the citizens along the line of this road are protesting against the extension of time. It is a very strange fact that no word of such opposition was before the committee. The gentleman says that the opponents of this bill are not stockholders nor bondholders nor creditors of the company, but that they—whom he does not tell us—come in and complain against the companies because they have not done what they proposed to do under the act of June, 1896, and have refused to do what they had authority to do under their charter. Now he says he would take the charter away from them altogether and give it to the minority stockholders. What nonsense! How impractical! Why, Mr. Speaker, the minority stockholders' rights are as sacred, in the view of the Committee on the District of Columbia and of in the view of the Committee on the District of Columbia and of this House, as the rights of the majority; and we have endeavored to treat all exactly alike. We are not regarding the rights of either the majority or the minority stockholders, but the rights of all parties in interest and also of the patrons of the road. We are endeavoring to conserve the rights of the people—the interests of the public—that the gentleman proposes to speak for and claims to represent on the floor of the House, and looking to their interests, as well as to those of creditors and stockholders, we have presented this measure for your adoption.

Another thing to which I wish to call attention: The bill proposes to give an opportunity for a trial of three months by the road of this new system. We have the further statement before the committee, and the assurance of gentlemen in whom we have perfect confidence, that within thirty days they will put this motive power into certain of their cars, and place them on the track and begin at once to furnish to the public the service required. If the bill is adopted then we have the assurance of the commany that bill is adopted, then, we have the assurance of the company that they will within thirty days place this power on the tracks and the experiment will be able to be satisfactorily tested.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman will allow me, do I understand, or are we to infer from this last remark, that this unfortunate factory in Germany has been rebuilt? Mr. HULICK. Yes, sir; you can infer that. I can state that it is ready to supply orders for these bottles, which are on the market to all companies who are prepared to buy them. And this company, being in the condition to which I have referred, will be able to procure the bottles and will not need to ask any further extension of time, or at least, if they fail under this grant, will have no excuse for not fully testing this new propelling power.

I say, then, Mr. Speaker, with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Richardson], and I think it is the sentiment of all the members of the committee, that you may attach such penalties as you please for a failure to carry out the requirements of this act, but we have every reasonable businesslike assurance that if the bill is adopted the interests of the people will be subserved—the bond-holders, the creditors, and the stockholders and the public interest at the same time will be subserved, and evenhanded justice will be done. Failure to adopt this measure will be ruinous to many people whose interests are involved in this enterprise.

Mr. TRACEY. If the road is able to put in these motors within thirty days, and put the cars on the road for service, why the necessity for this extension of something like seven months? I understand the gentleman to say that it is proposed to have the motors placed in the cars and on the road for service within thirty days. If that is true, why the necessity for this extension?

Mr. HULICK. I think perhaps the gentleman misunderstood my statement. Doubtless I was not fortunate in my expression. I did not intend to be understood by the gentleman, or by the House, that they will be ready to operate their cars in that time; but only that there would be a portion of them equipped and operated as an experiment; that within thirty days they will have this power on the track, and try to demonstrate its success; and if it is a success, then it will be feasible to have all their cars equipped in like manner. If it is not a success, and shall not be adopted, they pledge themselves to place such other power, electric or otherwise, upon the road as will make it a success and be acceptable to the public and in harmony with the requirements of their company charters and the acts of Congress relating thereto.

Mr. MEREDITH. They will only be able to get about twenty-five cars every three months, you know.

Mr. HULICK. And another fact, suggested by my friend from Virginia [Mr. Meredith]; it is a physical impossibility to get these cars more rapidly than perhaps twenty-five every three months. They must be constructed to suit this power. Now, the purchasing of the bottles is a small matter compared with the construction of the cars, because of the time it takes to build them. But within six months the whole road, if this is a suc-cess, will be fully equipped with this power to the satisfaction of everybody. Mr. BABCOCK.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker—
Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask my colleague to yield to me for one moment, to correct a statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn]. He asked me if I did not recollect some guaranty or promise made by some gentlemen interested in these roads when the bill was pending before Congress last spring.

Mr. HEPBURN. You are mistaken. I referred to representa-tions that I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

RICHARDSON] to make with regard to the companies.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have turned to the debate on the bill at that time, and there was no such question, as far as I can find, and no such guaranty made by me. The matter was not debated at all when the bill was pending. I simply want to put myself right on that

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, after a conference with the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Baker], he has suggested certain amendments which are satisfactory to the committee, and, with the permission of the House, I will offer these amendments which are suggested by the gentleman, and which I think remove his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). Does the gentleman withdraw his motion to strike out the section?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I will withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin Mr. BABCOCK] offers certain amendments, which he will send to the desk. Mr. BABCOCK. I offer to amend by inserting, in line 3 of the bill, between the words "time" and "within," the words "granted by the act approved June 10, 1896," and striking out all beginning with the word "Provided," in line 9, to the end of section 1. Also, amend section 2 so that it will read as follows:

That if said compressed-air motors shall be adopted, said companies shall completely equip their respective lines with such motive power on or before July 1, 1898.

Amend section 3 as follows:

That if said compressed air motive power shall not be adopted on or before July 1, 1897, then said railway company shall, within one year from July 1, 1897, equip the respective lines in the city of Washington with an underground electric system.

This removes, I believe, all objections.

The amendments offered by Mr. Babcock were agreed to. Mr. HEPBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, there are some amendments which are proposed to come at the bottom of section 3. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr.

HEPBURN] offers an amendment to section 3, which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 3 add the words: "Provided, That in case the said companies shall fail to comply with all the requirements of this act by the time herein fixed, the said companies, and each of them, shall forfeit and pay to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the sum of $500 for each day after such failure.

"And provided further, That if said companies shall fail to operate all of their respective lines as provided by an act entitled 'An act to extend the routes of said railway companies,' etc., approved June 10, 1896, in such manner and on such schedules as the Commissioners shall approve, then said companies and each of them shall forfeit and pay to the District Commissioners the sum of $100 for each day of such failure."

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand that the committee are willing to accept those amendments.

Mr. BABCOCK. The penalty, I think, is much too high—$500

Mr. HEPBURN. That was the sum you named. I took it from you.

Mr. BABCOCK. Five hundred dollars a day?

Mr. HEPBURN.

Yes. Was it not $500 a month that I named? Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. HEPBURN.

Mr. BABCOCK. I think $100 a day would be a sufficient penalty

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, let us make it $500 a day. If they are acting in good faith it will do them no harm.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If we make the penalty too high no court will enforce it. It would be better to make it more reasonable. If it is unreasonable and extravagant no court will enforce it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then make it a hundred dollars a day. Mr. MAHON. I move to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty."

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope that will not prevail.
Mr. MAHON. I hope it will.
Mr. HEPBURN. The committee are willing to accept "one

Mr. MAHON. I do not care what the committee are willing to accept. The question is, What is right?

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Mahon, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a formal amendment: SEC. 4. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby spealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for consider-Mr. BABCOCK. ation the bill S. 1265, and I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill S. 1265.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.
The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Payne in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1265) for the relief of Emmart, Dunbar & Co.

A bill (8, 1255) for the relief of Emmart, Dunbar & Co.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $14,548.22, the amount found due Emmart, Dunbar & Co. by the auditor of the District of Columbia for work done by said firm in connection with the laying of the 38-inch water main under their contract of September 1, 1871, with said District, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia; and the Commissioners of said District are hereby authorized and directed to pay the said sum of money to said firm in satisfaction of said amount so found due.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague, Mr.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague, Mr. MEREDITH of Virginia, who made the report on this bill.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Chairman, this bill affords an opportunity to the District government to be honest. It does not often happen, as a friend suggests on my left. I suppose that the government is honest, but it is generally compelled to pay after a long period of years. This is a bill, sir, to pay out of the District fund to Emmart, Dunbar & Co. the sum of fourteen thousand and some odd dollars for work done in 1871. The auditor of the District has made a report in which he finds due to that company the sum specified in the bill. It has passed the Senate and has been reported favorably by the Committee on the District of Columbia of this House. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia say in their report that it ought to be paid. The Committee on the District of the D their report that it ought to be paid. The Committee on the District of Columbia have investigated the matter and they have agreed with the Senate that this is an honest and just debt, and that these men, who have been kept out of this money for twenty-five years without interest, ought to be paid, and that the District Commiswithout interest, ought to be part, and that the District Commissioners should have authority to pay it, as they ask. It seems to me that if any gentleman will read the report he will be satisfied that this is an honest debt for work done by these gentlemen twenty-five years ago, and they have not been paid by reason of the fact that the District Commissioners thought that there ought to be authority from Congress to pay them. They have been kept out of their money that long, and they are here to-day asking for the original amount found to be due them by the auditor of the District, without interest, to come out of the District fund entirely, the Government paying not one cent of it. We ought to accommodate the District Commissioners, and we ought to permit this debt, which is honest and just and which has been so long standing, to be paid.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MEREDITH. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Is this in excess of the contract for work done not included in the contract? How does the

Mr. MEREDITH. This is a claim, as I understand it, for extra work which was done under the old District government, before it was changed to the District Commissioners. They believed that it required some authority from Congress to pay it, but recognized that it is honest and just. Their accounting officer made a report specifying every item, which they acknowledge to have been performed by this company. They claim to-day that it is due to this firm of Emmart, Dunbar & Co., and all they ask is authority of Congress to pay it. They claim that it ought to be

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I presume the gentleman has stated the findings of the auditor and the Commissioners of the District?

Mr. MEREDITH. Certainly

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But my purpose was to find how the claim originally arose. I ask the gentleman if it arose outside of the contract?

Mr. MEREDITH. If my friend will permit me, I will read the report. I read from Mr. Daniel Donovan on the claim. He was the accounting officer of the District at that time and was familiar with the facts.

iar with the facts.

On the 21st day of September, 1871, Lloyd W. Emmart, Alexander Dunbar, and William Smith, doing business under the style of Emmart, Dunbar & Co., of Washington, D. C., entered into a contract in writing with George H. Elliott, major of engineers, United States Army, chief engineer of the Washington Aqueduct, and Edwin L. Stanton, acting governor of the District of Columbia, to "lay cast-iron water pipes, stopcocks, and special castings, under an act of Congress approved by the President July 14, 1870, and an act of the legislative assembly of the Districtof Columbia approved by the governor July 20, 1871."

Said acts provided for additional supply of Potomac water by means of the Washington Aqueduct to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and authorized a loan for said purpose, by the laying of a new iron main 36 inches in diameter, at the expense of the cities aforesaid, from the distributing reservoir above Georgetown to certain stated points in the said cities.

This contract comprises three sections or divisions, namely:

The reservoir division, extending from the distributing reservoir division, extending from the distributing reservoir of the Washington Aqueduct to the west side of Foundry Branch;

The West Washington division, extending from Rock Creek Bridge to the west side of Fifteenth street; and

The East Washington division, extending from the west side of Fifteenth street to the center of New Jersey avenue and L street NW.

The material part of the contract and specifications pertinent to the claim in question are here set out:

"The pipes are to be laid in such locations and upon such lines and grades as the engineer may designate.

"All the pipes, stopcocks, and special castings appertaining thereto, except the air cocks, will be furnished to the contractor at the railroad depot or on such wharf or wharves in the cities of Georgetown and Washington as the engineer may elect.

"The cost of handling after delivery and all other expenses of labor, ma-engineer may elect.

"The cost of handling after delivery and all other expenses of labor, materials, tools, etc., incurred in hauling, distributing, and laying of said pipes, stopcocks, and other appurtenances shall be paid by the contractor.

"The contractor shall be responsible for any loss incurred or damage done to any pipes or appurtenances from the time of delivery until laid and covered. * * *

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The gentleman is simply reading the specifications. The question I desire to ask him is, Has this claim been investigated by prior Congresses?

Mr. MEREDITH. This claim has been investigated not only by prior Congresses, and reported on favorably, but it has already, at this session of Congress, passed the Senate upon the recom-mendation of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and this money comes out of the fund of the District entirely, the Government paying not one cent. The auditor of the District, who has charge of the financial matters of the District, has made a thorough investigation, and he states in his report that is a just debt and that so many dollars are due to this company, naming the sum specifically.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. This debt, as I understand, matured in 1871?

Mr. MEREDITH. It matured in 1871.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Can the gentleman state any good or sufficient reason why it has not been paid before this?

Mr. MEREDITH. The only reason I can suggest is that this government, as I understand, never pays anybody but its employees unless it is forced to do it by an act of Congress. In the Fifty-third Congress I reported a bill to pay this debt, and it came up in the House and was knocked out upon a point of order because it was sought to put it upon some appropriation bill. The requirement of the bill then was that the Government should pay one half of this amount, but now it is claimed that the District one-half of this amount, but now it is claimed that the District fund alone should pay it, so that not one cent of this money comes out of the constituents of the gentleman from New Hampshire or of any other gentleman on this floor. The Commissioners having charge of the affairs of this District believe this to be an honest claim and that it ought to have been paid years ago. Genthemen will remember that the form of government here was changed some years ago, and that was the reason it was not paid at the time. It was thought then, and the Commissioners think now, that an act of Congress is required to give them authority to do what is the honest thing to do—pay this debt.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I am entirely satisfied with that part of the gentleman's remarks. What I wish to know is whether this sum of twelve or fourteen or eighteen thousand dollars is for extra work, work outside of the contract. Upon what is it based?

Mr. MEREDITH. If my friend will look at the report which I hold in my hand, in the report of Mr. Donovan, who was employed by the District authorities to investigate the matter, he will find that every item that is here charged against the District is fixed and identified in that report, and that the Commissioners agree that the amount should be paid.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But what is it for? Is it for extra work or material?

Mr. MEREDITH. If the gentlemen will look on page 9 of the

Mr. MEREDITH. If the gentleman will look on page 9 of the report he will get the information he desires.

Mr. HULICK. Here it is [reading]:

For extra work done and materials furnished, $18,957.17.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then it is for extra work and material. Now, was this such a claim that it could have been brought before the so-called "Brodhead commission?"

Mr. MEREDITH. I do not know that it was. I am not prepared to answer that question, but what I do know, and what I desire to impress upon this House, is that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, whose duty it is to look after the interests of this District and see to it that no unjust claim is paid, have examined this matter, by their accounting officer and auditor, and have become satisfied that every dollar charged in this claim is due and has been due since 1871, a period of twenty-five years, during which the interest on the claim, if interest had been charged, would have more than doubled the amount.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will ask the gentleman if this bill is unanimously approved by the Commissioners of the District?

Mr. MEREDITH. I believe that one of the Commissioners dissented, but a majority of them are in favor of it, and I do not understand that the Commissioner who dissented believes that the claim ought not to have been paid. I ask my friends simply to read the report in this case and they will be satisfied. I think that my friend from Missouri, to be consistent, ought not to desire to impress upon this House, is that the Commissioners of to read the report in this case and they will be satisfied. I think that my friend from Missouri, to be consistent, ought not to attempt to oppose the passage of this bill now, for it seems to me that but for him these old people, who have been kept out of their money so long, would have had it years ago. I may be mistaken, but I think it was my friend from Missouri who knocked the bill out on a point of order in the last Congress; but I do maintain, Mr. Chairman, that this is an honest and just debt and that it ought to have been paid long ago, and ought to be paid now without further delay. Mr. TALBERT.

Mr. TALBERT. Who pays this claim, if it is paid?
Mr. MEREDITH. The taxpayers of your district, my friend, do not pay one cent of it. The treasury of the District of Colum-

Mr. TALBERT. And the Government has nothing to do with it?
Mr. MEREDITH. No, sir; not at all. The Government does not pay a penny.

Mr. TALBERT. Then why should the Government say whether the claim shall be paid or not if it has no interest in it?

Mr. MEREDITH. I do not think that any man ought to say that this claim shall not be paid.

that this claim shall not be paid.

Mr. TALBERT. I am merely asking for information.

Mr. MEREDITH. I am obliged to the gentleman. The Government, I repeat, does not pay one cent of this claim. All that the Commissioners ask is that Congress shall give them authority to do what they believe is honest and right and just in this matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill that it ought to be amended in one particular.

Mr. MEREDITH. Oh, we do not want it to go back to the Senate and be further delayed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, the auditor of the District recommended that this claim be paid from the water fund of the District, and the bill is not so drawn.

the bill is not so drawn.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, this report shows that one of the Commissioners dissented from the payment of this claim on the distinct ground that the contract did not warrant the contractors in making any claim for extra service or extra work, and that the contract that the contract has been some reason for the Commissioners. I assume that there must have been some reason for the Commis-

I assume that there must have been some reason for the Commissioner taking that ground. Further on in the report made by Mr. Donovan, it is stated that "no claim shall be made nor allowed for extra quantity of lead or gas fitting," yet I find that to be item No. 2 in the claim filed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which has passed the Senate and been acted upon favorably by the Committee on the District of Columbia. This same measure has been before Congress and before the House committee during the entire time that I have been a member. I think that on several occasions it has been reported favorably to the House, and I think that once—in the Fifty-third Congress—it was passed. The bill, as I understand, is for extras on enlarged contract under the old city organization here. The bill as originally rendered was for $60,000.

The committee has not attempted to go into this matter item by item and to determine which items are correct and which are not. But we have depended upon the authorities here in the city. They say that this money is due to this gentleman, an old man who has haunted the Capitol here for years in connection with this matter. We depend upon the report made by the auditor and by the Commissioners. They say that the District of Columbia justly owes this man this money, and ask Congress to give them authority to pay it. That is the case in a nutshell.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Upon the gentleman's statement of the facts, the Commissioners have decided that this claim is a valid one.

Mr. BABCOCK. A just one. The committee has not attempted to go into this matter item by Mr. BABCOCK. A just one.

Mr. COX. Why, then, do not the Commissioners pay it?
Mr. BABCOCK. Because they have no authority to do so, as the indebtedness arose under the old form of city government.
The present Commissioners can not pay the claim without authority from Congress.

Mr. MEREDITH. The claim arose under the legislative form of government.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; the contract was originally let under the old form of city government.

Mr. COX. The contract was made under a former system of government, and now there is a different system?

Mr. MEREDITH. Exactly.
Mr. COX. And now the present officers of the city do not feel fully authorized to pay this claim because they do not represent that form of city government which was in operation when the claim was created?

Mr. BABCOCK. They have no authority at all to pay a claim of this kind without the action of Congress.

Mr. COX. They do not feel that they ought to pay indebtedness

Mr. COX. They do not feel that they ought to pay indebtedness which arose under the old system?

Mr. BABCOCK. They have no authority to do so.

Mr. COX. What is the amount of the claim?

Mr. BABCOCK. Fourteen thousand two hundred dollars.

Mr. COX. Now, tell me, what was it for?

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH] made the report, and he can give the gentleman the details.

Mr. MEREDITH. Every item is here in the report which I hold in my hand. The claim was for laying water mains from the reservoir through the city.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. As I understand from the statement of the chairman of the committee [Mr. BABCOCK], the committee made no inquiry, and has no special knowledge, as to the justice or injustice of this claim, but relies on the statements of the District auditor.

the justice of injustice of this claim, but relies on the statements of the District auditor.

Mr. BABCOCK. It was impossible for the District Committee to go into these matters item by item. The auditor appointed a man from his office for that special purpose, who spent several months upon the subject. He made a report; the auditor submitted the report to the Commissioners; and the Commissioners have recommended the payment of the claim, basing their recommendation on the report of the auditor. That is the status exactly.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Then the committee have not gone into the details of these items to ascertain whether they are gone into the details of these items to ascertain whether they are just charges or not?

Mr. BABCOCK. It would have been simply an impossibility for the committee to do so.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Then the result is this—that the committee and the Commissioners have taken the statements of the District auditor as true without any special examination on their own part.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on ordering the bill to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recom-

The question was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have another matter here which will require to be considered in Committee of the Whole, and I would like to call it up now

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the House went into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this particular bill. If that is so, no other matter would be in order.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move, then, that the committee rise.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move, then, that the committee rise. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1265) for the relief of Emmart, Dunbar & Co., had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it pass that it pass.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill just reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up the bill (H. R. 8726) to provide for the payment of certain claims against the District of Columbia by drawback certificates. The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the auditor of the supreme court of the District of Columbia is hereby empowered and directed to examine and audit for settlement all claims for property taken, injured, or destroyed by reason of the destruction or removal of the Northern Liberty Market, in the city of Washington, D. C., in September, 1872, as also all claims for payments made for the purchase, rent, or use of any stall or privilege in said market house and for license for conducting any business therein, to the extent of the unexpired term of said purchase, rent, use, or license.

SEC. 2. That when the auditor has ascertained the amount of the loss as above described, in any case growing out of the removal or destruction of the market as aforesaid, he shall issue a drawback certificate, signed by him as auditor, to the party or parties who suffered such loss or damage, or to their legal representatives, stating the amount found to be due and on what account issued, and shall keep a registry thereof; and such drawback certificates with interest thereon at 8.65 per cent per annum from September 4, 1872, shall be received for arrears of taxes due the District of Columbia and unpaid on June 30, 1895.

SEC. 3. That said auditor shall make a tabular statement of all claims presented, the persons owning the same, and the amount found to be due on account of each; and for the purposes hereinbefore specified said auditor shall have the power to subpome witnesses, administer caths, and examine witnesses under oath, and shall have full access to all of the records, books, papers, and vouchers of every kind whatsoever of the late board of public works and the District of Columbia, and shall provide, by fair and equitable rules, for the examination of the same by claimants or their attorneys. Said auditor shall give notice for the presentation of the claims hereinbefore specified in such manner as he may deem necessary, and no claimshall be audited or shall such the commissioners of the District of

The amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:
"Provided, That no claim shall be allowed, and no drawback certificate shall issue, upon such claim until the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have first approved the same."

Mr. MILNES rose.

Mr. MILNES rose.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make a point of order against this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point.

Mr. DOCKERY. My point is that the bill should first be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. For what reason?

Mr. DOCKERY. For the reason that it creates a liability upon

Mr. MILNES. It makes no appropriation.
Mr. DOCKERY. The bill in express terms carries a liability to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.
Mr. MILNES. There is no appropriation contemplated by the

Mr. DOCKERY. If the object of the bill is not what I state, I am utterly at a loss to understand the English language. If the Chair will turn to page 3 of the bill he will find a provision authorizing payment out of the surplus revenues of the District. Mr. MILNES. Payments are to be made by drawback certificates, which are to be receivable for taxes. There is no appropriation in the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the attention of the Chair to the provision on page 3, in lines 20 to 25, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Mich-

The SPEAKER. The Chair will near the gentleman from Michigan upon the point of order.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I think the point of order is not well taken, for the reason that there is no appropriation contemplated by the bill.

The SPEAKER. It seems that there are certain expenses to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia involved in the bill.

Mr. MILNES. That is true so far as the costs in the case are concerned.

The SPEAKER. It provides for costs?

Mr. MILNES. For the cost of the clerk of the court, that the clerk shall be appointed by the court, and provides for the costs

The SPEAKER. That is an expenditure.

Mr. MILNES. That, of course, would be an expenditure.

I will move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 8726.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. LACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8726) to provide for the payment of certain claims against the District of Columbia by drawback certificates.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, there is a committee amendment which I think would be first in order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before a vote is taken we want some debate upon this measure. The bill has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. It has just been read in the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is no disposition to make any point on that. I only wish time enough to get a copy of the report and see what liabilities are involved.

what liabilities are involved.

Mr. MILNES. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that propose to have the report read.

Mr. DOCKERY. That ought to be done before a vote is taken.

Mr. MILNES. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MILNES) was read, as follows:

Mr. DOCKERY. That ought to be done before a vote is taken.
Mr. MILNES. I ask for the reading of the report.
The report (by Mr. MILNES) was read, as follows:
The committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill of Columbia by the very defer the payment of certain claims against the District of Columbia by the very defer the payment of certain claims against the District of the House with an amendment to be added to the third section, as follows:
"Provided, That no claim shall be allowed and no drawback certificate shall sissue upon such claim until the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have first approved the same."
And that as so amended the bill be passed.
A bill of exactly the same purport as that pending in the House was introduced to the District of Committee of the Senate upon that bill is herewith appended and made a part of this report:
"The Committee of the Senate upon that bill is herewith appended and made a part of the payment of certain claims against the District of Columbia, by drawback certificates, beg leave to report the same back to the Senate with a recommendation that it pass.

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3114) to provide for the payment of certain claims against the District of Columbia by drawback certificates, beg leave to report the same back to the Senate with a recommendation that it pass.

The clind of Washington constructed a market house on a portion of the public grounds at the intersection of Seventh street and New York avenue, then unimproved and unoccupied, and accordingly the city erected a large market, known as the Northern Liberty Market.

"By ordinance of the city the rights and privileges to the stalls in this market were sold at public outcry to the highest bidder for a term of years—gener. the city charged and received in advance an annual rent for each of said stalls and for all privileges granted in the market, and as license for conducting any market business. The city in this way deriv were necessarily sacrificed to the public good, they were enument to compensation."

"The interest of 3.65 per cent allowed is exactly the amount allowed upon all claims, liquidated and unliquidated, growing out of the extraordinary action of the board of public works. The act of June 29, 1874 (U. S. Stat., vol. 18, pt. 3, p. 116), establishing the board of audit to adjust various classes of claims for improvements under the board of public works, provided that these should be paid in bonds of the District of Columbia, bearing 3.65 per cent per annum, and the act of June 16, 1880 (U. S. Stat., vol. 21, p. 284), referred a number of the claims which had not been finally adjudicated by the board of audit to the Court of Claims, and provided in section 6 that these claims should be paid in 3.65 per cent bonds of the District of Columbia, with a special proviso that before the bonds were delivered for payment of the claims "coupons shall be detached therefrom from the date of said bonds to the date upon which such claims were due and payable." If parties simply having claims, liquidated or unliquidated, against the District of Columbia for work done by them were allowed interest, it seems to the committee that parties whose property was destroyed or injured and whose money was actually paid for certain privileges which they never enjoyed should not be treated with less consideration.

"Some of these parties brought suit against Governor Shepherd for the recovery of damages, but he became insolvent and removed to Mexico, so that judgment was never obtained. Several filed claims before the board of audit, but they were dismissed for want of jurisdiction. At the time this injury was suffered by these parties the supreme court of the District of Columbia held that the District was not responsible for the actions of the board of public works. (See Barnes vs. The District, 1 MacArthur's Reports, 322.) On March 30, 1876, the United States Supreme Court reversed the above decision and held that the District was liable for the wrongdoing of the board of public works. (1 Otto, 540.) But this decision came after the expiration of the time within which these parties might have sued under the statute of limitations, and they have therefore been entirely without remedy. The Commissioners report that there has never been any tribunal to which these claims could be presented for this violent destruction of private property.

"The bill makes no appropriation of funds from the United States Treasury or from the District funds, but simply provides that these parties shall be issued drawback certificates which may be receivable for unpaid taxes. There are past-due penalties and taxes amounting to at least $1,500,000 due the District of Columbia, some of which has been due since 1877, and, in the opinion of the committee, these just claims against the District can be liquidated in this manner without any material expense to the District, and probably with a benefit resulting from the settlement of some of these past-due taxes whic

Mr. MILNES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the propriety of the passage of this bill and its merits are very fully set forth in the report which has just been read.

It appears that a good many years ago there was erected in the city of Washington, by the city, a large public market building, and it was provided by an ordinance of the city that the stalls in and it was provided by an ordinance of the city that the stalls in the market should be rented—let to the highest bidder—for a period of, usually, five years, and also that the city of Washington charged and collected a license for the privilege of doing business in that market. In 1873 it became necessary, or it was so concluded by the parties then in power in the city, that this market should be torn down to make way for certain public improvements in process Governor Shepherd, who was then at the head of of construction. Governor Snephera, who was then at the near of the board of public works, as stated in the report, said that it was necessary to carry on the improvements contemplated that this market building should be torn down; and also that it would be cheaper to take a large force of men and tear it down at night than to go into the courts and have litigation over it; that the parties who were injured by the destruction of their property, in tearing down the structure, could be paid more cheaply by the city, and that it would cost less in time and money to do it in that way. Accordingly a large force of men, 200 or more in number, assembled after dark with pickaxes, shovels, crowbars, and other implements of destruction, and gathered together at the public market without notice to the parties occupying the stalls in the market, and between that time and the next morning they demolished the building and destroyed practically everything that was contained in the building. The destruction also caused the death of two men, as I understand, who were engaged in the market—two lives being sacrificed in the demolition of the building.

Now, these men were occupying this building by permission, or by contract with the authorities of the city of Washington. They had paid for the use of the stalls in the market; they had paid their licenses to the city of Washington for the privilege of conducting their business there; they had placed their market supplies in the market building, and the city authorities came and destroyed the building, and the property in it, without giving them notice of any kind whatever.

Suit was brought against Colonel Shepherd as head of the board of public works, but he became a bankrupt and moved from the city of Washington to Mexico, and that suit was stopped, as nothing could be recovered from it. Suit was then brought in the courts of the city; but the courts ruled at that time that the city was not liable for the action of the board of public works. Therefore that suit was thrown out of court. Later the supreme court of the District of Columbia overruled the decision just mentioned, and held that the city of Washington was liable for the damages in tearing down the market building.

But when that decision was made the time had expired within which they could bring suit in the courts. Therefore the parties who suffered by the destruction of that market, whose property was destroyed, have had no remedy against the city, and can have no remedy except by act of Congress. That is the reason why this no remedy except by act of Congress. bill has been brought here.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and Now.

should like to hear if there is any opposition.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman if there is in fact an officer known as the auditor of the supreme court of the District of Columbia—if that is his correct title?

Mr. MILNES. I suppose so. That is the recommendation of the District Commissioners, and I suppose there must be such an

Mr. DOCKERY. If this office exists, it is the first time the fact has been called to my attention. We have an auditor for the District of Columbia, but I did not know until the fact-if it be a fact-was called to my attention by this bill, that there was such an officer as the auditor of the supreme court of the District.

Mr. MILNES. As the District Commissioners recommended it,

I take it for granted that that is the fact.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, in lines 18, 19, and 20 the bill proposes to compensate the auditor for the work authorized under this act, and the amount of the compensation is to be determined by the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. I suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that we leave the question of his compensation for the future, to be determined after the rvice is rendered.

With the gentleman's permission, I will offer an amendment to strike out, in lines 18, 19, and 20, the words:

For his services such compensation as the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia may determine, to be paid, together with.

So that it will leave the appropriation for the necessary expenses, the question of compensation of the auditor to be determined hereafter

Mr. MILNES. I scarcely think any auditor would go on and do this work if no provision is made for expenses incurred, clerk hire, and so forth.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is left in the bill. It leaves all the necessary expenses for clerk hire, stationery, and so forth to be paid out of the surplus revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MILNES. I do not understand the gentleman's amendment, and I ask the Clerk to report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 18, after the word "paid," strike out the words "for his services such compensation as the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia may determine, to be paid, together with."

Mr. MILNES. What objection is there to the provision as it is?
Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I would prefer to leave the question of compensation for the auditor, who is a salaried officer of the District, an open question. I think it would be better for Congress itself to determine the question of compensation after the service has been rendered. He is now receiving a good salary from the District. His time is fully employed and paid for, and the question of compensation can very easily be determined after the service is rendered. This amendment leaves the necessary revenue to provide for incidental clerical expenses and stationery. There is no trouble about it.

Mr. MILNES. I have no objection to that. I will accept the amendment.

amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. Dockery was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the committee, which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 25, after the word "District," insert the following:
"Provided, That no claim shall be allowed, and no drawback certificate shall issue upon such claim, until the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have first approved the same."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. MILNES. If there is nothing more to be said upon the bill,
I will move that the committee rise, and that the bill be reported favorably.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Lacey, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8726) to provide for the payment of certain claims against the District of Columbia by drawback certificates, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole ere agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MILNES, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF NORTH CAPITOL STREET.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6713) to extend North Capitol street to the Soldiers' Home, with Mr. LACEY in the chair.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to open and grade North Capitol street from T street to the Soldiers' Home, and are hereby authorized and directed to condemn, according to chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia for opening highways, such of the lands of the Prospect Hill Cemetery and of Annie E. Barbour as may be necessary for the extension of said street; and the amount of money necessary to pay the judgment of condemnation and the cost of grading is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act, but the cost of grading shall not exceed $10,000: Provided, That one-half of said sum shall be charged to the revenues of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That this appropriation shall be immediately available.

With amendments, as follows:

With amendments, as follows:

In lines 6, 7, and 8 strike out, after the word "to," the words "chapter II of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia for opening highways" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the act approved March 2, 1893, entitled 'An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities.'"

At the end of the bill insert:

"Provided further, That in lieu of condemnation proceedings the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to acquire by purchase the lands of said cemetery and Annie E. Barbour, or either of them, paying therefor, out of the appropriation herein authorized, the sum of $25,000 to the said cemetery and the sum of $20,000 to Annie E. Barbour."

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as gentlemen on the floor will remember, this bill was considered at some length in May last, and, for want of time, further consideration was postponed until the present session. In the meantime the Commissioners of the District have carefully considered the former legislation with respect to the opening of North Capitol street, and have submitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia their conclusions, with recommendation as to future necessary legislation, in order that this street may be opened. I now present a substitute recom-mended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, indorsed by the Commissioners, and will be glad to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to extend North Capitol street northward through the property of the Prospect Hill Cemetery, to pay for land to be taken for such purpose, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to proceed with the opening of North Capitol street northward through the property of the Prospect Hill Cemetery, and to pay the owners of the land necessary to be taken for public use in the extension of said North Capitol street according to the report of the appraisers appointed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia March 16, 1894, to appraise the land necessary for the extension of said North Capitol street, as said report was confirmed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia June 22, 1894, and finally adjudged by the court of appeals of the District of Columbia March 4, 1895, so far as the same relates to the land of said Prospect Hill Cemetery.

That the following sum is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia for the purposes following, namely:

Fifty-one thousand six hundred and eighty-six dollars to pay the award of said appraisers, confirmed and adjudged as aforesaid.

Sec. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. BLUE. Now, Mr. Chairman— Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas. Mr. BLUE. I move to strike out all that part of this bill pertaining to the appropriation, commencing with-

That one half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia for the purposes following, namely, etc.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would say to the gentleman that that has been amended by the committee. The appropriation is entirely from the District revenues and not from those of the General Government

Mr. BLUE. Does the substitute read entirely from the funds of the District government?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.
Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Will the gentleman state his objection?

I did not hear it Mr. BLUE. The gentleman from Wisconsin states that the substitute has been amended to meet my amendment, and that it is to be appropriated from the District funds. Is that right?

Mr. BABCOCK. That is right?
Mr. BLUE. Let me hear that part of it again.
Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I will state, Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the gentleman, that the Commissioners recommended that, it of the gentleman, that the Commissioners recommended that, in accordance with the organic act, one-half of the appropriation be taken from the general fund and one-half from the District fund. In considering the matter the committee thought it advisable to make the whole amount of this appropriation chargeable to the District revenues, and have so recommended in the substitute.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, that is in better condition than it was before; but I will insist on my amendment, for this reason:

I am opposed to the policy of committing to the District Committee the question of appropriations of money, either from the National Treasury or from the District treasury. The duties of the committee pertain more directly to general legislation without any question of expenditure or revenue; and it is out of place to put in a bill coming from that committee, without any reference whatever to the Committee on Appropriations, a sum of money. The item contained here is a considerable sum—

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLUE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BABCOCK. Will you be kind enough to state where your authority or rule is for any such statement?
Mr. BLUE. If the gentleman from Wisconsin had paid attention he would not have asked that question. I said I was opposed to the policy— Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, indeed.

Mr. BLUE. I mentioned no rule; and I say here now that I believe it is bad policy, and that the committee that has charge of appropriations for the District should have control of the approappropriations for the District should have control of the appropriations generally; and for that reason I insist on the amendment, and believe that this should go out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. BLUE. It begins at the word "that," and it strikes out all of the first section of the bill down to section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment,

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words:
"That the following sum is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia for the purposes following, namely, $51,686 to pay the award of said appraisers confirmed and adjudged as aforesaid."

The CHAIRMAN. Is that amendment offered to the original

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that all members of the House understand that this would make the bill entirely inoperative. I have confidence enough in the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Blue] to know that had he known the conditions Kansas [Mr. Blue] to know that had he known the conditions surrounding this legislation he would not attempt to strangle it in this place. North Capitol street, the gentleman will understand, leads out from the Capitol until it reaches this cemetery, which has been before Congress and under consideration for many years. Congress passed an act providing for the condemnation of ground for a street through the cemetery. The court appointed a jury, and an award was made. This simply appropriates money out of the District fund to pay the award. The Commissioners say that unless this is done now this ground which it is proposed to make the street will be occupied by the cemetery company for graves and lots, and will in the end cost a great many times this sum of money to put this street through, and it must necessarily go through. This being the fact, the committee has taken it up and reported this bill and acted upon it promptly. Now, gentlemen, the owners of this property say that they want Now, gentlemen, the owners of this property say that they want this settled, and we can not occupy it as a street until it is. have not been

Mr. MILNES. Are there not twenty-eight burials already in the part of this cemetery proposed to be taken for the street?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir; there are twenty-eight there now. The only reason why the Commissioners objected to this before was that the jury, under the instructions of the court, when they made their award, based the valuation on the value of the land as cemetery lots. They did not value the property by the acre, but valued it as cemetery lots, and the court has since sustained that verdict. it as cemetery lots, and the court has since sustained that verdict. Now, this street can not be opened through the cemetery under the highway act, and if it is opened at all it must be opened under a special act of Congress, because it is provided in the charter of the cemetery that no street shall go through it. The parties interested have consented now, if this bill can be gotten through promptly, to accept this settlement, which is at least 25 per cent cheaper than any basis of settlement that could probably ever be obtained again. For these reasons, I say that if the gentleman from Kansas were fully conversant with the facts and circumstances of the case I am sure he would not endeavor to annoy these people and obstruct the interests of all concerned by still further delaying this settlement.

Mr. BLUE. In reply to that, Mr. Chairman, I have only to say that the arguments advanced by the gentleman from Wisconsin might apply to any other bill carrying an appropriation. I have heard no reason whatever why the appropriation carried by this bill should not go to the Appropriations Committee, like all other appropriations for the opening of streets. This is made an exceptional case, outside of the general practice, as I understand it, but no reason is assigned why this particular appropriation should be controlled by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is a good and sufficient reason. This is a local matter, local to the District, and therefore a matter on which the District Committee have the right of way, while it is outside the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. BLUE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman ought to read the rules of the House, then.

Mr. BLUE. Ah, but you can not upon any proper policy frame a bill in such shape as to take from the Appropriations Committee the right to pass upon an appropriation like this. Now, I do not know anything about the value of the land in question, but from the reading of this report and from some things that I have heard, I believe that the appraisement in the first instance was excessive. This is a very large sum for such a piece of land; and the fact that this measure comes from the committee it does come from indicates that there is some exceptional reason why this appropriation should be under the supervision of that committee rather than under the committee which regulates appropriations generally. I submit that there has been no sufficient reason or excuse offered why this appropriation should not take the usual

Mr. BABCOCK. This is the usual course.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the position of the gentleman from Kansas may possibly be tenable, but I believe that he commits an error in applying his principle to this particular bill. The fact remains, as he very well knows, that on every District day there are passed through this House measures emanating from the District of Columbia Committee which carry appropriation. tions of money. Now, let me remind the House that this is not new legislation. It is legislation which has been before Congress on three different occas ons. It is the reenactment of former legislation, emanating, I may add, on every occasion from the District Committee, both in the Senate and in the House. I want to say further, for the gentleman's information-although I need not, say further, for the gentleman's information—although I need not, for I know he has read the report of the Commissioners—that the supreme court of the District has sustained the decision of the lower court, and that this legislation is absolutely necessary, owing to the peculiar conditions which exist, to the opening of North Capitol street. There is no possible hope of a lower award. In the opinion of the Commissioners, and I may say also in the opinion of the committee, delay in this matter will be dangerous if it is desired to every the street at all and I trust that every one will is desired to open the street at all, and I trust that every one will agree that the street should be opened, as ample evidence has been presented to show the necessity of opening the street.

Mr. BLUE. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Suppose this amendment prevails and the appropriation is stricken out, will not the bill then contain all the necessary legislation except the mere appropriation of money? Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. If it is conceded, as I think it will be, that should this bill go before the Appropriations Committee the committee must necessarily approve the amount recommended, for no other amount can be accepted, then there can be no advantage in adopting such an amendment, because it will only insure delay in the settlement of an important matter which has been under consideration during many sessions of Congress. I think that a re-reference of this subject at this time would be decidedly improper.

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman speaks of this legislation having been under consideration before. Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLUE. Has the question of the appropriation of money in this manner ever been submitted to the Appropriations Committee? Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The Appropriations Committee itself in 1895, in the absence of any legislation or recommendation emanating from the District Committee, recommended an appropria-tion to pay such an award as might be made to cover the value of the property taken, together with damages both to the cemetery property and to the estate of Anna E. Barber, and others, but the opinion of the supreme court, which the gentleman has undoubtedly read, rendered that legislation obsolete.

Mr. BLUE. Then what is the object, except the mere matter of saving a few days, in declining to let this take the ordinary and usual course?

This is the usual course in such matters. Mr. BABCOCK.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I might reply to the question of the gentleman from Kansas by propounding one to him: What can possibly be the objection to allowing this bill to go through as recommended by the committee?

Mr. BLUE. The very objection that I have made to it—that upon your theory the Committee on the District of Columbia at any time when they deem they have sufficient excuse, on the any time when they deem they have sumcient excuse, on the ground of haste or anything else, may arrogate to themselves the complete appropriation of all money for the payment of damages in any case of condemnation in the District.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The amount, if I understand the situation correctly, can not be changed; and it ought not to be. This legislation has been strongly urged upon Congress since 1888. So far as the practical effect upon the property is concerned, the proceedings of ready taken have congreted in precisely the same way. ceedings already taken have operated in precisely the same way as if the street had been opened. There has been absolutely no sale for the property, nor can there be under present conditions.

Mr. COX. How was the amount of damage to the proprietors of the land estimated?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. By a jury.
Mr. COX. Who constituted that jury?
Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. For the information of the gentleman from Tennessee and others, I will read from the report of the

Mr. COX. Before the gentleman reads, will he answer my question, Who constituted that jury?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The jury was appointed by the court.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I will read the names of the jury.

Mr. COX. Was the jury appointed by the court?

Mr. COX. Was the jury appointed by the court?
Mr. COX. Then, as I understand, a jury was appointed to estimate the value of the property and to assess the damages?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Certainly.
Mr. COX. And that jury reported back to the court?
Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Yes, sir.
Mr. COX. Then the court approved that finding of the jury?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Yes, sir.
Mr. COX. Then, upon the recommendation of the court it is proposed to appropriate this amount to pay the property holders?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. But the Commissioners objected to the award as made, and appealed to the supreme court of the District, which sustained the lower court.

Mr. COX. Then you have a decision of the highest court on matters of this kind in the District affirming the amount of damages to be paid to these parties?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. KIEFER. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. HENDERSON. I trust I may be allowed to make a single statement. This matter has for many years given a great deal of annoyance to all connected with the administration of the city government, as well as to the District Committee and the Appropriations Committee. I remember myself visiting the cemetery as a member of the committee, in order that we might understand the situation and, if possible, reach some solution of the difficulty, there being a conflict between those who were laying out the road and the cemetery association. Now, I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. Curtis of Iowa] whether this bill, if passed, will be accepted by the Germans who are interested in this cemetery as a solution of this long-disputed question?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. It will.

Mr. KIEFER. It will be absolutely satisfactory.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I think we shall be wise to pass the

Mr. TALBERT. Is this amount to be paid exclusively out of the funds of the District of Columbia?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. It is. The Commissioners recommended that one-half only be appropriated from the District funds, but the committee has recommended that the whole amount be so appropriated. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HULICK. Allow me to make a single statement. In the charter of this cemetery association there is a condition which prohibits absolutely the appropriation of any of their lands for public streets. The act incorporating the Prospect Hill Ceme-tery contains this provision:

That no streets, lanes, alleys, roads, or canals of any sort shall be opened through the property of the said corporation exclusively used and appropriated to the purposes of this cemetery.

That is the provision of the act of incorporation of 1860. Now, the act of 1893, which was passed by Congress in order to assist the Commissioners in appropriating the land of this cemetery, would have been met, apart from the other objections upon which the supreme court set aside the verdict of appropriation, by the provision which I have just read from the charter of the association. So that we are brought squarely to meet this question: Shall we, by passing this bill, accept this property now for the amount which has been assessed by a commission appointed by the court for the purpose of estimating the value of the land appropriated, or shall we decline to accept this award, and thereby be forever estopped from taking any steps whatever to condemn any portion of this cemetery for street purposes, placing ourselves at the mercy of this corporation—leaving them in such a position as to be able to say, "We are protected by our charter, which prohibits any appropriation, public or private, or in any other way, except by the consent of the trustees?" At this time the opportunity is afforded for this city to take this appropriation of land by the payment of the amount of money contemplated by the bill, which amount these people are satisfied to take as a consideration for the right of way through their property, notwithstanding the provision of their charter. estopped from taking any steps whatever to condemn any portion vision of their charter.

Mr. COX. They consent to this?

Mr. HULICK. They do. But if this bill be not passed there will be no right or authority whatever to extend any street through that property. The streets will have to be deflected around it, and there will be no remedy for the city by appropriation or other-

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I ask for a vote on the pending amend-

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LACEY). This bill was before the Committee of the Whole on a former occasion, and at that time some amendments were considered. It is necessary now to ascertain the status of those amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This bill was not pending heretofore. This is an entirely new bill, which has been substituted for the other bill.

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute has been offered by way of amendment; but the original bill still stands; and to the original bill some amendments were heretofore offered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Iowa, when he took the floor, stated that he desired to have this bill substituted; and

Though the formal request was it was read by common consent. It was read by common consent. Inough the formal request was not made, it was understood, I think, that the substitute was to be considered as the pending measure. I believe the Chair did not submit the request to have it taken up; but we have proceeded in that way practically by unanimous consent, and the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas was offered to the

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman from Iowa offered the substitute for consideration at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the original bill

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the original bill was before the committee at a former session, and was partly acted upon, and consequently we must dispose of that and the amendments pending before we can reach the substitute.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, after consultation with some of the gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee, I will withdraw the amendment to the substitute.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute which has been offered by the gentlemen from Jowa [Mr. Chairman] be taken up as the pending measure man from Iowa [Mr. Curris] be taken up as the pending measure instead of the original bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is right.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope it will be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this unanimous consent should also include giving to this bill the same number as the other, and if there be no objection that will be ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I move now, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Payne having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Lacey reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6713, had directed him to report the same back with substitute for the original bill, and with a favorable recommendation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the substitute is in the form of an amendment to the original bill, and the question will be on the amendment so offered in the nature of

The amendment in the form of a substitute was agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.
On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. GROUT. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a moment, in order to submit a resolution providing for the printing of some testimony.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will withdraw the motion temporarily for that purpose.

INVESTIGATION OF SOLDIERS' HOME, LEAVENWORTH, KANS.

Mr. GROUT. I now offer the resolution I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution providing for the printing of testimony in the investigation of the Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth, Kans.

Be it resolved, etc., That the special committee to investigate the Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth, Kans., be and are hereby, authorized to procure the printing of the testimony taken by said committee, together with such exhibits used in said investigation as said committee shall deem necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I am not mistaken, Mr. Speaker, that is in the form of a joint resolution. It is not usual to provide for is in the form of a joint resolution. It is not usual to provide for the printing by Congress of such matters by a joint resolution.

Mr. GROUT. That is true; but I was informed that under a recent law it was necessary when printing to an amount over $500 was ordered. We have ascertained from the Public Printer the probable expense of the work.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, the printing law does not change the law in that respect, a law which has been in force for many years—for thirty years at least. Neither House under that law can provide for printing to an amount exceeding $500 by a simple resolution. It must be by a concurrent resolution if it involves an expenditure exceeding that sum. But this is a joint resolution, which would require the sigsum. But this is a joint resolution, which would require the signature of the President. A concurrent resolution simply requires the concurrent action of the two Houses.

If the gentleman will put his resolution in the form of a concurrent resolution, the usual form, there will be no objection to it, as far as I am aware.

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest that the resolution be modified as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GROUT. Then I modify it and make it a concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be treated, then, as a concurrent resolution, and the question is, Is there objection to its present consideration?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered, and agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. Hopkins in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9643) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

BINGHAM] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first read-

BINGHAM] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the House is familiar with the legislation contained in this bill. Being one of the supply bills of the Government, its general provisions were fully discussed in the first session of this Congress. Your committee have, in the consideration and conclusions which they have reached and presented to the House, followed closely almost in every particular, certainly in every possible paragraph, the wordings common to the current law as contained in the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, as well as following the general statute law. Where we have made changes they have been upon the recommendation of the Department chiefs of bureaus, with reference to their subordinate force, and we have endeavored to observe the strictest and dinate force, and we have endeavored to observe the strictest and closest economy in any changes that we have made with reference to promotions. The compensation fixed by statute has been consistent and in accord with the appropriation bills since the Forty-fourth Congress. We have made no changes from the present current law. There are but two paragraphs that we consider new legislation in this bill. One is with reference to the Library; the other with reference to accounts, in connection with the accounting officers, recommended by the Treasury. Those are the only two paragraphs of the bill that can be considered as new legislation, and that which is concerning the Library your committee believe will not come under the rule.

The estimates that are submitted in the annual book from the The estimates that are submitted in the annual book from the Treasury Department aggregate, for the next fiscal year, $22,767,-158.80. Of this amount there is recommended in the bill $21,669,-369.80. The appropriation for the same purposes for the current year aggregates $21,705,768.94, being $13,390.14 more than is recommended in the bill for the service for year ending June 30, 1898. The total amount recommended in this bill is $1,097,781 less than the aggregate estimate submitted. The whole number of salaries provided for in the bill aggregates 10,055, being 140 less than the number estimated for and 136 more than the number provided for under the current law. The increase is almost wholly in the new Library building, so that the clerical force of the subordinate Departments of the Government are not, save in a most qualified way, increased in the bill submitted for your consideration.

In accordance with the recommendations of the estimates, we In accordance with the recommendations of the estimates, we reduced the Senate force by three annual clerks at $1.500 each. In other respects, we continue current law. As to the House of Representatives, we continue the current law, save an increase of 4 of the subordinate force, now authorized and employed under resolutions of the House, namely, 1 at $1,600, 1 at $1,200, and 2 at $1,000 each. Otherwise, the bill provides for the force of the House as it now runs under current law. I would state that the Library of Congress has been the subject of careful examination on the part of the committee, not only with reference to this bill. on the part of the committee, not only with reference to this bill, but a year ago, when the question was before us, and it was determined then that the question as to the increased force in the Library should be relegated to this session of Congress, the committee believing that none of the increased appropriations, save in a most qualified way, would be necessary during this year. Therefore it becomes a part and parcel of the legislation under this bill.

The question pertaining to the future administration of the Library may provoke some debate in the consideration of this bill. Therefore, when we reach those paragraphs of the bill I shall ask to pass them, in order that at the conclusion of the bill we may take up such time in their consideration as the House may determine wise.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?
Mr. BINGHAM. With pleasure.
Mr. QUIGG. I should like to offer some amendments, or rather a proposition as a substitute for the entire proposition of the committee on the subject of the Library, and I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he will afford me the opportunity

Mr. BINGHAM. I have stated, and if the gentleman considers my statement not sufficiently full I will repeat, that when we come to the paragraph of the bill covering the Library of Congress I will then ask to postpone its consideration, if the House desires, to the conclusion of the bill; so that these paragraphs are in no wise affected by a postponement, taking them out of the regular order of the bill. Then the gentleman, as I understand, will be in order for the submission of his amendment or substitute, or whatever may be the wish of the House to consider in connection with the paragraph of this bill. connection with the paragraph of this bill-

Mr. QUIGG. And so far as the gentleman is concerned, he will raise no question of order against their consideration?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state that I will not bring an appropriation bill into this House for its consideration proposing in any form whatever to curtail or limit the fullest deliberation on the part of the House. I believe the bill belongs to the House. any form whatever to curtail or limit the fullest deliberation on the part of the House. I believe the bill belongs to the House; and if the House sees proper, I shall not resist it. I shall be willing to have full and complete debate. The gentleman will receive no opposition from myself to the consideration of anything that is germane or proper to be considered in connection with the bill.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask, if the gentleman will permit the intermediate the formula of the terror of the considered in connection with the bill.

mit me to interrupt him for that purpose, unanimous consent that in the RECORD of to-day may be printed the substitute proposition which I shall offer at the proper time. That is to say, at the conclusion of the gentleman's remarks to-day my substitute may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New York that that will not be in order while the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman from New York that I have no objection to the printing of his bill in the RECORD. In the Secretary's office, the office of the Supervising Architect, the office of the Comptroller of the Treasurer, the Bureau of Statistics, the office of construction of standard weights and massures, and the office of the Director. standard weights and measures, and the office of the Director of the Mint your committee have made some changes with reference to the clerical force, in no wise increasing that force save in one or two particulars, but merely transferring them from one

In the mints and assay offices, with reference to the mint at Carson City, there has been some reduction in the working force of that establishment, as well as at the mint at New Orleans, based upon testimony submitted by the Director of the Mint, which is available to all members of the House, as it is now printed.

With reference to the government of the Territories, the appropriation is largely reduced, because their sessions of the legislatures are biennial, and the paragraph of this bill will not cover and does not of necessity cover an appropriation necessary for the year that the Territorial legislatures are in session.

In the War Department in the Record and Demain Office.

In the War Department, in the Record and Pension Office, upon the recommendation of the Chief, there has been a reduction of twenty-five subordinate clerks at $1,000 each.

In the Navy Department, while the bill will seem to have many amendments, that Department, under an act of Congress, is being reorganized for the current year. It directs that the subordinate force of the different bureaus shall be so adjusted that each four months they shall be reassigned. The Secretary of the Navy is reorganizing the Department on that basis, and while there are many changes, there is not one dollar increase of compensation or appropriation asked for in the bill.

In the Interior Department in the Department of the Depart

In the Interior Department, in the Pension Office, for the per diem and traveling expenses of special examiners under the current law the appropriation is $500,000. In the present bill, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions, this is to be reduced to $450,000.

In the Post-Office Department there are a few provisions with reference to an increase of the force, as well as in the Department of Justice. In the judicial expenses of the United States courts in the Indian Territory we simply appropriate in this bill for the judges. The salaries for other subordinate officers of the court, as well as district attorneys, marshals, clerks, commissioners, etc., become a part and parcel of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and therefore the legislative bill is relieved of that paragraph and that amount of appropriation.

The only legislation which your committee submits in their bill outside of that condition and subject to a point of order is contained in the provision under the office of Comptroller of the Treasury, which is that all books, papers, and other matters re-lating to the offices or accounts of disbursing officers of the Executive Departments and the Commissioners and boards in the Distive Departments and the Commissioners and boards in the Dis-trict of Columbia shall at all times be subject to inspection and examination by the Comptroller of the Treasury and the Auditor of the Treasury authorized to settle such accounts. The bill authorizes this through such officials. When we reach that para-graph the necessity of that new legislation will be so patent and it is of such importance to the good administration of the Departments that I do not anticipate any objection to that clause, although it is new legislation in the bill.

Now, if any gentleman desires to ask any question I will yield to him for that purpose. If not, I will ask that the bill be read by paragraphs.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suppose that the gentleman asks that general debate be closed. I do not know of anyone on this side who desires to debate any proposition in the bill, but I assume that the gentleman in charge of the bill will permit a little relaxation of the rule should any debate be considered necessary during the of the rate stoud any debate be considered necessary during the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection during the progress of the bill to reasonable debate on every paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the reading of the bill by paragraphs will now begin.

here was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For compensation of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories, $1,803,000.

For mileage, $130,000.

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives, namely.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I find that we have passed something that I desire to ask about. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with reference to this Capitol police, if it would be in order to move to increase that force or would some distinguished capitalman, animated by an exception. would some distinguished gentleman, animated by an economical would some distinguished gentieman, animated by an economical desire, raise the point of order upon it?

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state to the gentleman that the committee thought there was no necessity for an increase of that force for the coming fiscal year. We have in the present year, under the law that is now in operation, increased that force twelve, and its efficiency or its complete usefulness has not yet been developed. We have increased the force for the complete usefulness has not yet been developed. We have increased the force for the current year over previous years, and I hardly think, and the committee hardly thought, there was any necessity for an additional increase.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks and messengers to committees: For clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,600; messenger, $1,000; clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,600; messenger, $1,000; clerks to Committees on Accounts, Agriculture, Banking and Currency, Claims, District of Columbia, Elections, Foreign Affairs, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Indian Affairs, Invalid Pensions, Judiciary, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Post-Office and Post-Roads, Public Buildings and Grounds, Public Lands, Rivers and Harbors, War Claims, and clerk to continue Digest of Claims under resolution of March 7, 1888, at $2,000 each; and for assistant clerk to the Committee on War Claims, $1,200; in all, $32,400.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 13, line 5, after the word "dollars" insert:
"For messenger to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, who shall also act as assistant doorkeeper, $1,200."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist on his point of order. What is the point?

Mr. BINGHAM. That the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no law authorizing this appropria-

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. This bill has not yet become a aw, and this amendment does not change existing law. This messenger to our Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is one of the most efficient men on either side of the House, and he now receives but $60 a month. When the committee is not in session. sion he acts as one of the doorkeepers in the lobby at one of the most difficult doors to attend, and he is very intelligent and efficient in that capacity. For his services he is getting only $60 a month, where others are getting $1,200 and $1,500 and even $2,000 a year. I submit that it is a piece of injustice that this man should be required to work for $60 where some others get twice as much or more than that. Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the proposition is that this gentleman who is now performing this line of work shall be transferred to the service of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. No, sir. He is now acting as messenger to that committee, and he is also acting as a doorkeeper

Mr. BINGHAM. Then his employment as doorkeeper is au-

Mr. BINGHAM. Then his employment as doorkeeper is authorized now under the law?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. And what he is doing for the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee he is not required by law to do?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. He is not required to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New Jersey send to the Chair the law which authorizes the employment of the person contemplated in the amendment?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. He is employed under the general law providing for all the messengers of this House, and the amendment simply increases his salary so as to conform it to the compensation of other men who are performing similar duties.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the Chair that the amendment does more than that. It creates a new office under the head of "Clerks and messengers to committees." We have not yet "Clerks and messengers to committees." We have not yet reached the paragraph of the bill relating to the Doorkeeper's force, and if the gentleman desires to move to increase this salary his amendment will properly come in when we reach that class

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Oh, it is immaterial where this comes in

Mr. DOCKERY. No, it is not immaterial, because it proposes to increase the force.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Not at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Accounts are perfectly ready at any time to bring in their recommendation for such changes as they think desirable and proper in the sub-ordinate force pertaining to the business of the House and the convenience of its members—

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask whether this employee is not provided for simply by a resolution of the House. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as he is more familiar with these matters than I am. If this messenger is employed simply by resolution of the House, then it seems to me that the gentleman's point is not well taken. I am not able to find any statute authorizing the appointment of these messengers, and I think they have simply been put into the appropriation bills from time to time, having been previously employed under special resolutions of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, all I have to state to the gen-tleman is that your committee has had no consideration whatever of this proposition. The question of the necessity for this appointment has never been submitted to the committee. We took the four members of the subordinate force that had been added to the existing force by resolutions of the House and continued them in the bill

Mr. HEPBURN. How is it that certain messengers receive $1,000 or $1,200 a year, while certain others, performing like duties, receive but $60 a month? Mr. BINGHAM. That may have been determined by a resolu-tion of the House fixing their compensation, or by increase of the subordinate force by the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. If this is one of the cases provided for by a resolution of the House, then does this amendment involve any change of existing law?

Mr. CANNON. It changes the law if there is not any law authorizing it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman that it has been the unbroken practice that increase of the subordinate force of the House comes from the Committee on Accounts upon its recommendation, and the House determines whether there shall be the increase proposed at the salary indicated by the Committee on Accounts or not. Now, we have no record of this recommendation coming from the Committee on Accounts other than as it is contained in the bill. Therefore we assume, as we have desired to be consistent in the action of the House, that this employee was not required. The gentleman in charge of a committee has seen fit to use this subordinate of the House for other purposes. I am not questioning his usefulness in the discharge of the duties he is now performing. I am not questioning that his services are necessary to that committee. I am simply saying that, in view of the action of the House, and in view of the provisions of this bill, drawn in conformity to the action of the House, the amendment is subject to the point of order that it contemplates an increase either as to personnel or as to compensation, and therefore, according to what have always been the rulings in this House, is not in order

Mr. HEPBURN. It is certainly not an increase in the personnel of the House. This gentleman is already an officer of the House; he is already in the service of the House. The only point, it seems to me, which could be raised with any plausibility would be that this is an increase of salary, and therefore a change of existing law. Now, if the salary is fixed simply by resolution of the House, I think such a resolution can scarcely be called "law" in contemplation of our rules. Hence, I submit, the proposed increase in pay ought not to be held obnoxious to our rules.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me ask whether this gentleman has not been appointed as a folder? I judge so from the compensation allowed. Is he not a folder now?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not.

Mr. BINGHAM. The compensation is the same as that given to folders

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I think Mr. Barnsley is carried on the rolls as a folder. But he is in fact performing duty as a messenger; and he is not only messenger to the committee, but an assistant doorkeeper at the most important door of the House. All the other messengers are receiving $1,200 a year. He is borne on the rolls as a folder and is receiving only $60 a month, and out of that sum he is obliged to pay $3 or $4 a month for janitor's care of the committee room, so that in fact he receives only about one-half the pay that other messengers to committees are receiving.

If my friend objects to the special phraseology of the amendment as I have sent it to the desk I am willing to modify it so as to provide that the pay of this particular folder-J. H. Barnsleyincreased from $60 a month to $100 a month. He will then receive simply the pay provided in your bill for every other officer performing like service.

Mr. BINGHAM. If I understand the gentleman's proposition, it is that a subordinate of this House, having been appointed under a resolution of the House as one of its folders, at a compensation of $60 per month, has been performing additional duty or other duty than that of a folder. Now the gentleman from New York comes before this House and sets forth the usefulness and efficiency of this employee, which is all granted. And the gentleman wants to change the line of work of this employee from that of a folder to that of a messenger, and a messenger to a particular committee. I simply say to the gentleman there is no law for that, and the amendment is subject to the point of The Committee on Rules can come into this House at any time with a resolution creating the place which the gentleman time with a resolution creating the place which the gentleman from New York now proposes to create by this amendment; and the gentleman who has the appointing power may select this employee for the place. I simply say that this increase of salary, being a change of law, is not in order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend by striking out, in line 10, page 14, the word "nine" and inserting "ten;" so as to read: Ten messengers, including the messenger to the reporters' gallery, at $1,200

Mr. BINGHAM. I reserve a point of order on that amendment, Mr. SHERMAN. I submit this amendment in order to meet the wants of the Committee on Interstate Commerce as suggested by my colleagues on the committee and myself. I propose to provide compensation for this special officer on the assumption that the Doorkeeper, if this provision be made, will assign this gentleman to the position, so that he will receive for the duties he is performing similar compensation to that received by other messengers; that he will not, for performing specially meritorious and arduous duties, receive the pay which under this paragraph is allowed to an ordinary laborer, saying nothing of the deduction to which he is compelled to submit in paying $3 or $4 a month to somebody who does the janitor's work in the committee room. I think this amendment simply makes fair and just provision for an efficient officer. If the former amendment was obnoxious to the rules, it does seem to me this one is not.

Mr. BINGHAM. In replying to my friend from New York, I am not going to question in any way the efficiency of this subordinate. The messengers for the respective committee rooms are assigned by the Doorkeeper of the House. This appropriation is for the Fifty-fifth Congress. What may be the organization of that Congress I do not know. Whether this man will be here that Congress I do not know. Whether this man will be here then I do not know. But conceding all that the gentleman from New York states as to the efficiency of this officer, I must stand by the details of this bill, for the reason that our committee was open for the hearing of any applications for necessary increases. The Committee on Accounts is continually open for that purpose. No recommendation for an increase of this character has been made. This bill carries no such recommendation. My point of order is that this amendment proposes an increase beyond the current law; there is no authority for the appointment of an additional messenger.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill until the heading "Library of Congress" was reached, on page 19.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the paragraphs now following in the bill, pertaining to the Library of Congress, commencing on page 19, and continuing down to near the bottom of page 22, I ask that all of these paragraphs be passed over without prejudice until the conclusion of the bill.

Mr. QUIGG. Does that include the Botanic Garden at the bottom of page 22 and the beginning of page 23?

Mr. BINGHAM. No; only the Library matters; to be recurred to after the conclusion of the rest of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman asks unanimous consent to pass over pages 19, 20, 21, and 22, down to the "Botanic Garden," as the Chair understands the request?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is my wish. I desire to include those Garden," as the Chair understands the request?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is my wish. I desire to include those paragraphs only that relate to the Library.

Mr. QUIGG. I would like to have that stated accurately to see if I understand the gentleman correctly. As I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania, he desires to pass over all of that portion of the bill beginning with line 1, page 19, down to and including line 2, on page 282 including line 7, on page 23?

Mr. BINGHAM. No: down to and including line 23 on page 22, omitting the "Botanic Garden."

Mr. QUIGG. I am satisfied, if that is the gentleman's wish.

Mr. HEPBURN. If this order should be made—and I submit this as a parliamentary inquiry—would it preclude a point of order against the paragraphs in question at the time they are reached for discussion?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no.
The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair it would not.
Mr. BINGHAM. Opportunities for discussion and the submission of points of order will of course be afforded after we reach the concluding paragraphs of the bill, when this matter will be again taken up.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then this will be treated simply as if it were

Mr. HEPBURN. Then this will be treated simply as it it were the last paragraph of the bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. Precisely.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to pass over the portion of the bill to which he has referred until the conclusion of the remainder of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This, of course, simply dispenses with the consideration of these paragraphs until the bill has been completed, and involves nothing else?

The CHAIRMAN. That is all. After the bill is completed the committee will return to these paragraphs without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill until the heading "Civil Service Commission" was reached.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Chairman, if it be agreeable to my colleague in charge of this bill, I would be very glad to have unanimous consent to pass over this section relating to the Civil Service Commission for the present without prejudice, to be recurred to later on when the consideration of the bill is resumed.

Mr. CURSON. After the Library matter is disposed of Mr. GIBSON. After the Library matter is disposed of.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state that I am perfectly willing to submit to general debate if desired; but I have no inclination, whenever there is demand for debate upon any particular paragraph, to

Mr. BROSIUS. Ithink I can relieve my colleague. I may desire to submit a few observations on the subject embodied in this provision of the bill. I have great reluctance—so great that I can not overcome it—to submit any remarks to the committee at this late hour of the day; but I think it would probably subserve my purpose if the committee will indulge me in the privilege of recording a few observations in connection with some statements and figures which will illustrate the operation of the civil-service law. These will be inserted in the RECORD for the information of the members of the House, as well, possibly, as for the information and advantage of some members of the committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. As I understand it, my colleague desires unanimous consent to print some remarks and statistics respecting this provision of the bill. I trust the committee will have no objection.

Mr. EVANS. I sincerely hope that the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Brostos] will be adopted by the gentleman in charge of the bill. There are a good many things that probably will be presented in discussion on this subject, and it is a little late now to begin the consideration of it. I was about to make the same request myself, that is, that this part of the bill should be passed over informally.

Mr. BINGHAM. What is the objection to the gentleman proceeding now, if he desires to discuss this portion of the bill?

Mr. EVANS. The lateness of the hour.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well, then, let it be passed over without

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the paragraphs relating to the Civil Service Commission be passed over for the present, to be recurred to hereafter, without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read to and including line 22 on page 36.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hopkins, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 9643), and had come to no resolution thereon.

PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE RELATIVE TO THE LIBRARY.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record the proposition which I shall offer at the proper time as a substitute for all that portion of the committee's bill which deals with the Library of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.
The proposed substitute is as follows:

Mr. PENDLETON presented a memorial of the Old Settlers or Western Cherokee Indians, praying that the balance of the money due them be paid by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the printing of this memorial as a House document and referring it to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise the point of order that this should be considered in Committee of the Whole, as it involves a charge upon the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maine, but the impression of the Chair is that the matter has been decided otherwise.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am aware it is not usual to consider such resolutions in Committee of the Whole because the point is not made. I understand this resolution provides for an increase of fifteen officials.

Mr. ODELL. A temporary increase.
Mr. DINGLEY. I think there was a ruling by Mr. Speaker Carlisle sustaining a point of order that a resolution of this kind must be considered first in Committee of the Whole when the

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks recent rulings have been the other way. This is out of the contingent fund of the House, is a part of its expenditures, and does not affect the United States beyond that.

Mr. ODELL. I will state to the gentleman that this is only a temporary increase.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will not insist on the point of order, but I should like to know why, at this session of Congress, when there are only the usual public documents to be distributed, no speeches are only the usual public documents to be distributed, no speeches to be made for the campaign, we need an increase of fifteen men in the folding room?

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Maine, I will state that on September 29 the annex, in which was stored over 400,000 volumes, was blown down and about 50,000 of the covers of those documents were ruined, so that they will have to be rewrapped; and removing from the annex to temporary quarters caused a loss of about sixty days' time that should have been devoted to rewrapping the documents and sending them out to different members. I have here a letter from the superintendent of the folding room, in which he sets forth fully the necessity for these additional folders. The committee understood it was somewhat unusual-

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for us to hear what is going on over there, and we would like very much to hear the proceedings.

The SPEAKER. All gentlemen will please take their seats.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I will ask that the Clerk read this letter from the foreman of the folding room, which will explain the necessity for these additional folders.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

House of Representatives, United States,

Washington, D. C., December 15, 1896.

Dear Sir: In compliance with your request, I beg to submit for your information the following reasons for asking for additional folders for this department for the balance of the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress and one month after the expiration of said session.

The extra work caused by the wreck of the old annex folding room on the night of September 29, in moving and arranging documents from wrecked building to the Capitol building and new annex folding room, threw us back in our regular work about sixty days, and we have not been able to regain much of this lost time since. About 50,000 documents will have to be rewrapped, owing to the bad condition of the wrappers, caused by the action of the storm on them.

In anticipation of an extra session of Congress, we will be compelled to wrap from 250,000 to 300,000 documents to meet the demand of members.

With all this work in view at the present time, the additional help asked for can be steadily employed during the time herein stated, and will be beneficial to this department.

Very respectfully,

Foreman Folding Room, House of Representatives.

J. MARTIN McKAY,
Foreman Folding Room, House of Representatives.

Hon. B. B. ODELL, Chairman Committee on Accounts.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this in anticipation of an extra session? Mr. ODELL. Not altogether. It is to take care of the work

Mr. DINGLEY. Were the additional men employed in the folding room at the last session discharged at the end of the session?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. And the committee have examined this carefully and are satisfied that in consequence of that storm—for it can not be placed on any other ground—fifteen additional men are required to repair the damages?

Mr. ODELL. We have examined the matter very thoroughly.

The committee were unanimous. In the report we have made to the House we feel that we have been very conservative. made more reports against resolutions than we have recommended. And the very resolution preceding this, which asked for increased compensation, we have disagreed to. We feel that for increased compensation, we have disagreed to. We feel that there is a necessity for these fifteen additional folders.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire, of course, to interfere in matters where the committee are thoroughly satisfied that the public services require an additional expenditure, but I think it is necessary, and I have no doubt the committee felt that, with the revenue running behind to the extent it has—$40,000,000 with the revenue running behind to the extent it has—$40,000,000 deficit since the 1st day of July—we ought to be very careful when we enter upon any public expenditures that can be avoided without injury to the public service.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I think there can be no criticism passed upon the Committee on Accounts for any unwarranted expenditures. I ask for a vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, was unanimous consent given for the consideration of this resolution?

The SPEAKER. It was not. It is a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. It was not. It is a privileged report.
Mr. RICHARDSON. I could not hear whether the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] made a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine suggested that the House should go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. He did not make the point of order that it should be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. He raised the point of order, and the Chair intimated that the rulings had been the other way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand the rule to be that, being an appropriation from the contingent fund, it would not have to be considered in Committee of the Whole, but I could not hear whether that point was made or whether it was some other point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to apologize to the gentleman from Tennessee for the disorderly behavior of the House, but the Chair endeavored to obtain order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The explanation and apology is entirely satisfactory to "the gentleman from Tennessee." All I desired to know was what was going on, and whether the point of order was made.

was made.

The SPEAKER. The point of order was not made, and a discussion took place as to the merits.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I also heard some statement indicating that this was necessary because of an approaching extra session, and I only want to learn whether the distinguished leader of the House meant officially to say there would be an extra session or not. We could not understand what he said about that.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that there was such confusion that my statement was misunderstood by the gen-their seats, in order that there may not be any misunderstandings?

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. LACEY. I offer an amendment to the first resolution. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE]. I think he will accept this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What is it?

Mr. LACEY. Let it be read.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will accept almost anything that anybody offers me. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of the first resolution the fellowing: "Provided, That the said employees shall be selected from States not now represented on the Doorkeeper's roll."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a point of order against that amendment, that it is not germane, and is not applicable for many reasons. This is a House resolution. Under the law the Doorkeeper is to make the appointments, and this amendment would make it really a joint resolution, or such a resolution as would require the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the point of order is made that this amendment will defeat the purpose of the resolution

The SPEAKER. That would not be an argument on the point of order; that would be on the merits. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FLYNN. I desire to offer an amendment—to insert after the word "State" the words "or Territories."

The question was taken on Mr. FLYNN's amendment to the amendment; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to

Mr. FLYNN. The gentleman accepts the amendment, Mr.

Speaker.
The SPEAKER. The amendment would have to be accepted by the House.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I wish to suggest—a proviso that the salaries of these additional folders shall be paid out of the money that would go to the folders who have been spending the vacation in New York and Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I make the point of order against that amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. I presume that the gentleman does not seriously mean to offer that amendment, inasmuch as he has not put it in writing or sent it to the Chair.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. LACEY; and

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. LACEY; and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 42.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Have I not a right to demand tellers on this question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes to make a statement.

Mr. LACEY. I object.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I demand tellers. I want to say Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I demand tellers. I want to say that under this amendment there is not a State in the Union that will get any appointments. There is not one that is not represented. The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Tellers were refused, only 30 members voting in favor thereof. The amendment of Mr. LACEY was then agreed to.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, only 27 members voting in favor thereof.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution as amended, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

A division was asked for. The House divided; and there were-ayes 45, noes 80.

So the resolution was rejected.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Chair understands that the first thing before the House is the unfinished business coming over from last Friday.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORSE. I ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Pickler] to withdraw the call for the regular order, so that I may present a matter from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds which will create no debate and will occupy but a few minutes

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, have we not entered upon the regular order already?

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. Mr. BINGHAM. One word with reference to the order of business. While I recognize the force and the justness of the general rule of the House fixing Friday for the consideration of the Private Calendar, I ask unanimous consent, as we have already proceeded to some extent with the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, that the Private Calendar be considered to-morrow and that the legislative bill be taken up in Committee of the Whole to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BING-HAM] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow be substituted for to-day in the consideration of private business. Is there objection?

Mr. PICKLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this request be acceded to, will it cut off the consideration to-day of the unfinished business coming over from last Friday?

The SPEAKER. The proposition, if agreed to, would substitute Saturday for to-day, all private business having the same right to-morrow that it would have to-day. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. PICKLER. Suppose the legislative bill should not be finished to-day?

ished to-day

Mr. BINGHAM. Then the order of the House would operate, of course, and private business would be considered to-morrow.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Why would not to-morrow be as good as to-day for the legislative bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. I prefer that we should go on with the bill to day. The matter is for the House to determine.

to-day. The matter is for the House to determine.

FLORA A. DARLING.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, objection is made. The first thing in order is the unfinished private business. The Clerk will read the bill on which the House was dividing at the time of the adjournment last Friday.

The bill (H. R. 903) for the relief of Flora A. Darling was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that this bill be laid on Personally I should like very much to oblige the gentleman, but it seems to me, in the interest of the public business, that I had better insist on my motion. This question was fully debated in the Committee of the Whole a week ago, and also in the House.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines otion. The question is on the motion to lay The SPEAKER. to withdraw his motion. the bill on the table.

The question having been taken, The SPEAKER. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 100, noes 54. Mr. COOPER of Texas. No quorum.
The SPEAKER (having counted the House). Two hundred and eight members are present, a quorum.

THOMAS B. REED.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 129) for the relief of Thomas B. Reed.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Thomas B. Reed, who served as sergeant, first sergeant, and first lieutenant Fifth Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, and captain Two hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, of the United States Army, in the late war of the rebellion, for a balance of wages earned by him in the suppression of said rebellion, and during his entire time of service in the said Army, and not paid to him, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for due investigation; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to render a judgment, irrespective of the lapse of time, for the amount, if any, found due by it of the United States upon the said claim.

M. MANANOW

Mr. MAHON. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask to have the report read in my time. Mr. MAHON. All right.
The report (by Mr. MAHON) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Mahon) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 129) for the relief of Thomas B. Reed, report:

Reed served as an enlisted man in the Fifth Pennsylvania Reserve Corps Volunteers, United States Army, from June 5, 1861, to March 5, 1863, when he was honorably discharged for promotion and commissioned first lieutenant in said corps and served therein till June 2, 1865; next he was commissioned second lieutenant, Twenty-ninth Infantry, United States Army, July 22, 1867, and from then to June 18, 1878, he served as a commissioned officer in the United States Army. During the whole time he served as such commissioned officer the following provisions of law were, respectively, in force:

"That every commissioned officer of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one additional ration per diem for every five years he may have served or shall serve in the Army of the United States. (5 U. S. Stat., section 15, page 258, act of July 5, 1838.)

"There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service." (Act of July 15, 1870, now section 1262 of the Revised Statutes.)

ntes.)

He was paid for his services in the said intervals of time between March 5, 1863, and June 18, 1878, merely what other officers of his grade were generally paid; and he was paid or allowed nothing whatever in these two intervals of time on account of his said prior length of services in the United States Army as an enlisted man. For this reason he alleges he was short paid for his services rendered during these two intervals between March 5, 1863, and June 18, 1878, partially in the suppression of the late rebellion, and requests the passage of this bill, the sole object of which is to remove any statutable limitation bar that exists, or may exist, to prevent the Court of Claims from hearing and determining his demand in the premises as if it accrued within six years.

The commutation value or price thus put in controversy of the one additional ration per diem for every five years of prior service computes to about the sum of $000, and your committee, having fully considered the matter, can see no reason why the question involved should not be heard and determined, as this officer requests, in the Court of Claims.

Your committee would further observe that this bill nowise asks Congress to determine the justness of this claim (which is for a balance of wages for military services rendered by a distinguished officer); it only asks Congress for what is frequently granted by it to the capitalists and property claimant, and that is "that the claimant may go before a competent tribunal and prove the justness of his claim if he can."

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not catch the reading of the bill. Does

JAMES BIGLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3313) for the relief of James Bigler. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized, and directed to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army the alleged destruction and taking by the United States authorities for the use of the United States troops during the period from May 24, 1862, to 1865, of a certain property formerly situated at Biglers Mills, Va. alleged to have been the property of James Bigler, of Newburg, N. Y., and to have been used and destroyed by the United States troops. Such investigation to extend to the title of the property and the incumbrances thereon, the status of the owner, whether loyal or not, the value of the property destroyed, the circumstances of the destruction, and by whose direction, authority, or permission it was destroyed. And when such investigation shall be completed the Secretary of War shall report the result thereof, with his recommendation thereon, to Congress for action in the premises.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I hope we shall have the report read in that case.

The report (by Mr. HURLEY) was read, as follows:

mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I hope we shall have the report read in that case.

The report (by Mr. Hurley) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5313) for the relief of James Bigler, submit the following report:

This bill confers power upon the Secretary of War to have the claim of James Bigler investigated through the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and to report the result, with his recommendation thereon, to Congress for its action in the premises.

The claim is for the destruction, appropriation, and conversion of claimant's property at Biglers Mills, Va., by Federal troops, during the period from May 4, 1865. Briefly stated, the facts in the case are as follows:

In the spring of 185t claimant purchased 2,409 acres of timber land situated at Rippon Hall, in York County, on the south side of the York River, nearly midway between West Point and Yorktown, Va.; that immediately thereafter he entered into possession of said property and made extensive improvements thereon, including the erection of a pier and bulkhead on the river front; steam sawmill, fully equipped with the best machinery then known: flour and grist mill, also fully equipped with modern machinery; brickyard, store and tenement houses, barns, and other buildings; that as the land was cleared off it was put in condition for cultivation, fenced, and a large portion of it planted in peach trees.

That from the time he took possession of said property until on or about April 20, 1861, when he was forcibly dispossessed therefrom by the Confederate authorities, Mir. Bigler did a large and prosperous business at such place; that all the improvements made by him near-early submisses at such place; that all the improvements made by him here early and the destruction of Williamsburg, Va.; that on the 4th and 5th of May, 1865, Biglers mill was shelled by Federal gunboats then hying in York River, and at the same time its wharf was set on fire by Federal marines, who placed theron cotton saturated they have sustained in war? your committee invite attention to the following extracts from a report made by the late Senator Howe, of Wisconsin, to the Forty-second Congress:

"Among the text writers. Vattel discusses the very question, Is the state bound to indemnify individuals for the damage they have sustained in war? Such damages he says) are of two kinds—those done by the state itself, or the sovereign, and those done by the enemy. Of the first kind, some are done deliberately and by way of precaution, as when a field, a house, a garden, belonging to a private person, is taken for the purpose of erecting on the spot a town rampart, or any other piece of fortification, or when his standing corn, or his storehouses, are destroyed, to prevent their being of use to the enemy. Such damages are to be made good to the individual, who should bear only the quota of the loss."

The same author speaks of damages caused by inevitable necessity, and he instances "the destruction caused by the artillery in retaking a town from an enemy. These are merely accidents. They are misfortunes which chance deals out to the proprietors on whom they happen to fall."

The distinction between the two kinds of damages is clear; one is the result of accident, the other is the result of design. The sovereign, clothed with the right to make war, has the right to march troops and to fire guns. Damages which are the result of such lawful acid on not constitute a ground of claim. But whatever property the government takes from its own obedient subjects for the more efficient prosecution of the war should be compensated for, no matter whether it be forage fed to the cavalry horses, powder burned, timber used on the fortifications, houses removed to make way for such fortifications, or houses destroyed to make them more secure.

Grotius asserts the same doctrine. He says:

"The king may in two ways deprive his subjects of their right, either by way of punishment or by virtue of his eminent power. But if he do so in the last way, it must be reference to the liabilities of the United States growing out of the late war. He writes with extreme caution, but even he asserts that—"If the private property of loyal citizens, inhabitants of loyal States, is appropriated by our military forces for the purpose of supplying our armies and to aid in prosecuting hostilities against a public enemy, the Government is bound to give a reasonable compensation therefor to the owner."

Again he says:

"Again he says:

"Public use does not require that the property takes had be actually used. It may be disused, removed, or destroyed, and destruction of private property may be the best public burdens would be shared unequally." Again he says:

"Public use does not require that the property takes shall be actually used. It may be disused, removed, or destroyed, and destruction of private property may be the best public me it can be put to. Suppose a bridge owned by a private corporation to be so located as to endanger our forts upon the banks of the property in the same of the property may be the best public me it can be put to. Suppose a bridge owned by a private corporation to be so located as to endanger our forts upon the banks of the property in the property of the property of the property of the property of the appropriate it to public use."

In Grant we The United States (d N. & H. Reports) the court says:

"It may safely be assumed as the settled and fundamental law of Christian and civilized states that governments are bound to make just indemnity to the citizen or subject whenever private property is taken for the public good, or in that case tha United States was held to pay for the property estroyed in Arizona merely to prevent if from failing into the hands of the public good, or take it for public use."

In the case of Mitchell we. Harmony, reported in 13 Howard, page 115, Chief Justice Taney, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"There are, without doubt, occasions in which private property may occasionally be taken possession of or destroyed to pre

Subsequent to the war with Great Britain of 1812 a large number of claims for similar injuries were compensated by Congress. Reference is made to a few:

An appropriation was made to William H. Washington, to compensate him for a house situate near the west end of the Potomac bridge, and which was "destroyed by order of an officer of the United States." The facts of the case, briefly stated, were that a corporal was placed in charge of the house, containing a quantity of public stores, with directions from his superior officer to blow up the house in case of an attack by the enemy. Hearing gans fired on the opposite side of the river, he apprehended an attack, and accordingly blew up the stores. The committee reported that, being of opinion "the officer to whose care the public stores were committed thought it prudent and proper to destroy the house and stores to prevent the latter from coming into possession of the enemy, the petitioner should be paid the value of his house." He was paid accordingly.

In 1867 an act was passed to pay J. O. Arms for a house destroyed in Fairfax County, Va. That house was destroyed, as the committee reported, by military orders, and to prevent its being used by the enemy as a cover for attack and also as a point for observation. That act was approved by President Johnson.

In 1871 Congress passed an act making compensation to the Kentucky University for buildings destroyed. The buildings were taken by military authority. They were destroyed by accident. But if the Government is required to make compensation for buildings taken and then destroyed by design. That act was approved by President Grant.

One other legislative precedent is worthy of notice. The case of Mitchell us. Harmony has already been referred to. In that case the property of the plaintiff was taken by military authority. As a consequence of the taking, the goods fell into the hands of the enemy. The courts held that the taking was unnecessary, and therefore required the officer in command to make compensation for be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this bill opens up a very large and dangerous field, if I understand the scope of it. I think it would be well to have it pretty carefully examined. As I understand, it is a bill to give compensation for the destruction of private property in military operations within the theater of war. My understanding is that this took place in Virginia, within the field of active military operations. If that is the character of the bill, if the Government is called upon to pay damages for property destroyed by military operations, it seems to me we shall have a pretty large expenditure to provide for.

I know the case of William and Mary College is sometimes quoted as a precedent, but that was a purely sentimental case, and the House, in voting compensation, put it rather on the ground that it was an educational institution, which, under the peculiar circumstances, should have special recognition. I was not aware that we had, with both eyes open, ever made an appropriation to pay for the destruction of property in the actual operations of war-in the theater of war.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand the gentleman from Maine to say that this bill proposes an appropriation of that sort?

Mr. DINGLEY. It may be that I have misunderstood it, but that is my understanding, and I rose to ask to be informed exactly what it is.

what it is.

Mr. DOCKERY. If so, it would seem to be a new departure.

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems to me, if I understand it, that it is evidently a new departure. Of course it may be said that the William and Mary College matter afforded a precedent; but we all understand how that bill was got through the House, on purely sentimental grounds, and it strikes me that we must be very careful about recognizing claims for the destruction of property within the scene of military operations. Therefore I have risen to ascertain a little more definitely what this bill is. I do not know who has charge of the bill. It may be that in hastily reading the first nas charge of the bill. It may be that in hastly reading the first part of the report I have not got the meaning of it.

Mr. ODELL. This bill carries no appropriation, but merely refers the matter to the Secretary of War for investigation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I know that, but it is the entering wedge for an appropriation, and we have not done even that with our eyes wide one. We have not even authorized an investigation. wide open. We have not even authorized an investigation, where property has been destroyed in the theater of war, in the opera-

Mr. ODELL. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that I would have no objection to the insertion of an amendment which would preclude the investigation if it should be found to be in the theater of war

Mr. DINGLEY. Do not the facts stated in the report show that it was?

Mr. ODELL. No; I do not think so. Mr. DINGLEY. It was in Virginia, where military operations were going on.

Mr. ODELL. It may have been in a part of Virginia that was not in the theater of war.

Mr. SWANSON. Portions of Virginia were not in the theater of war. Mr. DOCKERY. The bill seems to be for the relief of a New Yorker who owned property within the theater of war.

Mr. DINGLEY. That does not make any difference.
Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly not.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly not.
Mr. DINGLEY. I have called attention to this without having read the report carefully, because we must be very careful about allowing an entering wedge for payment for property destroyed in the theater of war in military operations. If we are going into that sort of business, then instead of raising an extra fifty million or seventy-five million of dollars to meet the deficiency, we shall be obliged to raise many times that sum.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Chairman, in order to give time for investigation, I ask that this bill be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar, so that this question may be answered. I am not familiar enough with the question myself to be able to answer.

Mr. CANNON. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. That the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection at all to that. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

OFFICERS AND CREWS OF THE UNITED STATES GUNBOATS KINEO AND CHOCURA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8294) for the relief of the officers and crews of the United States gunboats Kineo and Chocura.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That the sum of $12,474.72 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the officers and crews of the United States gunboats Kineo and Chocura who were engaged in duty thereon in the year 1864 their pro rata shares thereof, being for salvage money, their due on account of saving and taking up forty-nine bales of cotton, said amount having been realized from the sale of said cotton and the same converted into the United States Treasury.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear the report read in that case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that there are 88 pages in this report. Does the gentleman desire it read in his time?

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Chairman, this report itself only contains two pages. The rest is an appendix.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

The report (by Mr. Hurley) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 324) for the relief of the officers and crews of the United States gunboats Kineo and Chocura, submit the following report:

The committee find the facts to be as follows:

In 1884 four Conteilerate steamers ran the blockade out of Galveston Harbor, Texas, viz, Harriet Lane, Matagorda, Isabel, and Suwanee. One of the United States gunboats, the Katahdue, saw them and gave chase. The four blockade runners were in plain sight, but were too fast for the Katahdue, and soon left her hull down, except the Matagorda, to which she got so close that to prevent capture her crew threw overboard into the Gulf of Marko o'ver 200 bales of cotton. Several of the United States vessels picked up this cotton and sold it in New Orleans; many bales were washed ashore on Galveston Island. The cotton picked up by the Kineo and Chocura, as soon as placed upon the levee at New Orleans, was seized by the United States marshal, and the following proceedings had:

May term, 1864, in the case of the United States vs. Forty-nine Bales of Cotton, two-fourths of the net proceeds of the 30 bales of cotton referred to decreed to the officers and crew of the Kineo as salvage; one-fourth of such proceeds to the United States, and the remaining one-fourth was ordered to be kept in the registry of the court for a year and one day, and if not claimed by the owners within that period the same was to be subject to the further order of the trains and afterwards paid into the Treasury, the accounting officers would have no authority to settle and provided the protein adjudged to the United States Treasury.

The matter having thus been adjudicated by the court, and the money remaining undistributed having been covered into the Treasury, the accounting officers would have no authority to settle and pay any claim against the portion adjudged to the United States, nor against the portion set apart to the owners and afterwards paid into the Treasury without being first appropriated by Congress for the benefit of the claimants. Under the circumstances, therefore, it seems that any relief the officers and crew of the Kineo may be entitled to in the premises can be obtained only through Congress.

The papers inclosed with your letter are herewith returned.

Respectfully, yours,

I. H. MAYNARD, Assistant Secretary.

JOHN C. STARKWEATHER, Esq., 1420 New York avenue, Washington, D. C.

This claim is made under the prize act of June 30, 1864, which provides for the distribution of salvage, etc., accruing or awarded to a vessel among the officers and men entitled thereto. The act of June 8, 1874, provides for the distribution of the proceeds of prize money to the captors.

The act of June 30, 1884, provides for salvage in case of recapture, and the last clause of section No. 29 reads as follows: "The whole amount awarded as salvage shall be decreed to the captors, and no part to the United States, and shall be distributed as in the case of proceeds of property condemned as prize." This became a law June 30, 1884, just twenty-seven days prior to the decree of the court which was rendered July 27, 1884, as herein stated. This being the case, said court decree is void absolutely, and the payment of the sum claimed into the Treasury of the United States is a wrong against these claimants, and should be repaid to them at once as provided by law.

Your committee, in view of the foregoing statement of facts, report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The committee attach hereto the acts of Congress of June 8, 1874, and June 30, 1884, and statement of vessels captured and destroyed for violation of the blockade or in battle from May, 1861, to May, 1865; miscellaneous captures; prizes adjudicated, from the commencement of the rebellion to November 1, 1865; of prizes adjudicated to May 1, 1868, and ask that it be printed as an appendix of this report.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1524) to execute the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of William B. Isaacs & Co.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William B. Isaacs & Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $16,067, the same being the amount found by the Court of Claims to be the proportionate part belonging, when taken by the United States, to the Bank of Virginia of certain gold coin taken possession of by the United States on or about the 23d day of August, A. D. 1855, and which coin has ever since been, and now is, held by the United States, and to which moneys, by the findings of said court, the said William B. Isaacs & Co. are now, in law and justice, entitled as assignee, the said findings of the Court of Claims having been made in a proceeding and trial in said court authorized by the joint resolution of Congress of the 3d day of January, A. D. 1887 (twenty-fourth volume United States Statutes, page 644), to be instituted in said court against the United States.

The report (by Mr. Mahon) was read, as follows:

The committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1524) entitled "A bill to execute the findings of the Court of Claims," respectfully report the same and recommend that it do pass.

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to William B. Isaacs & Co. the sum of $16,087.88, the same being the amount found by the Court of Claims to be due to the said William B. Isaacs & Co. in their suit against the United States, No. 15697.

The principal facts are these: Certain banks of Virginia sent their coin to the town of Washington, in the State of Georgia, for safe-keeping, and after the war, to wit, on the 23d of August, 1865, the sum of about $100,000 was taken possession of by the troops sent to Georgia after the war. The Union generals commanding in the South and in Virginia had given to the claimants protection and safe conduct of their money from Washington to the city of Richmond, and en route about the sum above named was taken possession of by the Federal troops, which was covered into the Treasury.

A controversy having arisen as to the ownership of this specie, Congress passed a joint resolution directing the Court of Claims to ascertain and report who were the owners of the coin in question. They reported that the Bank of Virginia, whose assignee the claimants are—

Was the equitable owner of a part of the fund in the Treasury, proportionate to the amount which it contributed thereto, such proportionate part being the sum of $18,687.88. The claim therefor and the right of property therein passed to and is now owned by the claimants in this suit, who are equitably entitled to the same.

The remainder of the fund, being the sum of $78,276.40, is the property of the United States, the title never having passed to said banks, and the claimants not having derived any claim or title in and through said judicial proceedings.

ceedings.

BY THE COURT.

Thus it appears that neither the United States nor any other party has the slightest claim to said sum of $16,887.88, and that it is the rightful property of the claimants. Therefore, we feel that the Government is in duty bound to return this money to the just owners thereof, as ascertained by the Cou t of Claims. Therefore, your committee recommend that the bill do pass, without amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas George McAlpin was the sutler of the Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry during the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, and was during those years required by the United States, at the United States custom-house at Baltimore, Md., to pay the sum of 3 per cent on the value of all of the supplies shipped to him during said years within the lines of the Army; and Whereas he was thus unlawfully and unjustly required to pay to the United States, and did thus unlawfully and unjustly pay, the sum of $6,906.18, being 3 per cent on $230.203.29, to the United States, as appears by the books of the custom-house at Baltimore, Md.: Therefore

Mr. CANNON. Read the report. The report (by Mr. Mahon) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1353) for the relief of George McAlpin, submit the following report:

This claim was presented in the Fifty-third Congress, and was favorably reported upon by the House Committee on War Claims, to whom it was referred.

After a careful investigation of the facts involved, your committee adopt the report of the Fifty-third Congress, a copy thereof being hereto attached and made a part of this report, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The evidence before the committee shows that said sum of money now claimed was paid under protest, and that protest was made at the time of payment.

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2042) for the relief of George McAlpin, report as follows:

This case was referred to the Committee on War Claims of the Fifty-second Congress, and was favorably reported upon by that committee. After an investigation of the facts involved, the report of that committee is adopted, a copy thereof being attached hereto, and your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 2183, Fifty-second Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8200) for the relief of George McAlpin, to repay him moneys unlawfully collected from him by the United States, respectfully make the following report:
George McAlpin was appointed sutler of the Eleventh Pennsylvanis Cavalry in November, 1862, and served in that capacity down to the close of the war, in 1855. His appointment was made under the act of March 19, 1862, providing for the appointment of sutlers for each regiment in the public service. This regiment served in the Army of the James, in the State of Virginia. As sutler he was required to purchase goods, which he did mostly in the city of Baitimore, from which city they were shipped through the lines to the point where the regiment was in service, under regulations regulating such service. Between the 3d of November, 1862, and the 12th of May, 1865. Mr. McAlpin purchased sutler's stores, mostly in Baltimore, provided for in said act and the revised schedules provided for therein, and had them consigned to himself at different points in the State of Virginia—Old Point, Newport News, Suffolk, Portsmouth, Norfolk, Yorktown, Williamsburg, Bermuda Hundred, Fort Monroe, and other points. Between these dates he purchased and shipped goods to the amount of $235,074 69, which were cleared through the custom-house at Baltimore. The amount of stores so shipped appears from the certified statements from the custom-house at Baltimore.

Under the fifth section of an act entitled "An act further to provided—

"That the President may, in his discretion, license and permit commercial intercourse with any such parts of a State or section the inhabitants of which are so declared in the state of insurrection, in such articles, and for such time, and by such persons as he in his discretion may think most conducte to the public interest, and such intercourse, so far as by him licensed, shall be conducted and carried on only in pursuance of rules and compensation as are now allowed for similar service under other provisions of law."

Under the provisions of this act certain regulations were prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and, among others, one with reference to the transfer or clearing of sutlers' goods through the custom-house.

Under the heading "Sutlers' permits, how obtained and upon what conditions," is regulation 24, as follows:

"Permits will be granted to sutlers to transport to the regiments sutlered by them such articles as they are authorized to sell free of the 5-per cent fee; but no permit will be granted to a sutler except on presentation to the proper permit officer of this regiment, countersigned by the division commanding officer of his regiment, countersigned by the division commander thereof, and an application and affidavit in the form prescribed. Transportation shall not be permitted to any sutler of any amount of goods exceeding $2.500 per month, nor for over two months' supply at one time, nor for any goods except such as he is by law and War Department orders allowed to deal in."

Trade regulation 42:

"Fee for permit so to purchase or sell and transport to or from such district other products, goods, wares, or merchandise, 5 per cent on the sworn invoice value thereof at the place of shipment. Fee for each permit for individual, family, or plantation supplies on every purchase over $20 and not over $50, 5 cents."

Subsequently, on March 21, 1864, this regulation was modified by the Sec vidual, family, or plantation supplies on every purchase over $30 and not over $50, 5 cents."

Subsequently, on March 21, 1864, this regulation was modified by the Secretary of the Treasury, as follows:

"The forty-second trade regulation, series of September 11, 1863, is hereby so far modified that on and after the 1st day of April next the invoice valuation permit fee on shipments to and from insurrectionary districts will be 3 per cent instead of 5, as therein prescribed."

Mr. McAlpin complied with all the rules and regulations relative to his appointment and qualifications, procuring the proper certificate and making the necessary affidavit to bring him within all the provisions of the act regulating his appointment and the regulations thereunder, above prescribed. By a mistake of the custom-house officers at the custom-house in Baltimore Mr. McAlpin was charged 5 per cent and 3 per cent fees on all such shipments through the custom-house charging them to him as a trader instead of under the regulation above mentioned for sutlers. The amount of payments so made was $5,906.18.

Under the above acts of Congress and the regulations mentioned no fees should have been charged on sutler's goods, such as were shipped by Mr. McAlpin through the custom-house at Baltimore, and therefore the amount paid by him to the Government, to wit, the said sum of $8.906.18, was wrong fully collected from him, as there was no law or regulation of the Treasury authorizing such collections.

Your committee find from the evidence adduced before them that the said sum was paid to the United States through the custom-house at Baltimore without any warrant of law.

Your committee also find, from the evidence adduced, that Mr. McAlpin fully complied with all the laws, rules, and regulations governing the duties of sutlers and paid all the legal fees and taxes relating to the office of army sutler, and therefore respectfully recommend the passage of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, is there anyone who will explain this bill to the House?

Mr. MAHON. I have charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania

MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the way I became identified with this bill, not particularly as chairman of the Committee on War Claims, was this: In the Fifty-third Congress this old gentleman, Claims, was this: In the Fifty-third Congress this old gentleman, who is not a constituent of mine, but who lived here in this city, called upon Mr. Wolverton, who was a distinguished member of that Congress, and myself and, after two or three hours' consultation, prevailed on us to bring his claim before Congress. We both investigated it very thoroughly, getting from the Treasury Department and from the custom-house at Baltimore all the necessary data to find whether this old man's claim was a just one or not. He was then 83 years of age. We found him without friends. A kind lady, no relative of his, kept him at her home at Hyattsville. She took him there and kept him there three years, until he died, about two months ago. about two months ago.

about two months ago.

Now, there is no question about the fact that the custom-house at Baltimore collected the same customs and duties off this man that they would off a trader. The act of Congress and the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department regulating sutlers doing business, with the Army of the Potomac especially, fixed what fees they were to pay. They were to pay 5 per cent on all goods transmitted from the cities of Baltimore or Philadelphia, or other Northern ports. This old gentleman bought his goods largely in the city of Baltimore; and the paper I hold in my hand is a certified copy of all the goods passing through the custom-house at Baltimore, the kind of goods, where they were going, and the value of them, all certified to by the custom-house officials.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAHON. Yes. Mr. PARKER. I have no doubt of the particulars that the committee have gone through; but the point I had in my mind was this: If this gentleman paid in that way in 1862, 1863, or 1864, under protest, did he not have the right to go to the Court of Claims or the executive officers and ask for a return of the money thus paid under protest?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir. This money, some $6,000, having been paid into the Treasury of the United States without any warrant of law, and having passed into the common Treasury, there is no way to get it back to those it belongs to except by an act of Concrete

Mr. PARKER. Is it not very common to bring suits against custom-house officers in such cases?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir. The custom-house officer has paid this money into the Treasury.

Mr. PARKER. When did this claimant first bring the matter up—in 1864?

Mr. MAHON. This matter was in controversy for a long time. George McAlpin was a prosperous man until there occurred a disastrous fire in the city of St. Louis some ten years ago, in which every dollar that he had in the world was swept out of existence, and this claim was all he had left.

Mr. PARKER. Then he did not raise the question of this claim until ten years ago?

Mr. MAHON. He raised it at the time he paid the money.

Mr. PARKER. How?

Mr. MAHON. By a protest, which keeps his claim alive and in good standing. Mr. PARKER. For thirty years?

Mr. MAHON. It ought to. Do you propose that the Congress of the United States shall refuse to pay back $6,000 to this man if he can show beyond question that it was taken from him by the representatives of this Government without any authority of law?

Mr. PARKER. Is the gentleman asking me a question?
Mr. MAHON. Yes, sir.
Mr. PARKER. Then I will answer it. It seems to me that a sutler who went down to the seat of war and found that he would have to pay this tax in order to carry on his business probably added enough to his prices to pay the tax.
Mr. MAHON. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that if years ago I had collected of him $6,000, and if he could convince me now, even after thirty years, that I had collected it unjustly and unlawfully, I would not only return him the money, but I would return it with interest if I could.

Mr. PARKER. That might be proper, if I had not charged it up in my expenses and made profits beyond that amount in my business by means of the privileges thus secured. Sutlers, I believe, generally added their expenses to their prices.

Mr. MAHON. That is no answer. This man went into a dangerous business, and if he did make $5,000 or $10,000 out of it, that is no good reason why this Government should take that money from him. Now, there is no doubt whatever about the facts in this case. After a thorough investigation by my colleague, Mr. Wolverton, and myself, and by the customs officers in the Treasury, we have become entirely satisfied that this $6,000 was taken woverton, and myself, and by the customs officers in the Treasury, we have become entirely satisfied that this $6,000 was taken from this man without any authority of law. The Government collected not only the 5 per cent, which was quite right, but also the 3 per cent which was authorized to be charged up to traders but not to sutlers.

Mr. COX. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Suppose the Government officers did collect that money and this man put goods on the market under the privileges which he enjoyed, does not the gentleman think that he probably regulated his profits according to the amount of tax and other expenses that he had to pay?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir. As to the sutlers in the Army of the United States during the war, the prices they charged the soldiers were fixed by the officers commanding the division or the brigade where they operated; not by themselves.

Mr. COX. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this man sold only to soldiers?

Mr. MAHON. To soldiers and officers.

Mr. COX. Oh, he was trading with everybody, probably.
Mr. MAHON. No. The law also provided that when a sutler Mr. MAHON. No. The law also provided that when a sutler delivered goods to a family to a certain amount he had to pay $10, and on another amount he had to pay $25, but he has made no claim for any refund of that.

Mr. DALZELL. Who owns this claim now?

Mr. MAHON. The old man is dead and his wife is dead, but there is a son left who is a physical wreck, and who will be in the almshouse inside of a year if he does not get this relief.

Mr. COX. I think this money ought to go back to the people who bought the goods. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I think this money ought to go back to the people who bought the goods. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to amend this bill so as to provide that the money shall go to this man's administrator and be applied, first, to pay this poor woman living out at Hyattsville, or wherever it is, who took care of him and buried him, and the balance, if there is any, to this son, who is very poor and is a helpless cripple, living in the city of Tyrone. I will not take up the time of the committee in further discussing this bill. I simply want to restate that there is no question that the Treasury of the United States has to-day this amount of money which belongs to George McAlpin, which should have been paid back to him at the time, and I simply ask the House to do justice to his estate, and so I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman and his colleague had ample evidence before them that this man was a sutler at the time this claim arose.

Mr. MAHON. There is no doubt about that. Here is his commission and here is his bond. We have examined the case carefully. He was a sutler, doing business and complying fully with the regulations.

Mr. DINGLEY. Was there any evidence before you that this claimant made any effort to obtain the return of the money after it had been paid as a tax prior to the Fifty-second Congress?

Mr. MAHON. Not except through the custom-house at Baltimore and through the Treasury, where they could not afford him any relief.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, this case may be all right, but it seems to me that after a claim against the Government has slept for more than thirty years and the statute of repose has come to operate, for the very good reason that the evidence which could have been obtained at the time must necessarily now be in large part missing, we ought to beware how we entertain such a claim. The Government finds itself at a great disadvantage after the lapse of thirty years in presenting a defense in these cases, and where a claim of this kind has been allowed to sleep for over thirty years, I think that we ought to accept the evidence which the claimant produces with a great deal of caution. I merely submit this as a general observation and not as specially applicable to this

Mr. MAHON. George McAlpin offers no evidence here, except the evidence of the books and records of the Government and the acts of Congress, showing that the officers collected from him this money without warrant of law, and that it was paid into the Treasury. That is his evidence, and the best evidence in the world is record evidence. That shows conclusively that this money was taken from him without authority of law. I offer the amendment is record evidence. which I send to the desk.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does not the gentleman think it would be wise to send this case to the Court of Claims to get a judicial finding of the facts?

Mr. MAHON. How are we to help the matter by sending the case to the Court of Claims? Here is the law and here is the record. If we want to dispose of this question in such a way that this man's great-great-grandchildren shall receive the money justly due him, the Court of Claims is the proper place to which to send the matter.

I have no personal interest in this case, Mr. Chairman—none whatever. But this old man was around this Congress for years looking after his claim; and the only reason it did not go through in the last Congress was because we had not then within our reach

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?
Mr. CANNON. It is claimed, as I gather from this report, that these goods were bought during a period of two years. Am

Mr. MAHON. The transactions commenced November 3, 1862, and the last payment was made May 12, 1865.

Mr. CANNON. About two years and a half. Now, I have looked over this report hastily. I am not sure that I am right in the view which I am inclined to take. But I ask the gentleman's attention to this passage on the second page of the report:

Permits will be granted to sutlers to transport to the regiments sutlered by them such articles as they are authorized to sell free of the 5 per cent fee; but no permit will be granted to a sutler except on presentation to the proper permit officer of the original certificate of his appointment, or the commanding officer of his regiment, countersigned by the division commander thereof, and an application and affidavit in the form prescribed.

Now I ask the gentleman to observe this language:

Transportation shall not be permitted to any sutler of any amount of goods exceeding $2,500 per month, nor for over two months' supply at one time, nor for any goods except such as he is by law and War Department orders allowed to deal in.

Thirty months was the length of time this man was engaged in this line of business. At $2,500 a month, $75,000 would be the limit of the amount which, under the regulations, he could have handled. Now, 5 per cent on $75,000 would be $3,750. The percentage, I am informed, on most of this business was 3 per cent. But I wish to call my friend's attention to the fact that he allows 3 per cent on $235,000. I submit that this man can not be entitled to more than 3 per cent on $75,000, because under the regulations of the Department he could not handle more than $2,500 per month.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman read what follows in the report about other goods?

Mr. CANNON. I do not think that changes the aspect of the

Mr. MAHON. I call attention to this language:

Transportation shall not be permitted to any sutler of any amount of goods exceeding $2.500 per month, nor for over two months' supply at one time, nor for any goods except such as he is by law and War Department orders allowed to deal in.

He could ship more than $2,500 of goods per month if he had Department orders to do so.

This $2,500 was to cover such goods or and under the law, Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. This $2,500 was to cover such goods as, under the order of the War Department and under the law, he was required to deal in; but as a sutler he was not permitted to ship goods to the amount of more than $2,500 per month.

Now, what are the facts as they appear in this report? If, during those thirty months, he shipped $235,000 worth of goods, the excess over $75,000 was shipped not as a sutler but as a trader. Now, 3 per cent on $75,000 would be $2,250.

Mr. MAHON. Add to that 6 per cent, and see where you will be.

Mr. CANNON. The report does not pretend to add anything for interest; and the Government, I am quite sure, is not going to enter upon the policy of paying interest to anybody,

Mr. MAHON. Well, let the amendment I have sent to the desk go through, and then I will offer another which perhaps will satisfy these gentlemen.

isfy these gentlemen.

Mr. DOCKERY. Two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars is the whole amount to which this man would be entitled in any

Mr. MAHON. Well, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 4, strike out the word "said" and insert the words "administrator of;" and after the word "McAlpin," in the same line, insert the word "deceased;" so as to read: "That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed to pay to the administrator of George McAlpin, deceased, out of any moneys," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. MAHON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the amendment which has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] to make the amount to be paid to this man $2,500, because I think that amount will be ample to take care of this old man for the remainder of his life.

A MEMBER. Two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars is

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the matter correctly, the gentleman in charge of this bill consents that the amount to be paid under the bill be reduced from something over amount to be paid under the bill be reduced from something over $6,000 to $2,250.

Mr. MAHON. Only for this reason, that this old man ought to receive something promptly—

Mr. DOCKERY. We have a reduction of about $4,000 in the amount of this claim as the result of a debate of ten minutes.

Mr. MAHON. I claim that every dollar which the bill proposes to pay is justly due; but I am willing to take half a loaf rather than go without bread.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the gentleman suggested that interest at 6 per cent be added.

Mr. MAHON. No.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, sir, the Government has never entered upon the policy of paying interest. The gentleman from Illinois has kindly saved the Government about $4,000 by his suggestion, and of course if he is content with the amount of $2,250 left in the bill, I will not object. But I think the result of this colloquy between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and my friend from Illinois emphasizes the necessity of sending this claim to a competent court to judicially ascertain the facts in connection with it.

petent court to judicially ascertain the facts in connection with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 5 and 6, the words "six thousand nine hundred and six" and insert the words "two thousand two hundred and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, submitted

The CHARMAN. There is an amendment pending, submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Mahon], to strike out the name of the party in the bill and insert "the administrator of the estate," and the question will first be taken upon that.

The amendment of Mr. Mahon was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will now be taken on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, which has just been read.

just been read.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire but a moment's time.

It is plain and palpable about this claim, as it is about claims of a similar character, that when a sutler got the goods, and put them on the market where he sold them, he fixed his price according to the expense involved, including the expenditure which is now claimed to be refunded to him.

Now, if he sold them to the soldiers, and this price was added, they are the men who paid the tax, and ought to be relieved by such action as this, and not the sutler. And I do not think that this character of claims should be sent to the Court of Claims to ascertain the true amount.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman know that the benevolent

Mr. LOUD. Boos not the gentleman and the state states sullers sold their goods without any profit whatever?

Mr. COX. Oh, yes; yours did, no doubt. Ours did not. We paid pretty high charges to them.

Mr. LOUD. I understand that you used to get them without

Mr. LOUD. I understand that you used to get them without paying anything, whatever. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Well, we managed to get along.

Now, this thing ought to be sent to the Court of Claims and let them investigate the whole matter. I wish to enter my protest against paying this sutler for goods, on a claim of this character, which he collected from the soldiers.

Mr. MAHON. How does the gentlemen know that he did?

Mr. MAHON. How does the gentleman know that he did? Mr. COX. Well, you do not say that he did not; and I think it

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman's argument is evidence of the fact that he does not know anything of sutlers in the Union Army.
Mr. COX. Well, I was on the other side, and did not learn very

mr. COA. Well, I was on the other side, and did not learn very much of them, except as we chanced to capture them.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman ought to know that the prices of the various kinds of commodities dealt in by these men was not fixed by the sutlers at all. The officer commanding the division fixed the price, and the sutler had to comply with his order. If, for instance, he paid 60 cents a pound for butter, and the general commanding said it should be sold for 25 cents a pound, he had to take that for it take that for it.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania this question: Did you ever see a sutler, on either side, that did not take pains to take care of himself?

Mr. MAHON. I never saw a sutler that every boy in the army did not try to beat. [Laughter.]
Mr. COX. And I never saw a sutler that did not beat the boys.

Mr. COA. And I never saw a sutter that did not beat the boys.

[Renewed laughter.]
Mr. MAHON. Not on our side.
Mr. PARKER. Can we not have a vote on this matter? We are taking up more of the time of the House than the claim is worth.

Mr. COX. I move to refer this matter to the Court of Claims. The CHAIRMAN. The question will first be taken on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

Cannon].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON: I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has suggested that he desired to make a motion.

Mr. COX. Well, Mr. Chairman, a good friend has suggested to me that perhaps we had better leave it as it is, because it may get bigger, and therefore I will not renew my motion. it is a swindle all the way through.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the committee to the necessity of amending the title in accordance with the action taken by the committee, and without objection the title will be amended accordingly.

There was no objection.

EUGENE OSCAR FECHÉT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4438) for the relief of Eugene Oscar Fechét. The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That the accounting officers of the Treasury of the United States are hereby authorized and directed, upon application being made by the said Eugene Oscar Fechét, a private and noncommissioned officer of volunteers, cadet of the United States Military Academy, and commissioned officer of the Regular Army, or his legal representative, for commutation of rations and of pay which accrued while the said Eugene Oscar Fechét was in the Volunteer and Regular armies of the United States, to pay to the said Eugene Oscar Fechét, or to his legal representative, the sum of $975.47, this being the sum found to be due him by the Paymaster-General of the Army under the principles of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Watson case, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The CHAIR MAN. The question is on laying aside the bill to

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope we shall have some information concerning this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report read, at least

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Texas.

The report (by Mr. AVERY) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Avery) was read, as follows:

The committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1140) for the relief of Eugene Oscar Fechét, submit the following report:

It appears from the records of the War Department that Lieutenant Fechét entered the military service as an enlisted man in the Second Michigan Battery, United States Volunteers, September 10, 1861, when barely passed 15 years of age, and was discharged as first sergeant of Battery B, First Michigan Light Artillery, United States Volunteers, April 10, 1864, by reason of his appointment as cadet at the United States Military Academy. Served as a cadet from July 1, 1864, to June 15, 1868, when he was commissioned second lieutenant Second United States Artillery, and resigned March 15, 1875.

The claim that cadet service at the United States Military Academy should be counted in computing longevity pay is based upon the original act providing increased compensation to officers for length of service (section 15, act of July 5, 1838, 5 Stat. L., 258) and upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States March 11, 1889, in the case of The United States vs. Watson. (130 U. S. R., page 30.)

A bill was passed in the Fifty-third Congress, second session, for the relief of the legal representatives of Capt. Orsemus B. Boyd (S. 2186; H. R. 7511). The House report upon this bill is very full and exhaustive, and was adopted and made a part of the Senate report, and as the present bill is exactly similar in all respects, your committee have not believed it to be necessary to restate at length the argument of House report to H. R. 7511.

In order to exactly ascertain the sum due under the provisions of this bill, and to incorporate this sum as a part of this bill, the bill was referred to the War Department. The following communication from the Paymaster-General of the Army states the exact amount due:

War Department, Paymaster-General's Office,

WAR DEPARTMENT, PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

Washington, D. C., December 14, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith Senate bill 305.

It appears that Lieutenant Fechét served as an enlisted man from September 10, 1861, to April 10, 1864; as cadet, Milltary Academy, from July 1, 1864, to June 15, 1868, and as second lieutenant, Second Artillery, from June 15, 1868, to March 15, 1875, when he resigned.

The amount necessary to pay him under the within bill is $975.47.

Very respectfully,

T. H. STANTON, Paymaster-General United States Army.

In conclusion, the committee find that, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, the claimant has a just claim against the United States.

The committee report herewith a substitute for House bill 1140, and recommend that it do pass.

mend that it do pass.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that there can be no defense of a proposition to include the period during which the Government was educating this officer, in order to increase his pay. The bill itself declares that it is in consonance with a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and I do not dispute that statement; but I will venture to express my astonishment that the Supreme Court has ever decided that a man was serving this Government in the Army during the time that it was paying this Government in the Army during the time that it was paying him for the privilege of educating him.

Mr. POWERS. Cadets are regularly mustered into the service.

Mr. BAILEY. I know they are mustered into the service, but I know that they are rendering the Government no service. I know, and every gentleman on this floor knows, that there is the greatest competition among the young men of every district to secure these appointments to the Military and Naval academies, at West Point and Annapolis, and it seems to me that the Government does quite enough when it takes these young men and educates them at its own expense, without including the period of their education in order to increase their pay under this longevity

I have little expectation of defeating this bill, but I desire to express my disapproval of the principle of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MAHON) there were—ayes 47, noes 50.

Accordingly, the committee refused to order the bill to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommenda-

MATHIAS PEDERSEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4310) for the relief of Mathias Pedersen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Mathias Pedersen, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, being the sum unlawfully collected from him on November 27, 1863, by the board of enrollment, namely, $300 to furnish a substitute when drafted for service in the Army, he not being a citizen of the United States.

The Committee on War Claims recommended the following amendment:

In line 4, after the word "Pedersen," insert "late of Spring Valley, Rock County, Wis."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope we may have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is recognized, and calls for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. Otjen) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4310) for the relief of Mathias Pedersen, submit the following report:

This claim was presented in the Fifty-first Congress and was favorably reported upon by the House Committee on War Claims, to whom it was referred.

The facts of the claim are fully set forth in that report, which is as follows:

[House Report No. 3011, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2962) for the relief of Mathias Pedersen, report as follows:

"This claim is for the repayment of $300, together with interest thereon at 6 per cent per annum, amounting in all to $768. The $200 was collected from the claimant by the board of enrollment on November 27, 1863, to furnish a substitute when drafted for service in the Army, the receipt for which accompanies this report. Evidence is submitted showing the claimant to be a native of Norway; that he came to the United States and located in the State of Wisconsin in the month of June, 1860, when 21 years of age. It is shown also that that the claimant was drafted into the service of the United States from the town of Spring Valley, Rock County, Wis., on November 12, 1863, and in order to secure his release he was obliged to pay to the board of enrollment the sum of $300.

"It is further shown that the claimant was exempt from military service at the time he was drafted and at the time he paid the $300, on the ground that he was then the subject of a foreign Government, and that he did not declare his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States until October 17, 1864.

"Your committee have considered all the papers and facts in the case and are of the opinion that the claim is a just one. Your committee, therefore, report back the bill with the recommendation that it pass, with the following amendments, viz:

"In lines 5 and 6 strike out the words 'seven hundred and sixty-eight' and insert the words 'three hundred,' and in line 11 strike out all after the word 'States.'"

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following 'States.'"

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:
In line 4, after "Pedersen," insert "late of Spring Valley, Rock County, Wis."

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman, or of some member of the committee who is familiar with this bill, in regard to it. It seems to me rather strange that a man should have been drafted into the service of the United States, away back in 1862, and that he should be forced to pay $300, and that nothing should be said about it until 1896. And I should like to know whether or not the evidence shows that this man presented to the board of enrollment the fact that he was not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I am unable to say whether the evidence shows that fact or not

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the House should have the opportunity to hear what is being said. We can not hear the remarks which gentlemen are making.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to state whether the evidence shows the fact suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] or not. It is two years since I examined the evidence; but I do know that this claimant has been besieging Congress for some sessions. I know that he was here in the Fifty-first Congress. Whether he was here before that or not, I am unable to state from personal knowledge.

I am personally acquainted with this man. He was drafted shortly after he came to this country from Norway. He was an ignorant man and he paid the $300 substitute money and went on about his business. He lived in a Norwegian settlement, among foreigners. He lives there now, and probably he did not have much information on the subject for some time. That is all I can state about it personally. The evidence shows that he was drafted and paid the commutation money, that he was not a citizen of the United States, and that he had only recently immigrated from Norway.

Mr. RAY. Well, he was enjoying all the benefits of our Government, and has continued to do so ever since.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is true, and he has been bearing all its burdens that were lawfully placed upon him, the same as the gentleman from New York and myself.

Mr. RAY. The simple point is that at that time he had not been naturalized.

Mr. RAY. The been naturalized.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. He was not a citizen.

Mr. RAY. But he had come here intending to make this his home and to become a citizen.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. No, there is no evidence of that.

Mr. RAY. Well, he has remained ever since.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes, he has remained ever since. The fact is that the money was taken from him without authority of law and appropriated by the Government, and he simply asks the Government to restore it to him after thirty-four years, without interest. interest

Mr. RAY. Well, he seems to have paid the money cheerfully and without objection at that time.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, I made this report, and I should

Mr. DALZELL. Do I understand that this bill carries interest

Mr. DALZELL. Do I understand that this bill carries interest on that $300?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Not at all.

Mr. DALZELL. I should like to ask my friend, who has been a member of this House for a great many years, if he knows of a single precedent for the passage of any such act as this?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes; there was one passed last session by this House, I remember distinctly. I can not remember the name, but it was brought up by unanimous consent and passed the House.

There can be no reason against the passage of the bill. House. There can be no reason against the passage of the bill. The Government of the United States by force took from this man $300, which it has, and it has never returned it.

Mr. DALZELL. Why, he certainly paid $300 to avoid the draft, and the Government paid it out for a substitute.

Mr. OTJEN. Let me answer that statement. As I understand the evidence, at the time he was drafted and paid this money this board assured him that he could get this money refunded later on, but that it was necessary for him to pay this money in order on, but that it was necessary for him to pay this mode, it to avoid the draft.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, does "later on" mean thirty years after?

Mr. OTJEN. I understand he has been here for more than twenty years. I am so informed by the clerk of the Committee on War Claims. It is not an unusual thing that men were drafted who were not citizens of the country, and there have been more bills than this to refund money where they had paid the draft money. The fact is, that he paid the money to this board; that he did not declare his intention until a year afterwards to become money. The fact is, that he paid the money to this board; that he did not declare his intention until a year afterwards to become a citizen of the United States; that he was not a citizen of the United States at the time he was drafted; and so, of course, he is entitled to have his money back.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor. Do

I understand the gentleman to say that the evidence before the committee shows that the board of enrollment, knowing the fact that this man was not a citizen of the United States; that he was not subject to the law; that he was not liable to be drafted, and knowing that, if that was the fact, they would be taking his money illegally, insisted upon his paying it in order that he might escape the draft?

Mr. OTJEN. I can not say that the board of enrollment knew that he was not a citizen. I can only say that from the evidence it appeared that the board stated if he was not a citizen he could have this money refunded. They, of course, would have no direct evidence showing that he was a citizen or not a citizen, and for that reason they advised him to pay this money, which he could have refunded if it was correct that he was not a citizen.

Mr. RAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly plain from the gentleman's statement that, at the time he recites the question was before the board, this man was not subject to military duty, not subject to the draft, and that they passed upon the matter, or that they had it under consideration and insisted upon his paying the money, and he did pay it to escape the draft. And now, in the year 1896, he comes before this Congress with a claim to refund

Unless we are going to light the war over again and examine every individual case that comes up after the lapse of thirty-four years, we had better consider some things as settled.

I know there is a tendency to go into these matters. We have to listen constantly to appeals of people who claim that they were wronged during the war, more than a third of a century ago, but it does seem to me that there are controlling reasons why the Congress of the United States ought not to enter upon the policy of reopening such cases and thus bringing upon themselves the multitude of troubles that will inevitably result in the future.

that money. It strikes me this is a most remarkable case. This man the next year declared his intention to become a citizen of man the next year declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States; two years later he did become a citizen of the United States, and he has enjoyed all the blessings and privileges of a citizen of the United States from that time. If we are to go back that length of time and pay every man back the money he paid, as in this instance, $300, through mistake of some kind, for the preservation of this country under the circumstances that then existed, we certainly will have our hands full—

Mr. DOCKERY. We have just passed a bill to pay a sutler.
Mr. RAY (continuing). And we will have the Treasury empty.

What is that?

Mr. DOCKERY. We have just passed a bill to pay a sutler

$2,250. Mr. RAY. I am not responsible for that. Did the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not so vote.

Mr. RAY. Why did you not fight the proposition if it was wrong?

Mr. DOCKERY. I did.

Mr. DOCKERY. I did.
Mr. OTJEN. Does the gentleman claim that if it was the fact that this man was not a citizen of the United States, the Government had the right to take $300 from him and refuse to refund it?
Mr. RAY. No, sir; I do not claim any such thing; but it does strike me as a very remarkable condition of things that this man was compelled by any board of enrollment to pay $300 when he was not a citizen of the United States and not subject to draft. It seems to me that the presumption is against this claimant. The presumption is that the officers of the United States do their duties. And the presumption is that at this time they did their duty and insisted upon this man paying this money to the Government, as they believed that for some reason or another he was subject to they believed that for some reason or another he was subject to the draft.

Mr. OTJEN. In reply to the gentleman, I just want to say this: There is absolutely no question that this man was drafted; that he paid this $300 to the board of enrollment; that at the time he was not a citizen of the United States; that he did not declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States until one year after that and that the money has never been refunded.

after that, and that the money has never been refunded.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, while this claim in itself is a very small one and of little moment, yet it tends to open up a large class of claims that may come in here to bother us in the future, and it seems to me that we ought to look the question fully in the face. Two gentlemen in my own district have applied to me to introduce bills for the refund of the commutation money paid by them, on the ground that they were in fact disabled at the time of the draft, and therefore exempt under the law, and they produce affidavits to establish that fact.

Now, it seems to me that some things ought to be regarded as settled, even in claims against the Government. The presumption always is that the officers of the Government, in administering any law, administer it correctly. If they do not, there is an opportunity for appeal; there is an opportunity for a remedy at the time. There was a chance for a remedy in this case and in the cases in which I have been appealed to, by presenting the question to the Secretary of War. Nothing of that kind was done, but now, after thirty-four or thirty-five years have passed, these claims are brought into this House. There are thousands of men throughout the country who were drafted, many of whom have now discovered that they were disabled at the time, and who will claim that they are therefore entitled to have their com-mutation money repaid. They will be found in every district in the United States.

Now, after this law has been administered, and after more than thirty years have elapsed, and no appeal from the action of the administration has been taken, is it not wiser, under such circumstances, to assume that the officers of the Government did their duty and that the matter is settled, rather than to go into the business of dealing with every little claim that may be presented here? The difficulty is not about this particular case, but if we pass favorably upon this, there is not a member of this House who will not be appealed to in the future by gentlemen who will claim that they were drafted under conditions which made them legally exempt on account of disability or some other reason. I simply desire to warn members that they are opening up a Pandora's box of evils by entertaining these cases that ought to be considered as having been settled long ago, and I do not believe that we ought to do it. Unless we are going to fight the war over again and examine every

For this reason it seems to me-and I speak simply from observation of what has taken place in this body during my connection with it—for this reason it seems to me that after a matter has stood as settled for thirty-four years, we had better let it stay settled, especially when there is so much urgent business to which this House ought to devote its attention. Where there is a clear this House ought to devote its attention. Where there is a clear case, and there has been an attempt made from year to year to right a wrong, which has failed, through some disability or for right a wrong, which has failed, through some disability or for some other cause, it may be proper to reopen the case; but if we undertake to pass bills of this kind, we shall certainly make abundant difficulty for ourselves in the future.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine uses the plural and speaks of "these claims."

Mr. DINGLEY. I was speaking not of this particular case, but of claims of this general class.

Mr. MAHON. I want to say in reply that the reason we have had these people for the last thirty years thundering at the doors of Congress with war claims is that this nation, unlike other civilized nations, has not accorded to its people who have suffered from the war the justice they deserve. Why, sir, after the Franco-Prussian war, after France had received that terrible drubbing at the hands of the Fatherland, France, with an exhausted treasury, appropriated $45,000,000 to pay the losses incurred by the victims of the ravages of war, whether their property had been destroyed by the Germans or by the French army itself.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was immediately after the war, when the facts were all fresh and easily established.

Mr. MAHON. I will come to that later. Take the Revolutionary war—and I cite the illustration because the old law, which was laid down by a people who were heathens, has been invoked in the Congress of the United States against these claims.

which was laid down by a people who were heathens, has been invoked in the Congress of the United States against these claimants, to the effect that the Government is not bound under any circumstances to pay a claim for damages caused by war, whether resulting from the action of the troops of the United States or of the enemy—take the Revolutionary war. After that war the English Government paid to the people of the colonies who had remained loyal to the Crown $48,000,000 for property destroyed in the war. Again, the great German Empire after her war paid to her people who had borne more than their fair share of the ravages incident to it an amount sufficient to reimburse them for their losses. I admit, sir, that these things were done not simply because the constitutions or the statutes of those nations required because the constitutions or the statutes of those nations required it to be done, but because those were humane Governments, that recognized their obligations to the people who had sworn allegiance to the national emblems; and you will find that the Governments of those great nations have always carefully compensated the sufferers by war. And, Mr. Chairman, I believe that if the gentlemen who oppose these war claims would read the history of those great European Governments, the doctrine of Grotius, announced three hundred years ago, would not be invoked in this Chamber against the payment of these just claims. In the war of 1812, when the British came up the Potomac River and burned the property of American citizens loval to the Government of of 1812, when the British came up the Potomac River and burned the property of American citizens loyal to the Government of the United States, in more than 300 cases, as I have found by an examination of the records of Congress, compensation was made, and altogether over a million dollars was appropriated to pay the losses of our people in that war of 1812. No court of this Government or any other government has ever decided that when a man who has been loyal to his flag and his country has sacrificed his property for the common good he should bear that burden over and above the ordinary burdens imposed on other men.

Mr. RAY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MAHON. Wait till I get through, and I will answer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, do you know how much this magnificent Government has paid to these unfortunate people who lived along Government has paid to these unfortunate people who lived along the border line, extending 3,200 miles. Gentlemen who live in the Pacific States or on the prairies, unless they were in the Army of the United States during the war, know nothing of the sufferings of the people along that border line where the conflict raged. To the people in those border States who suffered as the people elsethe people in those border States who suffered as the people elsewhere in the country did not suffer this Government has paid the magnificent sum of about $7,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, no argument can be offered in favor of the Government closing its Treasury against these unfortunate people. If there is any merit in any of these bills which come here—and I am not talking about this particular bill—you can not honestly and justly avoid liability for the claim on the ground of lapse of time. Sir, when a claim is urged against a citizen by the Government, he can not plead the statute of limitations against the United States. I have known instances in my own State where the Government has collected money from citizens upon transacthe Government has collected money from citizens upon transactions dating sixty years back. Any dollar of obligation that may have been incurred, even by a man's ancestors, to the Govern-ment of the United States can be enforced against him by law without regard to lapse of time.

We entered into a great conflict in 1861, and after four long and bloody years that great controversy which was submitted to the arbitrament of the sword, whether slavery should exist in this country or not was settled. For four years those two magnificent armies—one representing the North and the other representing the South—fought battles before which the battles of Alexander, of Cæsar, of Philip, and of Napoleon "pale their ineffectual fires." In that conflict those soldiers on both sides showed a bravery and heroism unequaled in the history of the world. And, sir, when we had settled that great conflict with the loss of over a million men and patell amounts of money this Government in 1865 came out of settled that great conflict with the loss of over a million men and untold amounts of money, this Government in 1865 came out of that conflict greater, richer, more magnificent than it had been in 1861. [Applause.] At the close of the war our Treasury was full. We rapidly paid off our national debt; and there was no reason under heaven why this Government should not have liquidated promptly, within a few years after the war, these claims which have been knocking at the doors of Congress for the last thirty years.

Gentlemen may think that I speak too carnestly about this matter. But sir I live in a county which furnished as many man to the

But, sir, I live in a county which furnished as many men to the Union armies and sacrificed as many men on the field of battle as any other county in the State of Pennsylvania. That county has to-day within its confines as many men with armless sleeves and legless trousers as any county in the State. And that county paid all her taxes. In addition to all the other sacrifices and hardships endured by that county, there marched over the territory of that county during those four years 280,000 men. When the question was the salvation of this capital and its great archives, and with it the salvation of the life of the nation—when the Confederate raider was within the confines of the District of Columbia—an order went out, at the instance of President Lincoln, that if necessary the salvation of this capital and this ratio of the confines of the confine of sary for the salvation of this capital and this nation, my city should be laid in ashes and my county sacrificed. We are going to come here some day and ask compensation for what we suffered in that way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat, let these claims be met on their merits. Do not plead the "baby act" by saying that they are thirty years old, and therefore must not be paid. Examine into the thirty years old, and therefore must not be paid. Examine into the merits of these claims. And if this Government has taken money from its citizens unlawfully or has sacrificed their property for the common good, then, in the name of heaven, the fact that thirty years have elapsed should be no answer when claim is made for something in the way of remuneration. The fact that these just claims have been unpaid for thirty years is an argument which should appeal with sledge-hammer force in favor of their payment without further delay. The time has come to pay them. [Applause.]

I say, Mr. Chairman, let this bill be decided upon its merits. If, on fair examination, gentlemen of the House think that this claim ought not to be paid, I have no complaint to make. Settle every claim upon its merits; but do not defeat meritorious bills because, although the claimants have time and again asked for payment, the Government has time and again refused obstinately to pay what it justly owes. [Applause.]

what it justly owes. [Applause.]
Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who reported this bill from the Committee on War Claims informs the ported this bill from the committee on was a six of the House that this claimant has been here urging his claim since House that this claimant has been here urging his claim since 1875; and this statement is made on information derived from the clerk of the committee. There has been no laches here—none whatever. This differs from a case where a man has been adjudged able-bodied by the board. This is a case where the board had no right or jurisdiction to touch the man at all. He was a citizen of Scandinavia, not a citizen of this country. The Government laid its strong hand upon him and took from him by force $300, of which it has had the use since 1862. That is a fair statement of the case. He was then unable to speak our language. He is unable to speak it to-day with anything like a fair under-He is unable to speak it to-day with anything like a fair understanding of it; he can speak it tonly in such a manner as to transact the ordinary business of life. He knew nothing about our institutions. He came from a monarchical country that did not endure much protest from men upon whom it laid its hands.

I am in favor of reimbursing every man who was thus wronged out of his money. There is no good reason why this Government should act as a highway robber, and then at the close of a long period of denied justice plead the statute of limitations. Oh, no. This Government of ours we should all love and respect. But how can you expect a man to love and respect. But which robs him with a strong hand of his money; which takes, as in this instance, $300 from this man and refuses to reimburse him?

Mr. CANNON Will the gentleman allow me a moment on the facts of this case?

facts of this case?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. It seems that this is a bill to pay $300 unlawfully collected from Mr. Pedersen by the board of enrollment to furnish a substitute when he was drafted into the service in the Army, he not being a citizen of the United States. Now, I am not aware of any legislation under which the United States ever sold exemptions in the military service for $300 or any other sum. I am asking the gentleman for the facts.

Was there such a provision of law?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. There was a law passed during the war which permitted a man drafted into the military service of the Government to pay the sum of $300 to some officer provided by the law, which was regarded as equivalent to furnishing a substitute; and in that case he was exempted from the draft.

tute; and in that case he was exempted from the draft.

Mr. CANNON. Is not the gentleman mistaken about that?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. No; I think not.

Mr. CANNON. I would be very glad to know what the law was, if the gentleman can cite it.

Mr. HULICK. Was it not a State law?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Oh, no; it was a Federal law.

Mr. CANNON. I think not.

Mr. HULICK. Let me ask the gentleman whether the law under which a man paid the $300 was not a State law for furnishing the troops of the State to the Government, or was it a United States law applicable to all the States? States law applicable to all the States?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. It was a law of the United States of Mr. HULICK. I do not know of any general law that com-pelled soldiers drafted to pay that sum to secure their exemption. We had in Ohio a law whereby a citizen could furnish a substi-tute, in certain counties and districts, but I do not know of any statute of the United States authorizing the board of enrollment statute of the United States authorizing the board of enrolment to receive $300, or any other sum, as a payment for the exemption of a man drafted into the service. It must have been a State regulation; and if so, the State itself, if it had enacted a law by which this money was taken, should return it to this man, instead of the Government of the United States.

Mr. DOCKERY. They wanted men, and the draft was to se-

Mr. DOCKERY. They wanted men, and the draft was to secure men, not money.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If my colleague will permit me, has he stopped to inquire what right a State would have to take a soldier out of the United States service?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I decline to be interrupted further.

I will answer the gentleman that there is a law on the statute books, which he will find on examination, which provided that when a man was drafted by the authorities of the United States when a man was dratted by the authorities of the United States he could relieve himself from that draft by paying to the board of enrollment, or some other authority—I can not recall precisely what it was—the sum of $300. Why, it is a matter of common knowledge. I supposed that no man doubted it or was ignorant of the fact. It was a law of the United States, and the States had better whatever to do with it. nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. EVANS. Did not the money go into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Undoubtedly.
Mr. EVANS. That is the essential point.
Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is the essential point, as the gentleman from Kentucky suggests.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is very easy to produce the law if it existed. I think my friend is mistaken.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I know that I am not mistaken about it.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. If the gentleman from Iowa will yield to me for a moment—

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. With pleasure.
Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand the act of February 28, 1867, which recites, in its preamble, the legislation providing for the commutation of military service by the payment of $300, the payment of which sum would exempt the person drafted from military service. It also provides that within a certain time, specified in the act, the persons illegally drafted, who were not subject to draft and who paid this sum, might have this money, so paid, refunded to them. It provided general legislation on the subject applicable to all claims which came within its provision up to that time.

By the act of March 1, 1869, which is a general act for the relief of all persons who had been illegally drafted, not being subjects of the United States, or for any other reason not subject to military duty in the armies of the United States, and who had paid the commutation money provided for in the act recited in the preamble of the first law to which I have referred, it was provided that they might have it refunded to them at any time within the space of two years. Here was a general provision, a general remedial act, applying to all persons who had such claims. That being a provision of law covering this case, fixing a time, in the wisdom of the lawmakers, within which this claim ought to have been presented and that time having long present twenty six or twenty. presented, and that time having long passed, twenty-six or twenty-seven years ago, I think it incumbent upon the claimant now not only to show that he was illegally drafted, but to show some reason why, when the remedy was open to him, he did not em-

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That would apply to nearly all claims before this House.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. 'I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask that the Clerk read the law covering the matter.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I decline to yield further. The gentleman has already stated the substance of the act. The same objecman has already stated the substance of the act. The same objection which he makes will apply to almost every claim here. Of course, we understand very well that this man can not now apply to the Secretary of War and get back his commutation money. Nobody claims any such thing as that.

Mr. RAY. No; but under the law which the Clerk now has he had years in which to make his application and in which to have the money refunded.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Very well.

Mr. RAY. Why did he not do it?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Very well.
Mr. RAY. Why did he not do it?
Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Because he was ignorant of als rights because he was a foreigner and did not understand our language and our institutions, and did not know enough—was not able to make a showing or to prepare an application to get his money back at that time. He probably knew nothing of this law.
Mr. RAY. Now will the gentleman—
Mr. UPDEGRAFF. No. I decline to yield further.
Mr. RAY. Let me ask you one question as a lawyer. Do you

Mr. RAY. Let me ask you one question as a lawyer. Do you want to stand up in this House and assert that you would open the Treasury to the hand of every man who ever had a claim against the Government, who was given years in which to assert that claim, and who had let the time go by and lost the benefits of that law, who then came in, years afterwards, to ask that the money be paid him, because he was ignorant at the time when he should have presented the claim? Do you say you want to do that?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I would do what was right under all circumstances, whatever they were. [Applause.] If I had wronged a man fifty years ago, and it was made apparent, I would be a man fifty years ago, and it was made apparent, I would be less than a man if I did not restore to him his rights. And that applies to a government as well as an individual. [Applause.] The Government owes the same duty to this man as though it were the case of one individual who had wronged another. The Government holds this $300 to-day by its strong hand, just as a robber holds the money of his victim, and it holds it by no other authority under God's heaven. The Government has the money. It had no right to take it. It had no jurisdiction to touch this man and compel him, by threats, to come up and pay this $300. He now asks the Government of his adopted country to remove this stain upon itself by restoring to him the $300 which it wrongfully obtained from him so many years ago.

fully obtained from him so many years ago.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope we may have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. UPDEGRAFF) there were—ayes

54, noes 59.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. RAY and Mr. UPDEGRAFF.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65,

noes 55.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

And then, on motion of Mr. Mahon, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Lacey, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry private bills and had directed him to report back without amendment and with the recommendation that they do pass the bills H. R. 129, 3294, and 1524; that the committee had also had under consideration the bills H. R. 1353 and 4310, and had directed him to report back the same with amendments and with the recomto report back the same with amendments and with the recom-mendation that as amended the same do pass. Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the previous question be considered

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

THOMAS B. REED.

The first business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 129) for the relief of Thomas B. Reed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House will be in recess until 8 o'clock this evening, when the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HOPKINS, will take the chair.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., Mr. HOPKINS in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the second clause of Rule XXVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of poittical disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

JESSE M'MILLAN.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have corrected a mistake that occurred in a bill which was passed at the last session. It was unanimously passed by the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9592) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Jesse McMillan," received by the President May 27, 1896.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act granting a pension to Jesse McMillan," received by the President May 27, 1896, be amended by striking out the word "Infantry" and inserting the word "Cavalry" therein, and that the pension provided for in said act be allowed and paid said Jesse McMillan from the date said act first became a law.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as

In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words "date said act first became a law" and insert "8th day of June, 1896."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PICKLER. What is this? Is it just to correct a mistake in the character of the service?

Mr. TERRY. The bill became law, but there was a mistake in the character of the regiment.

Mr. PICKLER. I will not object to that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TERRY. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TERRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the special rule.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes none.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. LACEY in the chair.

FANNY MOALE GIBBON.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a favor, which I believe the House will take great pleasure in granting when I state the reasons for it, and that is to consider now the pension bill, S. 2008, granting a pension to Fanny Moale Gibbon. She is the widow of the late Maj. Gen. John Gibbon, whose service in the war was that of one of our ablest and most conspicuous officers. At the battle of Gettysburg he was placed in command of an army corps during the engagement. I ask unanimous consent of the committee to have this bill taken up out of its order. This lady is an invalid, nearly blind: has a daughter in poor health, and two grandchildren without father or mother—the children of a deceased daughter, and of a distinguished officer of the Army, also dead. They are doubly orphans and have a double claim upon the Government. This lady has not the means wherewith to properly live, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take up out of its order the bill S. 2008. Is there objection?

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, I am not getting up to object; but the first bill on the Calendar, as I understand it, is a bill that I have charge of, and I do not desire to lose my place. With the understanding that I do not, I make no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2008) granting a pension to Fanny Moale Gibbon.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fanny Moale Gibbon, widow of Maj. Gen. John Gibbon, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, if it is desired to know more definitely the services of Major-General Gibbon, as there are three pages in this report, I will state those services to the committee, but I apprehend it is not necessary. I have stated the simple facts, and I hope that will be entirely satisfactory to the committee, and that it will consent to the passage of the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose the pension of this widow, but to move an amendment. I move that the words "one hundred" be stricken out and the words "seventyfive" inserted

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I do think if my friend from South Carolina, could he know the circumstances connected with this case, the helpless condition of this aged lady, of her invalid daughter and two young grandchildren, and would recall for a moment the splendid, magnificent service of that distinguished man, he would gladly withdraw his amendment. I appeal most earnestly to the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw his amendment. Mr. TALBERT. I simply leave the matter to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, to strike out
"one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."

"one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."

Mr. PICKLER. Who offers that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Talbert].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. McClellan. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 22.

Mr. Talbert Mr. Chairman it seems that there is some

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, it seems that there is some mistake about the count, and I ask for another rising vote on this question. I think if the House properly understands it, it will not pass this bill with a pension of $100. It does seem to me that $75 is a very liberal pension. We attempted last session to establish something like uniformity in the pensions of officers' widows.

something like uniformity in the pensions of officers' widows.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman is not satisfied with the count, he can ask for tellers.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for tellers.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Not a sufficient number rising in support of the demand for tellers, tellers are refused, and the amendment

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R.

1490, which the Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. NEILL. I rise to ask for the present consideration of House bill 1061, Calendar number 511, which came over from last Friday night on account of my unavoidable absence at that time, and which I understood would come up first this evening for consideration

The CHAIRMAN. It appears that that bill was passed over without prejudice on account of the absence of the gentleman from Arkansas, the question of order being reserved as to whether the bill is one that is properly subject to consideration at a Friday night session. The Chair supposes that that bill would properly come up first, and the Clerk will report it.

GRAY'S BATTALION OF ARKANSAS VOLUNTEERS.

The bill (H. R. 1061) granting pensions to Gray's Battalion of Arkansas Volunteers was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the names of all of the honorably discharged surviving officers and enlisted men of Gray's Battalion of Arkansas Volunteers, raised under the act of Congress of May 13, 1848, for service during the war with Mexico; and the names of surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men, subject to the limitations and regulations of the pension laws of the United States for pensioning the survivors of the war with Mexico.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise a point of order against the consideration of that bill at a Friday night session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from

New York

Mr. RAY. I did not hear the bill very distinctly as it was read, but from what I did hear it appears to be a general bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a bill applying to one regiment or battalion

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is in order under the rule which governs our action at these Friday night sessions. Mr. NEILL. That is the precise question that is to be deter-

Well, I make the point of order that this bill being general bill, it is not in order at a Friday evening session.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to hear from the gentleman if he has any reasons to give or authorities to cite.

Mr. RAY. I am not prepared with any authorities at this time; but it seems to me that the bill is not in order, according to the rule under which we are acting.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Chair if it is not the duty of gentlemen objecting to a bill to present their objections

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to this bill Mr. Pickler. Mr. Charman, I have no objection to this bill if it is in order, but if, as the Chair says, it includes a whole regiment, and if it can be considered at a Friday night session, then we might take up in succession every regiment or organization in the Army and pension them all wholesale. If you can reach one regiment in this way, you can certainly reach all other regiments, and thus include the whole Army.

A MEMBER. Let us have a ruling.

Mr. NEILL. I do not want any ruling, Mr. Chairman, until I am heard on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gen-am heard on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to a ruling which was made on the 22d of May last as to this same bill. The bill was before the committee at that time, and the same point of order was made against it—

Mr. NEILL (interposing). Mr. Chairman, that was right at the adjournment of a night session, when it was utterly impossible for anybody to be heard, and I think that, in common fairness, it would be rather hard to hold me to that as a ruling. There was no time whatever for any argument to be heard on that occasion, but I am prepared now, I undertake to say, with authorities, with abundant precedents, with a decision of the Speaker of this House, to show that my bill is in order in its present place. I do not consider that that action last spring was a ruling. As I have already said, it was right in the closing minutes of the evening session, and there was no opportunity for a hearing. Now, if I can be heard upon the question of order, I desire to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, this bill, I undertake to say, is in all essential parts a private bill. It has been so adjudicated and decided by the Speaker of this House. By his authority it was placed upon the Private Calendar. I did not put it there. I had nothing to do with it. It was done by the judicial action of the Speaker of this House. The bill went to the Private Calendar and has remained there ever since. But, Mr. Chairman, no objection is made to this bill, nor has any objection ever been made. Gen.

Speaker of this House. The bill went to the Private Calendar and has remained there ever since. But, Mr. Chairman, no objection is made to this bill, nor has any objection ever been made. Gentlemen have simply "called time" on me on one occasion, and that right in the closing moments of a night session, on the ground that this was a private bill. Now, I will undertake to show by precedents, by a decision of the present Speaker of this House made in the Fifty-first Congress on a bill entirely analogous to this, that this is not a public bill. In that case the gentleman in charge of the bill was trying, as I am now, to get consideration for his bill, and he supposed that it was a public bill; but the Speaker ruled that it was a private bill, and on that ground denied it consideration. During the Fifty-first Congress a bill was passed to pension Powell's Battalion of Missouri Volunteers. On page 1418 of volume 26 of the Statutes at Large there is found this enactment, ume 26 of the Statutes at Large there is found this enactment, chapter 568:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the names of all of the honorably discharged surviving officers and enlisted men of Powell's Battalion of Missouri Mounted Volunteers, raised under the act of Congress of May 18, 1846, for service during the war with Mexico; and the names of the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men, subject to the limitations and regulations of the pension laws of the United States for pensioning the survivors of the war with Mexico.

Approved March 3, 1891.

This is printed among the private acts of that session, not among the public acts.

But, Mr. Chairman, the bill for pensioning Powell's Battalion has a history. It was introduced in the Senate by Mr. Manderson, Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. PICKLER. I trust the gentleman from Arkansas will finish his argument as soon as possible.

Mr. NEILL. I will proceed whenever the Chair appears to be listening.

Mr. PICKLER. This bill has been ruled out of order two or three different times.

Mr. NEILL. Whenever the Chair is willing for me to go on, I will proceed. I paused because the Chair seemed to be occupied. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was trying to listen to the gentleman and at the same time endeavoring to examine some authorities on the question.

Mr. NEILL. Well, I have the authorities here. I ask the Chair to indulge me a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the attention of the committee a moment. The Chair finds that on the 22d of last May this identical bill was brought before the committee. At that time the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] was in the Chair. A point of order was made upon the bill by the gentleman from

New York [Mr. PAYNE], and the point of order was sustained.

Now, the Chair is inclined to think that if this question had not been already adjudicated this should be held to be a private bill—

Mr. NEILL. Right on that point, a word.

The CHAIRMAN. That it should be held to be a private bill because it applies to a specific battalion or regiment—not to a class, but to the individuals in a certain military organization.

While inclined to take a different view from the former ruling. the present occupant of the Chair feels bound by that ruling

Mr. TERRY. Right on that point, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this House at the session of last Friday night decided by unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. NEILL] should be heard upon this question.

Mr. NEILL. That is in the RECORD.

Mr. TERRY. I call the attention of the Chair to what took place last Friday night.

Mr. PICKLER. That is admitted, of course.

Mr. TERRY. Well, then, we are not bound by that former ruling, because it was decided on last Friday night by the House that my colleague should be heard on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. That he should be heard upon the question whether this is a private bill; but the Chair does not think that that changes the position of the matter.

Mr. PICKLER. I suggest that, if the intimation of the Chair should be followed upon this question, we might go a little further and regard as a private bill one applying to a whole army course.

should be followed upon this question, we might go a little further and regard as a private bill one applying to a whole army corps. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, being inclined to take a view different from the former ruling, will take the sense of the committee upon the question—will submit the question to the decision of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NEILL. Will the Chair hear me a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to take the sense of the Committee of the Whole as to whether this point of order should be sustained.

Mr. NEILL. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that from the ruling made in May last there was no opportunity to appeal or argument, as that ruling was made in the very last moments of the sitting of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the reason why the Chair thinks opportunity should now be given to the Committee of the Whole

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield to me for a moment?

me for a moment?

Mr. NEILL. I will.

Mr. TALBERT. Only one suggestion. It may be that the House and the Chair are under a misapprehension. As I understand the object of the bill, it is not to pension at once a whole brigade or any other military organization—nothing of the sort. The object, as I understand, is that this organization of Arkansas volunteers who fought, I believe, in the Mexican war be made pensionable, so that they may come in and apply under the regular sionable, so that they may come in and apply under the regular pension laws and receive pensions under those laws if they sus-tain their applications. The case is analogous to the case of a body of Missouri State troops who, I believe, in the session before

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take the sense of the Committee of the Whole upon this question. In view of the fact that the former ruling on this subject was made just at the adjournment, with no opportunity to consider the question deliberately or have it decided by the Committee of the Whole, the present occupant of the chair, being inclined to hold that the bill is in order, will take the sense of the committee upon it.

Mr. GARDNER. Would it be in order for me to make a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. I submit that this bill, being of a peculiar character, fairly illustrates the distinction which has heretofore been recognized by the authorities, but which it is sometimes difficult to define—between a private bill and a special bill. I think if there were time to examine the authorities, there would be no question that this is a special bill, and no question about its being outside of the class known as private bills.

Mr. NEILL. I will undertake to produce the ruling of the present Speaker of this House in a case "on all fours" with this, holding that a bill of this nature is a private bill. If I do not succeed in doing that, I will withdraw the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be very glad to hear the captions are the results of the continuous successions.

gentleman's authorities.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope that if the Chair is going to submit this question to the Committee of the Whole, the committee will underquestion to the Committee of the Whole, the committee will understand what it is proceeding to do, and will decide the question intelligently. Nobody would be more pleased to accommodate the gentleman from Arkansas than I would. I know he has been diligent and persistent with this bill, trying to get it before the House, and I wish he could have it considered. But it is wholly out of order here, and it would be contrary to our rule to consider it tonight. A private bill is a bill for a specific object for a single individual, and not for a number of individuals. If you can pension a battalion, you can pension a regiment, and, on the same principle, you can pension an entire army corps.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PICKLER. Certainly.
Mr. TERRY. Would it not be competent to pass a bill—
Mr. NEILL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota has at

Mr. NEILL.

Mr. NEILL. I never yielded it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota has yielded to the gentleman from Arkansas for a question.

Mr. TERRY. Would it not be competent, for instance, by one single bill to remove the charge of desertion standing against three

Mr. PICKLER. That would be a general bill.
Mr. TERRY. Would it not be a private bill?
Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; I think not.
Mr. TERRY. Well, it has been so understood by the House.
Mr. PICKLER. Why, Mr. Chairman, if this proposition were admissible here to-night, then, as a parliamentary principle, all that we would have to do in the Committee on Invalid Pensions that we would have to do in the Committee on Invalid Pensions would be to combine all of the eight or nine hundred bills in one single bill and bring them in and pass them all at one time. If that could possibly be held to be within the scope of the rule, it would save us an immense amount of trouble, I will admit. It would enable us to get them before the House and get through with the work in a year short time. But that is not and navanhand here the work in a very short time. But that is not and never has been the rule. That is not what is meant by a private pension bill. This is a general bill, and the statement of the gentleman from

This is a general bill, and the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Talbert] makes it clear that it is. We have bill after bill pending here on the Calendar to pension certain militia regiments from certain States; and nobody has ever dreamed of getting them up as private bills, for consideration at these night sessions. Why, if you name a battalion in this pension bill, I can name my regiment, that from first to last had about 2,000 men in it. Now, allow us to bring in a bill for the pensioning of an entire regiment, if you are going to admit this. There is no reason why it should not be done, nor is there any reason why, if that principle is admitted, we could not pension a brigade or an army corps. or an army corps.

This is getting clear away from the object and intent of the rule. The private bill belongs to and affects only the single individual. It can not be a general bill in any particular. There is a wide distinction between them.

Mr. TALBERT. Let me ask the gentleman if this is not a private bill in its ultimate analysis?

Mr. HARDY. I ask that the rule be read under which we pass bills on Friday night. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota has the

Mr. TALBERT. I wish the gentleman to yield to me only to make a suggestion or to ask this question: While this may be a general bill, is it not true that in its last analysis it becomes a private bill when applied to the private individuals who are the beneficiaries of it? Mr. PICKLER. That might be said of any general pension law that could be named, because eventually it applies to the individuals who are the beneficiaries of the law.

Mr. TALBERT. It seems to me that while this is a general bill, I repeat in the last analysis it comes down to private individuals and becomes a private bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that I desire the committee to vote intelligently on this question. If you permit this bill to come before the committee to-night, nobody can tell what bill to come before the committee to-night, nobody can tell what will be the result. What will it cost; how many individuals does it affect; what does it mean; how many were in that battalion, and what do you know of the bill? Why, it would be a most dangerous precedent. It is a general bill and should be on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, where we have similar bills for the benefit of the militia of Missouri and Tennessee. They are on the general Calendar, where they belong, and simply because this is one battalion it does not make it any the less a general bill than if it was for an army corps.

I do not think, therefore, that it would be safe for the House to adopt this precedent. And besides, this bill was before the House to adopt this precedent. And besides, this bill was before the House to py the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], then in the chair. I have no object in keeping the bill out but to avoid irregularity in our proceedings; and, I repeat, it will not do to consider this and act upon it as a private bill.

Mr. RAY. Will the gentleman from South Dakota allow me a moment?

Mr. PICKLER. Certainly.
Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman from South Dakota, I wish to say that if the Chair has authorities decisive of the question I will not make a single sug authorities decisive of the question I will not make a single suggestion. But in view of the circumstances I will suggest that it is a matter of construction entirely whether the word "private" is used in the rule as meaning "personal" or simply in contradistinction to the term "public."

The rule under which we act seems to me to be open to a good deal of construction and contention; and my belief is that the term "private pension bills." as used in the rule, means "personal pensions bills." I am not prepared to say, of course, that that is the proper construction of the language of the rule, but it seems to me that the force and effect of the language is precisely the same as if the word "personal" had been used in place of "private." The language of the Constitution, Manual, and Digest, page 483, sustains this view. It is there said: "A pension bill for the relief of a soldier's widow is a private bill, but a bill granting a pension to such persons as a class instead of as individuals is a public bill."

Mr. PICKLER. That has always been the practice, because in the consideration of these bills and in their preparation one name only appears in the bill, and none other. It has always been, as the gentleman states, considered as a personal bill.

the gentleman states, considered as a personal bill.

Mr. RAY. And the question is, Does the word "private" refer to private individuals, or is it used in contradistinction to the word "public?" It seems to me it is quite a question before you have finished it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is as to whether the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] shall be sustained.

Mr. PICKLER. This bill is for a battalion. If it is a private bill, would it be in order, for instance, to amend by moving that the Army of the Tennessee be included? Would not that be a germane amendment, if this is a proper bill?

The CHAIRMAN. A private bill could not thus be amended.

A private bill could not be amended by adding the name of one person to that of another person, much less an army.

Mr. PICKLER. There would certainly be no inconsistency in attaching a brigade to a bill for the relief of a battalion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to take the sense of the ommittee on this.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, I have never yielded the floor. I thought I had the right to make an argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman stated that he wished to present an authority from the Speaker.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, I was ready when the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Pickler] sprang upon the floor like a holt of lightning.

bolt of lightning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have the Clerk read a bill which I have sent to the desk, the Powell Battalion bill, passed March 1, 1891.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chapter 568. An act granting pensions to Powell's Battalion of Missouri Mounted Volunteers.

Mounted Volunteers.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the names of all of the honorably discharged surviving officers and enlisted men of Powell's Battalion of Missouri Mounted Volunteers, raised under the act of Congress of May 13, 1846, for service during the war with Mexico, and the names of the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men, subject to the limitations and regulations of the pension laws of the United States for pensioning the survivors of the war with Mexico.

Approved, March 3, 1891.

Approved, March 3, 1891.

Mr. NEILL. Now, Mr. Chairman, the history of that bill is this: It was introduced into the Senate by Senator Manderson; it passed the Senate and came over to the House in July, 1890; it was referred to the House committee on July 29, 1890; it was reported by Mr. Norton and put upon the Calendar as a private bill. I have the Calendar before me from the file clerk's office, which the Chairman or any other gentleman can inspect. It is a private bill. On December 4, 1890, Mr. Norton, of Missouri, who had reported the bill in this House, undertook to call it up. Will this House remember who was Speaker in December, 1890? It was Thomas B. Reed, the same Thomas B. Reed who is to-day Speaker. The Record shows that he was in the chair. I read Speaker. The RECORD shows that he was in the chair. I read from the RECORD:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference

Mr. WILLIAMS of Child and Speaker.

The SPEAKER. It is not usual to interrupt the morning hour with a conference report. The Committee on Invalid Pensions having no other bill, the call rests with the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NORTON (from the Committee on Pensions). Mr. Speaker, I present for consideration the bill (S. 1826) granting pensions to Powell's Battalion of Missouri Mounted Volunteers.

The bill was read.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is a private bill.

The bill was not on the House Calendar, Mr. Chairman, because it was upon the Private Calendar, which I have here before me, and it was placed there by the order of Thomas B. Reed, Speaker of the Fifty-first Congress

Now, Mr. Chairman, is any more authority needed than that? I will put Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, and Governor Dingley against the distinguished parliamentarian from South Dakota, and the gentleman from New York also. I am not surprised at the exhibition to-night. This little bill embodies relief— Mr. PICKLER. Will not yield.

Mr. PICKLER. This was not on a Friday night. It was not passed on Friday night at all.

Mr. NEILL. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. NEILL. This little bill, Mr. Chairman, carries relief to less than thirty people. These men in 1846 and 1847 were citizens of the State of Arkansas. Those who are affected by the bill are of the State of Arkansas. Those who are affected by the bill are now all old men and widows, people standing with one foot in the grave and the other hard by. In 1846 they volunteered and signed a muster roll which pledged them to go to Mexico. They were not sent there, because the authorities concluded to send them up into the Indian Territory. They served there from six to eight months, the five companies of this little battalion. When the Mexican war act was passed in June, 1887, and when that grand soldier, Gen. John C. Black, of Illinois, was administering the Pension Office, he took a liberal view of that law and placed these people upon the pension rolls under the Mexican war act as fast as they made their proofs. But with the advent of the Harrison Administration the then Commissioner of Pensions took a different view of the law and refused to place any more of them of the Mexican war act.

When I came to Congress, in July, 1893, I came with a petition or two in my pocket from men who had been suspended from the rolls, men who were members of this little Gray's Battalion. went to see Commissioner Lochren, who told me the history of the matter, which I have here and which is embodied in the report. He said that he had found the ruling of his predecessor upon the record, and that he was not inclined to reverse it and to hold that a different view of the law and refused to place any more of them upon the roll, holding that they did not come within the purview the could place these men and their widows upon the pension rolls under the Mexican war act.

Immediately after that I introduced this special bill for their relief, and I have pressed it, Mr. Chairman, continuously, in season and out of season—no; not out of season, because it was never out of season; but all the time that was proper and legitimate I have tried to get relief for these few people left this side of the grave. I am not surprised, Mr. Chairman, at the gentleman from South Dakota to-night. It was the gentleman from South Dakota in May last, when I called up this bill, who said it was not in order, because it was a general bill in the very closing seconds of that night session. It was the gentleman from South Dakota last Friday night, when I was stretched upon a bed of sickness and unable to leave my room, who again asserted that this was a general bill, and said it was not admissible.

Mr. Chairman, I undertake to say that there is not a lawver in relief, and I have pressed it, Mr. Chairman, continuously, in seaeral bill, and said it was not admissible.

Mr. Chairman, I undertake to say that there is not a lawyer in the United States who has a reputation above that of a police court or a justice's court who would undertake to say that the ruling of Speaker Reed in 1891 on Powell's Battalion does not cover this completely. At that time Mr. Norton, of Missouri, was trying to get that battalion of gallant Southerners, who did not come in under the Mexican war act, admitted to the pension rolls. He was trying to call it up as if it were a public bill. Mr. DINGLEY said, "That is a private bill," and Mr. Speaker Reed said it was "a private bill. It is not upon the House Calendar."

Why, Mr. Chairman, we do not need such citations even. We do not need to go back to the abstruse rules of common law as to what is a private law and a public law. That has long since fallen what is a private law and a public law. That has long since fallen into disuse. Private laws are now printed with the general laws, and all that is necessary is an exhibition of the law printed by authority to prove it. But this bill is in all senses a private bill, and the only reason I can see for the animus displayed against its consideration is that the benefits of this law would accrue to a few old men and women far down in the Southland.

Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to Mr. RAY.

Mr. NEILL. I will yield to an inquiry.

Mr. NEILL. I yield, then.
Mr. RAY. I will not make a speech. I will simply read to you, and I desire to call the attention of the Chair [cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] to the same authority. If you would keep quiet you would know more and behave better. I want to call attention to the Constitution and Manual—

Mr. NEILL. I yielded only for an inquiry. Mr. RAY. I was just going to read from the Constitution, Manual, and Digest, page 483:

The term private bill shall be construed to mean all bills for the relief of private parties, bills granting pensions, and bills removing political disabilities. (28 Stat. L., page 601.)

Mr. NEILL. Does the gentleman know where that comes from? Mr. RAY. Let me read further.
Mr. NEILL. That comes from the printing bill, which I have sent for.

Mr. RAY (reading):

The line of distinction between public and private bills is so difficult to be defined in many cases that it must rest on the opinion of the Speaker and the details of the bill. It has been the practice in Parliament, and also in Congress, to consider as private such as are "for the interest of individuals, public companies, or corporations, a parish, city, or county, or other locality." To be a private bill it must not be general in its enactments, but for the particular interest or benefit of a person or persons. A pension bill for the relief of a soldier's widow is a private bill, but a bill granting pension to such persons as a class, instead of as individuals, is a public bill.

That is just what this bill is—to grant pensions to survivors of this regiment as a class; and if this is good authority, then that

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield to me for a moment? I am a member of the committee.

Mr. NEILL. Certainly. I yield for a question; not for a speech. Mr. HARDY. Well, just a moment. I am a member of the committee that reported the bill, and I can explain a point or two. Mr. NEILL. Very well.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, it is delightfully refreshing at such a late hour in the life of this Congress to see the friendly interest manifested by the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the Honse in favor of pension legislation. House in favor of pension legislation. I regret very much that the gentlemen on that side were not so favorable to pension legislation at the first session of this Congress as they are now. Even so distinguished an objector to pension legislation as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Erdman] is as dumb as one of President Cleveland's dead ducks in the marshes of South Carolina on the cleveland's dead ducks in the marshes of South Carolina on the merits of this bill. [Great laughter.]

If this bill were one to place on the pension roll the Indiana State Militia, or the Indiana Home Guards, I doubt if there would be so much interest manifested in its favor on the other side of the House. However, I am glad to see that gentlemen over there have become friends of the soldiers at last; and for the remainder of this session, if we pass this bill to-night, I trust that we shall have no more calls for a querym of the committee and we shall have no more calls for a quorum of the committee, and no more objections made to the passing of pension bills on Friday

no more objections made to the passing of pension bills on Friday nights. [Applause.]

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York in reading this authority from the Digest and Manual to show the meaning of the term "private bill" forgot to state that it is simply an extract from the printing bill which became a law in January, 1895. The language is: "The term private bill shall be construed to mean all bills for the relief of private parties, bills granting pensions, and bills to remove political disabilities." That language is used simply for the purpose of describing bills with a view to determining the number of them that shall be printed.

Now Mr Chairman, judged by the very rule laid down here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, judged by the very rule laid down here, this bill is a private bill, because it was printed as a private bill and only as a private bill. That is the fact, and I rest my case upon that fact, upon the decision of the officers of this House that this is a private bill, manifested by printing only the number of copies that the law authorizes to be printed of a private bill, and, for the I rest it was the decision of Scheler Brun in the Biffred and, copies that the law authorizes to be printed of a private bill, and, further, I rest it upon the decision of Speaker Reed in the Fifty-first Congress in the analogous case which I have cited. The language read from the Digest by the gentleman from New York is, I repeat, simply a quotation from the printing bill, and is there used for the purpose of determining how many copies of each kind of bill shall be printed, and I say again that, judged by that rule as interpreted by the officers of this House, this is a private bill, because the number of copies of it printed was the number which is prescribed by the law for private bills.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary to detain the committee longer in the consideration of this question. I confess to a great deal of interest in this bill, because it is a matter that has occupied more of my attention than almost any other, on ac-has occupied more of my attention than almost any other, on account of the injustice that has been done to a few old people in this land, old soldiers and their widows, men who volunteered in 1847 and followed the flag of their country even to the halls of the Montezumas, braving death and disease, but who have been unable to get in under the Mexican war pension act. It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that, judged in the light of common sense, judged by judicial reason, judged by the authority of Speaker Reed in the luminous statement which I have cited, there can be no question that this is a private bill. Gentlemen say that upon that ground we might pass bills here tacking on brigades and divisions, but that is the merest nonsense. In legislating upon these matters we are governed by the rules of common sense, and, as I have said, the old rules of the common law as to what would be a published by the rules of the common law as to what would be a published by the rules of the common law as to what would be a published by the rules of the common law as to what would be a published by the rules of the common law as to what would be a published by the rules of the common law as to what would be a published by the rules of the common law as to what would be a published by the rules of the common law as the rules of the common law as the rules of the common law as the rules of the rules lic bill and what would be a private bill are abrogated.

lic bill and what would be a private bill are abrogated.

This bill has been treated at every step in this House as a private bill, by the Speaker, by the Clerk, by those having authority to deal with it; but when the time comes for its consideration then we have invoked here the specter of a "public bill," right in the face of the decision of the Speaker of this House, rendered in 1890, only six years ago, that a bill similar to this was a private bill. Mr. Norton, in charge of that bill at that time, was ruled out because it was held to be a private bill, and yet the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Pickler] and his allies here now would rule out these feeble old men and women from the benefit of the pension law because they say that this is a public bill! Mr. Chairman, I have done.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to one or two considerations connected with this bill. Some members here, talking with me about it, have seemed to fear that if we passed the bill it would be a great addition to the pension roll. As to that, I want to call attention to some facts as set forth in the report. I read from the report:

The following correspondence shows the course pursued by the Pension Bureau with reference to these claimants, and also indicates that the number of persons likely to be benefited by the passage of the act is very small, as most of the survivors and widows are already pensioned under former rulings of the Department:

House of Representatives, United States, Washington, D. C., August 1, 1894.

Washington, D. C., August 1, 1894.

Dear Sir: I was some months since informed by you that under General Black's construction of the act of Congress of January 29, 1889, providing for pensioning soldiers of the Mexican war, some of the members of Lieutenant-Colonel Gray's Battalion of Arkansas Volunteers, 1846 and 1847, were on the pension list, but that under your construction of the act these soldiers are not within its provisions.

I have an amendment to offer to H. R. 7414, now pending, to include these soldiers and their widows.

Will you kindly furnish me (if it can be done) by Friday, 3 p. m., a statement showing number of these men now on pension roll and number of rejected applications on file.

Very respectfully,

Hon. WILLIAM LOCHREN, Commissioner of Pensions.

ROBERT NEILL.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS, Washington, D. C., August 2, 1894.

Sir: In compliance with the request contained in your communication of yesterday, I have the honor to advise you that I have caused a careful examination of the Mexican war pension records (act of January 29, 1887) to be made, and it appears that 58 claims have been filed under this act by soldiers who alleged service in Gray's Battalion, Arkansas Volunteers. Of this number 52 claims have been admitted and 6 rejected. Twenty-five claims have been filed by the widows of such soldiers, and of this number 10 have been admitted, 13 rejected, and there are 2 claims now pending.

Hon. Robert Neill,

House of Representatives.

There is a precedent for the proposed legislation in the act of Congress granting pensions to Powell's Battalion of Missouri Volunteers (Mexican war), approved March 3, 1891.

In 1885, the Commissioner of Pensions, Commissioner Black, I believe, decided that these men were not entitled to the benefit of the Mexican war pension act because they had not actually got into Mexico. They went up into the Indian Territory, and then, instead of letting them go on to Mexico, the Government authorities put them to garrison the fort there and sent the regulars who were at the fort on to Mexico to take part in achieving those great were at the fort on to Mexico to take part in achieving those great victories which added luster to the arms of this Government in that memorable war. There is only a little handful of these veterans left, and whether this bill is subject to a technical objection or not, as we have the matter up here now, why not pass the bill and let these old fellows get the benefit of the pension law for the short time remaining to them. They are dying off every day. Let us cut the knot of technicality and do justice to these old soldiers. This bill has been submitted to the committee. Now let us sustain what the Chair indicates would be his ruling and pass this bill. what the Chair indicates would be his ruling and pass this bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, the previous gentleman from Arkansas—very "previous" often in this House—becomes jocular, and compares my parliamentary knowledge with that of the Speaker of the House and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DING-LEY]. I want to say that in my opinion it would make REED and DINGLEY, a hundred years hence, turn over in their graves, if they could hear such propositions as the gentleman claims that they have held in regard to bills of this nature.

Now, this bill in regard to Powell's Battalion, which is cited as a precedent here, was not up at a Friday night meeting at all; it was up on Tuesday, February 24, 1891. It came up by unanimous consent. Let me read from the RECORD of the proceedings at that time

Several Members. Let us vote.

Mr. PICKLER. No; I am not going to be misrepresented; I do not wish the Committee of the Whole to vote without a correction being made of the misrepresentations of the gentleman from Arkansas—because they are clear misrepresentations. I read from page 3213, volume 118, of the Congressional Record:

POWELL'S BATTALION MISSOURI VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. Norton. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and that it be now put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows.

Then the bill is given. I read further:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. Burrows. I think we should have some explanation of this measure.

The proposition appears to be to put a whole battalion on the pension roll.

Then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] and other entlemen engaged in the debate, until we find on page 3214 the

Mr. Dockery. I hope there will be no objection to the bill. The Speaker. Is there objection?

Mr. Speaker REED did not think the bill had any right to consideration under the rules. He asks, "Is there any objection?"

Mr. Joseph D. Taylob. I demand the regular order. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]
The Speaker. The regular order is demanded.
Mr. McKinley. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to submit the report which I send to the desk.

I may say, parenthetically, that Mr. McKinley will submit another report down here pretty soon.

report down here pretty soon.

The Speaker. The gentleman from Ohio presents a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. Joseph D. Taylor. While I do not know anything personally about the merits of the bill of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Norton], I am assured it is all right; and I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. McKinley. As my colleague [Mr. Joseph D. Taylor] withdraws the demand for the regular order, I will not at this moment ask action on the report which I have sent to the desk.

The Speaker. The gentleman withdraws the demand for the regular order. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill presented by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Norton]? The Chair hears none.

The House accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

That is the way the bill with reference to Powell's Battalion was passed. It was passed by unanimous consent on a Tuesday, in the daytime—not at a Friday night session at all; and the Speaker was evidently holding all the way along that the bill was out of order, because he continued to put the query to the House as to whether there was objection. It was by unanimous consent, and in no other way, that the bill came up for consideration.

In reply to what the gentleman has said about the personal deserts of the people embraced in this bill, I have not a word to say. I think my record in regard to the treatment of all men and

I think my record in regard to the treatment of old men and old women coming here for pensions will compare favorably with the record of any gentleman on the other side of the House. The point I make is that this bill is out of order, and, as chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I do not think I can afford to sit here and submit to such a measure being taken up as a private bill without objection on my part. I have no objection to raise in regard to any equities that there may be in favor of the bill. The simple point is whether the bill is in order or out of order.

Whenever this bill has been presented here before (for I think I

Whenever this bill has been presented here before (for I think I remember its having come up at three or four different times) it has always been treated as a joke. To night it seems to be presented as a serious matter. I think the bill is out of order, and I hope such will be the ruling of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, it is well before we vote that we should understand the facts not only as to this bill, but as to the precedents which have been cited. There is no controversy about the correctness of the record read by the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. Pickler, and none about the record read by my colleague, General Neill. Therecord in each case was made up on two different occasions, though on the same bill. On one occasion the bill was presented during the morning hour, when only bills on the House Calendar—public bills—could be considered. This bill being a private bill, and being on the Calendar as a private bill, the point was made by the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. Dingley] that it could not be considered during that hour. The Speaker sustained the point; holding that it was not only a private bill, but was on the Private Calendar. On the other oc-casion referred to by my friend from South Dakota the bill was passed by unanimous consent, and the Calendar it was on was immaterial. There can be no question about this.

Now, I trust that this Committee of the Whole, which is called upon through the fairness of the Chairman to settle this quesapon through the fairness of the Chairman to settle this question, should do so with a distinct understanding of the whole record. When this bill was reported during the last session—in the early part of this Congress—it was assigned by the Speaker under the rules to the Private Calendar. There it remained until it was reached on the Calendar—reached at a time when, to my personal knowledge, we were within a very few minutes of half past 10 o'clock, and when the question was decided without debate and without discussion although gentlemen were on the floor ready without discussion, although gentlemen were on the floor ready to debate it and to present the precedents which have been sub-mitted by my colleague here to-night. Under such circumstances the decision was made which has been referred to by the Chair. The present Chairman is not satisfied that it should stand, and has submitted the point to the committee.

submitted the point to the committee.

The bill has continued upon the Private Calendar ever since then, notwithstanding the alleged hasty, ill-considered decision. Now, is it fair to General Nell, is it fair to the committee itself, to keep this bill upon the Private Calendar, treating it as a private bill until the opportunity comes to pass it, and then say that it is a public bill, and thereby send it to the foot of the Union Calendar, without regard to whether it is a public or a private bill and without regard to whether it affects one man, two men, three men, or twenty men? I think common fairness requires that this committee should give the hill consideration at this time. If it men, or twenty men? I think common fairness requires that this committee should give the bill consideration at this time. If it is a just measure, let us pass it; if not, let us vote it down. But I appeal to the committee to overrule the point and dispose of it.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Several of us desire to see this bill and the report, but the copies seem to be exhausted. I would ask the gentleman from Arkansas if this is to place all of the members of that particular battalion on the roll?

Mr. McRAE. It is to give them a pensionable status.

Mr. NEILL. No; it is to place them on the pension roll. Two-thirds of the survivors of the battalion are on the roll to-day. There are only 26 applicants, so far as known up to this time, to thirds of the survivors of the battalion are on the roll to-day. There are only 26 applicants, so far as known up to this time, to be added to the roll. Those who applied and made their proof during the administration of General Black in that office were placed on the roll. Those which were presented to the incoming administration after General Black's administration closed were refused. Twenty-six people are all the pending applicants, as I am informed by the Commissioner.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Now, if I can be permitted a moment, Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a single remark. I asked the question simply for information and for the reason that we were unable to secure copies of the bill and the report, and were therefore unable to understand fully just what was desired to be done or what the bill was intended to accomplish.

I understand that the pending question is on the point of order

I understand that the pending question is on the point of order raised against the consideration at the Friday night session, and I desire to say that I am surprised at some of the old soldiers on the Republican side of the House raising such technical objections in a matter of this kind.

I was not in the Army myself. Thank God I was too young to be there. But it does seem to me that those who served during the

be there. But it does seem to me that those who served during the last war and who are day after day and night after night urging with earnestness legislation in favor of the soldiers of our country should not rise on an occasion of this kind and present technical objections to a bill which is brought up for consideration and which involves the pensioning of some of our soldiers.

I believe myself, sir, after the very slight examination that I have been able to give to this measure, that it properly belongs on the Private Calendar, where it has been placed by the Speaker of the House; and we could have voted this measure up or voted it down long ago, instead of taking up an hour or more in discussions. it down long ago, instead of taking up an houror more in discussing whether a point of order should or should not be sustained against it. Those who are to be benefited by this bill if it should ing whether a point of order should or should not be sustained against it. Those who are to be benefited by this bill if it should become a law are as much entitled to the consideration of the patriotic citizens of this country as are any of the soldiers of any war since this Government has had its existence.

I simply give these suggestions. I shall vote against some of my colleagues on this measure, and I am sorry that they have precipitated the character of fight on this bill which they have.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the point of order be sustained? The point of order is made that this bill is not in order to-night; that it is not a private bill, coming within the terms of the rule, although on the Private Calendar.

The question was taken; and the point of order was overruled. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable report?

Mr. CROWTHER. I desire to offer the following amendment to the bill.

to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 12 insert:

"That the provisions of existing pension laws are hereby extended to the officers and enlisted men, their widows, children, dependent mothers and fathers, of all militar aissed in the several States during the years 1861 to 1865, inclusive, who performed military service in the Federal Army, or when serving with United States volunteers or regulars, or when serving as State militia under the orders or command of the War Department or any military officer of the United States, during a period of ninety days or longer, and that a certificate of discharge from such service from either State or United States authority shall be prima facie evidence of such service.

"Sec. 2. That the following provisions of paragraph 3, section 4693, Revised Statutes of the United States, to wit: 'But no claim of a militiaman or non-enlisted person on account of disability from wounds or injury received in battle with rebels or Indians while temporarily rendering service shall be valid unless prosecuted to a successful issue prior to the 4th day of July, 1874,' be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. PITNEY. I make the point of order—
Mr. McRAE. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, first, that this is not germane to the pending bill, and second, that the rule prohibits the adding of one private bill to another as an amendment. If the Chair desires authority—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question. The point of order is sustained.
Mr. CROWTHER. With all due deference to the ruling of the Chair, I appeal from the decision.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentlemen on the other side of the House will take an equitable view of this matter. These militia performed good services, and I should be sorry to other side of the House will take an equitable view of this matter. These militia performed good services, and I should be sorry to see them kept off the rolls—old men and old women.

Mr. NEILL. Well, bring along your bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will also remember that these men performed services, and are entitled to consideration. They are just as much entitled to consideration as the others were, and now let us swallow the whole thing, as you have insisted upon taking a part of it. I trust that they will not do injustice now to these militia regiments.

Mr. TERRY. I suggest to the gentleman that he do what has been done in this case, get the report of a committee in favor of it.

Mr. TERRY. I suggest to the gentleman that he do what has been done in this case, get the report of a committee in favor of it.

Mr. CROWTHER. It has been favorably reported.

Mr. PICKLER. If you can pension one regiment, I do not see why you can not add another regiment to it. I hope these gentlemen will not be unfair to these poor old people.

Mr. TERRY. Report a bill in their favor.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. That has been done already.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the indement of the committee?

Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Crowther), there were—ayes 91, noes 0.

Accordingly, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to reconsider.

Mr. McRAE. You can not do that in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done in Committee of the Whole.

Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for tellers.

Mr. McRAE. Too late.

Mr. PICKLER. If I can have unanimous consent, what I wish to know is, How many people are carried by this bill? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. NEILL. If the gentleman had asked for the reading of the report, he would have found that out; but I shall be happy to state the fact to him. On August 2, 1894, according to Commissioner Lochren's letter to myself, there were 21 applicants. Up to date there have been 5 additions, as stated in a letter which I hold in my hand, making 26 of these people who will get $8 a month.

Mr. PICKLER. Have you their names?

Mr. NEILL. No.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM M. DALZELL

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1498) directing the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to William M. Dalzell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be directed to amend the records of the War Department in the case of William M. Dalzell, late fifth corporal in Company B, Second Regiment Iowa Infantry, so as to give him an honorable discharge dating to the end of the war.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE M. BROOKS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (8. 637) granting a pension to George M. Brooks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of George M. Brooks, late private in D Company of the Sixty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Infantry Volunteers, and pay to him a pension of $15 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report in this

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 351, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 837) granting a pension to George M. Brooks, have examined the same and report:

The record shows that said Brooks was enrolled on the 9th day of August, 1862, as a private in Company D. Sixty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers. Said Brooks testifies that he contracted the measles while in camp at Indianapolis, Ind., about the middle of November, 1822, which entirely destroyed his voice and induced pain in his breast, from which he is still suffering; and that during the fall of 1822 and the following winter, while he was in the service of the United States, he incurred a throat and lung trouble, and others asthma; that for years he has been troubled with dizziness and swimming in the head, glimmering in the eyes, shortness of the breath under moderate exercise or excitement, and has general disability. Surgeon Jameson testifies that said Brooks had some acute bronchitis following the measles; he also had the jaundice, which was contracted while in the United States service and line of duty at Indianapolis on or about November 18, 1802.

The examing surgeon on October 23, 1863, finds aphonis and debility, consequent upon measles; that he is still unable to labor. Disability at three-fourths.

P. H. Jameson, acting surgeon United States Army, states that when soldier was discharged "he was unit for duty by reason of acute bronchitis following measles; he had also jaundice, which was contracted while in the service of the United States and the line of his duty at Indianapolis. SALINA, KANS., February 13, 1898.

I have this day examined George M. Brooks, about 53 years of age, late a private in Company D of the Sixty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers. Having been his family physician for the last two years, I am of the opinion that his disability resulted from an attack of measles which led to a chronic bronchitis, with exacerbations and remissions and attended with considerable bronchorrhea, always worse in the winter months. He also has a weak heart. He is entirely unfit to perform manual labor, but does perform about one-fourth that of an able-bodied man.

Personally appeared before me, clerk of the district court in and for Saline County, Kans., W. S. Harvey, personally known to me to be a practicing physician, and made the foregoing affidavit.

STATE OF KANSAS, County of Saline, ss:

I, A. L. Brown, clerk of said county and State aforesaid, do hereby certify that W. S. Harvey is a practicing physician of twenty-five years' standing, as shown by the records on file in my office. A. L. BROWN, County Clerk.

The soldier himself makes oath and testifies as follows:

SALINA, KANS., February 19, 1896.

George M. Brooks, late a private in Company D. Sixty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, being duly sworn, says that he is the identical George M. Brooks above referred to; that he is now in the fifty-fourth year of his age. He further says that he is disabled from doing physical labor, and that this disability is the result of measles contracted in the fall of the year 1862 while he was in the military service of the United States, so he verily believes. That he has never been able to do regular physical labor since he was discharged from the service of the United States.

GEO. M. BROOKS.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 19th day of February, 1896. [SEAL.] A. L. BROWN, County Clerk,

All of which being considered, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN J. BOATWRIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6233) granting an increase of pension to John J. Boatwright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John J. Boatwright, late of Company I, Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $72 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 7 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] calls for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

CHARLES W. SENTMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Sentman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles W. Sentman, late of Company D.

Twentieth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, a pension of $30 per month from the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension now drawn by him of $8 per month under certificate No. 111888.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.
The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was read; as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. Kirkpatrick) was read; as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1811) for the relief of Charles W. Sentman, submit the following report:

Charles W. Sentman enlisted in Company D, Twentieth Indiana Infantry, and was duly mustered into the service of the United States on the 22d day of July, 1861, and served until July 2, 1865, when he was mustered out and honorably discharged.

He participated in the following battles: Glendale, Savage Station, Charles City Cross Roads, Malvern Hill, Second Bull Run, Chantilly, Fredericksburg, Kellys Ford, Mine Run, Battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, North Anna, Bermuda Hundred, and Petersburg.

He was wounded in the shoulder the second day at Gettysburg, and again in front of Petersburg, where a finger of the right hand was shot away.

George W. Painter, a reputable man and a comrade of the soldier, says, in an affidavit filed with the papers in the case:

"I knew him intimately and continuously all of said time [covering enlistment and service]. At the time of his enlistment applicant was in good physical condition and in good health, and apparently as rugged a man as was in the regiment. He was a good soldier and did good service all through, never shrinking any duty or responsibility."

Frank Barwick, another comrade, says in an affidavit on file in the case:

"I certify that C. W. Sentman was a soldier with me in Company D, Twentieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was counted one among the most rugged as well as bravest of that company from July, 1861, until July 2, 1883, being then severely wounded at Gettysburg, Pa. When sufficiently recovered, returned and bore a faithful part as far as able until some time in May, 1804, was again wounded, but again returned to regiment with less ability physically, but if anything more patriotic zeal. He was a No. 1 soldier, and by his example prompted many to better service. We were under Gen. Phil. Kearny up to be a further amendment in line 5.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, I desire to amend further by inserting after the word "volunteers," in line 5, the words "and pay him." After the word "month," in line 6, I move to strike out the remainder of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the words "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

I think that puts the bill in shape.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will treat all these suggestions as one amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 4, the words "pay to" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "place upon the pension roll the name of."
Also, in line 5, after the word "volunteers," insert the words "and pay him."
Also strike out all after the word "month," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the words "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CLARA L. NICHOLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6528) to increase the pension of Clara L. Nichols, widow of Byt. Maj. Gen. W. A. Nichols.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of Clara L. Nichols, widow of the late Bvt. Maj. Gen. W. A. Nichols, of the United States Army, be, and it is hereby, increased from $30 per month to $100 per month, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of the said Clara L. Nichols upon the pension roll at the rate of $100 per month, subject to the provisions of existing pension laws.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman— Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report. Mr. PICKLER. This is the gentleman's own report, and I hope

Mr. FICKLER. This is the gentleman sown report, and the be will not ask that it be read.

Mr. ERDMAN. I would rather have this report read.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. Chairman, this is another of those bills making an invidious distinction between the widows of general officers and the widows of private soldiers. I think the line ought to be drawn right here upon that sort of proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. That would require an amendment in line 6 and line 9.

and line 9.

Mr. CROWTHER. Certainly.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will prevail. I was unavoidably detained this evening, and was surprised to find when I reached here that a pension had been passed giving the widow of General Gibbon $100 a month.

A MEMBER. Providentially detained.

Mr. BLUE. It was not providentially; it was unavoidably. Later on I hope we shall be able to cut that pension down to where it belongs. I understood from the gentleman from New York [Mr. Curris] that it would not be pressed beyond $75; but this evening, in the absence of some of us, it was put up to $100. This invidious distinction of which the gentleman from Missouri speaks is becoming invidious to the whole country, and it is about time it should stop. This lady's husband was a brevet majorgeneral and not a major-general, so that $50 ought to be the outside limit for the pension of the widow of any brigadier-general, or any other man, for that matter. or any other man, for that matter.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the report in my own time.

The report (by Mr. Erdman) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6528) to increase the pension of Clara L. Nichols, widow of Byt. Maj. Gen. W. A. Nichols, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report: The War Department gives General Nichols's service as follows:

Twenty-third Infantry, Fort Clark, Tex.

(Through Maj. S. T. Cushing, Office Commissary-General.)

The applicant, now 66 years old, files the following petition for the increase

The applicant, now 66 years old, lies the following petition for the increase of her pension:

"The pension certificate of Clara L. Nichols, widow of Col. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. William A. Nichols, United States Army, No. 153845, dated the 22d day of November, 1873, payable at Topeka, Kans., amounts to $30 a month.

"This is the regular pension allowed by law to officers of the general's rank, and a special act of Congress will be necessary to increase it; but so many widows of general officers have had their pension raised to $50 and $100 per month whose claims are not as strong as mine, and who certainly could not need it more, that I feel, in justice to my husband's services, as well as valuable service rendered by myself at the beginning of the rebellion, I ought to make an effort to be similarly favored.

"Through the kindness of General Sheridan, who knew my necessity, I received the appointment of postmaster at Fort Leavenworth, Kans, immediately after my husband's decease, a position which I held for nearly twenty-three years consecutively, and which I voluntarily resigned about three years since. During that time my friends urged my applying for increase of pension, but I preferred working for the means of support for myself and family, only too grateful for the position that enabled me to do so.

"Now, with advancing years and somewhat enfeebled health, Ilay my case before Congress, and mention as briefly as may be the ground upon which I be a proper to the position of the position of the product of the product of the product of the product of the position of the product of the p

"FORT CLARK, TEX., January 17, 1895."

Considering the rank and distinguished services of General Nichols and the dependence of the widow, the committee make a favorable report, with an amendment striking out the words "one hundred," in lines 6 and 9, and inserting "seventy-five" in place thereof.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell]. I do not see him here to-night. However, I know that he is very much interested in it. It will be observed that we intend to pension this applicant for her own service as well as in right of the memory of her husband; and it is therefore different from a number of bills pension-band; and it is therefore different from a number of only pensioning the widows of generals. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri will not be adopted, but that the bill will be passed, as suggested by the committee.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a few lines in this report made by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania. Referring to the $30 a month pension she now receives as widow of a general in the Army, this petitioner says:

This is the regular pension allowed by law to officers of the general's rank, and a special act of Congress will be necessary to increase it; but so many widows of general officers have had their pension raised to $50 and $100 per month whose claims are not as strong as mine, and who certainly could not need it more, that I feel in justice to my husband's services, as well as valuable service rendered by myself at the beginning of the rebellion, I ought to make an effort to be similarly favored.

It seems to me that that is the strongest argument against the passage of this bill, at least at the rate of $75 per month. This committee has uniformly granted an increase in the amount of pensions to general officers' widows, and my motion is to increase that pension $20 per month more than that allowed by the general law. It seems to me that that should be sufficient, when we take into consideration the fact that the pension of no private soldier's widow of the war of 1861 to 1865 has been increased by this House more than from $8 to $12 per month. If there are any widows whose pensions should be increased, they are the widows of the into consideration the fact that the pension of no private soldier's widow of the war of 1861 to 1865 has been increased by this House more than from $8 to $12 per month. If there are any widows whose pensions should be increased, they are the widows of the private soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to the amendment offered by the committee. The amendment by the committee is to strike out the words "one hundred" where they occur and insert the words "seventy-five." The amendment offered by the gentleman from "seventy-five." The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty."

The question was taken; and the amendment of Mr. Crowther to the amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on laying aside the bill as amended with a favorable report.
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:
"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Clara L. Nichols, widow of the late Byt. Maj. Gen. William A. Nichols, and pay her a pension of $50 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving."

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended by the substitute was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PICKLER. I offer the following amendment to the title:
After the words "Clara L. Nichols" strike out the remainder of the title; so as to read: "To increase the pension of Clara L. Nichols.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be reported with the recommendation that the title be amended as suggested. There was no objection.

Mr. Chairman, I do not often impose on the generosity of this body by asking a favor, but next week will be Christmas week, and Susan A. Cunningham, of Connecticut, is not a general's widow, but is a private soldier's daughter, who has been totally and permanently blind from childhood. Her father and mother are dead, and she is absolutely dependent on the charity of her friends. I ask three minutes of the time of this committee to her friends. I ask three minutes of the time of this committee to consider a bill for her relief which has been passed by the Senate and has been reported favorably and unanimously by the House committee. It is Senate bill No. 1318. The report is short, and will occupy but very little time.

The CHAIRMAN. The report can be read afterwards.

The Senate bill (S. 937) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. The report on the House bill (by Mr. Coffin) was read, as fol-

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1810) entitled "A bill granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Comly," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with amendments:

The claimant is the widow of Clifton Comly, late major Ordnance Department, United States Army. Major Comly died in service April 17, 1894, of disease originating in the line of his duty. He entered the United States Military Academy July 1, 1865, and after his graduation therefrom June 17, 1862, he passed through all the grades to the rank of major, which he held at the time of his death. He rendered distinguished service during the late war in the cavalry arm of the service until May 26, 1863, when he was transferred to the Ordnance Department, and remained there, rendering valuable and efficient service, until the date of his death.

The medical officers of the Army certify that his death was caused by cerebral hemorrhage, superinduced by overwork, he having (as stated by Surg. John Von R. Hoff) for more than a year staggered under a load of official responsibility much beyond the capacity of any man.

Mrs. Comly receives the pension of $25 per month provided by the general law for the widows of officers of this soldier's rank, but it is shown by the papers accompanying the bill that aside from this pension and the interest on a small life-insurance fund she has no means whatever for the maintenance of herself and the support and education of her young son.

The following amendments to the bill are recommended:

Change the title of the bill so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Comly," strike out the initial "C." where it occurs in the deceased soldier's name in line 6; strike out the word "fifty" in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-five," and add after the last word in line 7 the words "the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by her."

The Senate bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The House bill (H. R. 1810) was laid aside to be reported back with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

BERNHARD STUEBER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 537) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Bernhard Stueber.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Sergt. Bernhard Stueber, late of Company F, One hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the records of the Adjutant-General's Office, and issue him an honorable discharge.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask for the reading of the report, Mr.

The report (by Mr. TRACEY) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Tracey) was read, as follows:

The committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. B. 537) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Bernhard Stueber, late a sergeant in Company F, One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, beg leave to report that they have carefully considered the same and find the facts so clearly set forth in a report made to the Forty-ninth Congress and again to the Fifty-first Congress that said reports are in part adopted.

The committee find that the charge of desertion was recorded against Sergeant Stueber under the following circumstances: Some time in March, 1862, he contracted, while in the discharge of his duty, a severe cold, which settled on his lungs, and in May following was attacked with diarrhea in addition. After the battle of Antietam his captain and surgeon wanted to place him in a hospital, but, disliking the idea of going to a hospital, he applied for a thirty-days furlough to go home. Oscar Templeton, then acting captain, granted the furlough, which was indorsed by the commanding officer of the regiment. As authorized by the furlough, Sergeant Stueber his command about the 21st of September, 1862, and arrived home at Canton October 2, 1862, and there went to bed, and for one year was unable to do any work. After the expiration of his furlough, his attending physician, Dr. Pratt, some of his neighbors, and Stueber himself corresponded with Captain Templeton, sending him certificates as to his continued inability to do duty in the field.

The Committee find further that First Sergt. Frank H. Wetz, subsequently commissioned as second lieutenant of Company F, has testified under oath that he made the entry on the company roll, showing Stueber to be a deserter, in ignorance of the existence of the furlough granted by Acting Captain Templeton, and afterwards learned that it was incorrect, but receiving no orders to correct the error, he could not change it.

Your committee believe that the charge of desertion was u

The following is a copy of the report referred to:
Bernhard Stueber was enrolled March 2, 1862, for three years, in Company F, One hundred and seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served in that organization until September 14, 1862, when he is reported as having deserted at South Mountain, Maryland. He never returned to his command, which was retained in service until July 13, 1865.
The following is a synopsis of the evidence which has been presented to this office with a view to the removal of the charge of desertion, viz:

Applicant Stueber swore that some time in March, 1862, he was taken sick with a severe cold which settled on his lungs, and in May was taken with diarrhes in addition. After the battle of Antietam his captain and the surgeon wanted to place him in a hospital, which he declined, but asked the captain for a furlough for thirty days to go home. Oscar Templeton, then acting captain, gave him the desired furlough, which was indorsed by the commanding officer of the regiment. He left about September 21, 1852, and arrived not able to do any work. After his furlough had expired his attending physician, Dr. Pratt, some of his neighbors, as well as himself, corresponded with Captain Templeton and sent him certificates. Frank H. Wetz, late first sergeant Company F, and subsequently second the rolls showing applicant a deserter September 14, 1882, which he afterwards learned was incorrect, but not receiving any orders to correct the charge he could not change it; that applicant had been failing in health, and was looking sick and very much reduced. Was informed by Lieutenant Templeton, then acting captain, and by others, that applicant was attended during his sick in 1882; that he was not called upon in his case, but being acquainted with him, requently talked with him; he looked bad, and was certainly unfit to return to duty as a soldier for about one year.

statements.

This additional testimony was not accepted to warrant the reversal of the former adverse decision, and the application for removal of the charge of desertion and the granting of an honorable discharge was denied September 11, 1889.

Since then no new testimony has been introduced, and the status of the soldier has not, in consequence, been changed.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH, Captain and Assistant Surgeon United States Army. The SECRETARY OF WAR.

An amendment recommended by the committee striking out the preamble was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH H. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2364) for the relief of Joseph H. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Joseph H. Johnson, late a private of Company I, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge as of date August 5, 1865, and that said Johnson shall be entitled to receive from the accounting officers of the Treasury all pay and allowances which may have been due him on said date of discharge, excluding therefrom the time of his absence without leave.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the

The report (by Mr. TRACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2364) for the relief of Joseph H. Johnson, have had the same under consideration and report thereon as follows:

Joseph H. Johnson was enrolled and mustered into service as a private in Company I of the One hundred and fittieth Indiana Volunteers, on the 25th day of February, 1865, to serve one year. He is charged with having deserted on the 14th day of July, 1865. He left the command at that date and did not return in time to be mustered out with his regiment on the 5th of August, 1865.

return in time to be mustered out with his regiment on the 5th of August, 1865.

It will be noted that the war was over when he left the command. His reason for leaving, which is fully corroborated by the testimony, was that he had been informed that his wife was very sick. He applied for a furlough and was refused. He went home and remained eight or ten days, until his wife was out of danger, and then started to return to his command. When he arrived at Lafayette, Ind., he met a number of his comrades returning home, and they informed him that the regiment had been mustered out. He then returned home with his comrades.

When he left the command in Virginia he told his comrades that his wife was not expected to live, and that he was going home to see her and would return soon if he could leave her. He left his gun and accouterments with the ordnance sergeant.

The testimony shows that he was a man of good character and habits, and a faithful soldier. Relief was denied by the War Department for the reasor that the case does not come within the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889.

It is apparent, however, to your committee that the soldier did not intend to desert his command. He testified himself that the captain of his company gave him leave to go. His veracity appears to be unquestioned, and the fact that he started to return to his command as soon as he could safely leave his wife is conclusive proof that his conduct was not that of a deserter.

Your committee therefore report the bill favorably, and recommend that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

IRA POWERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5061) to pension Ira Powers, of Henderson County, Tenn. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Ira Powers, late of Company A, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, of Henderson County, Tenn., on the pension roll of the United States, to receive $12 per month, from September I, 1890.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to, as follows:

Striking out all after the word "States," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "and pay him a pension of $12 per month."

The report (by Mr. Anderson) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Anderson) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5061) granting a pension to Ira Powers, late private, Company A, Second Tennessee Cavalry, and Companies A and C, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers, having examined and carefully considered the facts and circumstances presented, respectfully report as follows:

Ira Powers enlisted August 14, 1862, and was honorably discharged, after faithful service, August 7, 1895. He filed a claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, on August 18, 1890, alleging hernia, nervous debility, and spinal affection. His claim was rejected December 5, 1891, on the ground of "no pensionable disability under act of June 27, 1890," He filed affidavit March 21, 1893, which alleges existence of hernia (right side), spinal affection, general debility, disease of eyes, and piles; and in affidavit of March 28, 1893, in addition to above, alleged disease of heart.

In support of his claim, he filed, March 25, 1893, the affidavit of M. M. Grimsley, to the effect that he had been a neighbor for four years, and claimant had not been able to do a whole day's work in five years.

Also, affidavit of Dr. P. W. Austin that claimant has spinal affection, sore near hip, headache, does not see well, subject to piles, and has had hernia. Disability from spinal affection, one-half; from eyes, one-fourth; from piles, one-sixteenth.

Also, affidavit of W. B. Ruton that he is suffering from spinal affection—near hip, headache, does not see well, subject to piles, and has had hernia. Disability from spinal affection, one-half; from eyes, one-fourth; from piles, one-sixteenth.

Also, affidavit of W. B. Ruton that he is suffering from spinal affection—disabled one-half; seriously affected with heart disease, from which disabled one-fourth; also hernia, piles, premature old age, and loss of sight, one-fourth. Soldier has a hospital record in service of diarrhea, catarrh, and variola, and was twice in hospital with catarrh and diarrhea; he was almost constantly in hospital from March 3 to July 3, 1865, with catarrh, fever, variola, and diarrhea.

The board of examining surgeons at Savannah, Tenn., rated him, May 6, 1891, at six-eighteenths for incomplete hernia, and four-eighteenths for rheumatism. The board at same place, April 11, 1894, reported "No disability," and the claim was again rejected June 11, 1894, on the ground of "No ratable disability found under act June 27, 1890."

Dr. R. A. Dickson files with the committee an affidavit, dated February 24, 1896, saying he "finds on examination that claimant is suffering with chronic inflammation of the left kidney, irregular valvular action of heart, unable to rest on left side; also find a hernia of right side. I have known Mr. Powers and been his family physician since 1874 up to this date, and here testify his total disability for physical labor of any kind."

Rev. T. Rogers and John H. Rogers testify they served in same company with Ira Powers, and believe him entitled to the full benefits of the act of June 27, 1890 (312 per month), from the date of filing his claim.

A petition signed by 108 neighbors certifies to personal acquaintance with Ira Powers for over five years, and believe him entitled to the maximum pension under act of June 27, 1890, and therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the word "States," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof "and pay him a pension of $12 per month," and as amended that the bill do pass.

Mr. ER

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is a bill that re ought to pass. This soldier applied under the Harrison Adwe ought to pass. ministration, and the Harrison examining board said that he was not entitled to a pension, and the Pension Bureau under the Har-rison Administration said that he was not entitled to a pension, and rejected his application. Subsequently he applied under the present Administration, with the same result. Now it appears that 108 of his neighbors certify that they know this applicant and believe him to be entitled to a pension, and therefore we are asked, acting in this quasi judicial proceeding, to accept the certificate of those 108 neighbors of the applicant, and to allow it to override the sworn testimony presented in this case under two administrations, the findings of General Bussey, and of two pension boards under two different administrations. I do not think we ought to need this bill. I like to have the rescond for the rescond of these pass this bill. I like to have the reasons for the passage of these bills placed upon the record, in order that the people may understand why we do pass pension bills. That the people take an interest in the subject, I find from many letters that I receive. They also criticise some of our actions here, and one of the letters that I have received, and that I hold in my hand, reads as follows:

I have received, and that I hold in my hand, reads as follows:

Dear Str: Having been informed that you were not merely a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, but also the subcommittee man to whom all the pension claims of claimants from the State of Pennsylvania are referred, I take the liberty of addressing you again in reference to my claim as widow of Colonel ——, late colonel of the ——Pennsylvania Regiment, for increase of pension. My husband served from the beginning to the end of the war. In April, 1865, lost a portion of his left leg, and died subsequently from the effects of the amputation. I am drawing merely $20 per month, and firmly believe that I am entitled to more, as the widow of a colonel. I noticed in last week's paper that Brig. Gen. Jos. Carr's widow, residing in Albany, N. Y., was granted by your committee a pension of $75 per month. I am informed on good military authority, on authority of an officer who served under General Carr, and who also knows of the services of my late husband, that my husband served longer and was in more battles than General Carr, and General Carr did not lose a leg in battle.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by myself, and I wish only to state for the information of the House that I have known this soldier well for thirteen years. During that time I have known him as a man who has been constantly going down, down, down, until now he is unable to do work. That he is disabled, there is no question; that he was a good soldier, there is no question; and the fact that by reason of good soldier, there is no question; and the fact that by reason of some technicality in the administration of the pension laws he has been refused a pension is a fact for which he ought not to be held responsible. He having been a soldier under the peculiar conditions of his case, and coming from the region of country from which he hailed, I think it will be but slight justice to place him on the pension roll, by the passage of this bill, at $12 a month.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman will allow me to make the further suggestion that, as the report shows, on one examination the surgeons found him entitled to a rating of ten-eighteenths.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. The board of examining surgeons at Savannah, Tenn., in May, 1891, gave him a rating of six-eighteenths for incomplete hernia and four-eighteenths for rheumatism. On the coming in of the present Administration that the cumulative system of rating even General Bussey turned him

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I do not want to discuss who has been right or who has been wrong. There is one thing I know—that this man was a good soldier, and that he is now disabled.

Mr. PEARSON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] has undertaken to harrow up our souls with visions of the troubles that will afflict some of us hereafter. I am informed that that gentleman at least will not be one of those who will be troubled here in the fatture. If another is troubled here in the future. [Laughter.]

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to trouble the gentleman from North Carolina or any other gentleman here by my presence; but I think possibly my conduct may bear fruit hereafter in the action of other gentlemen. ber of gentlemen who are voting on the other side. [Laughter.]

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

HESTER A. BOSTWICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4941) to pension Hester A. Bostwick. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from the 11th day of November, 1894, Hester A. Bostwick, widow of Capt. Burr H. Bostwick, deceased, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment of Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, is hereby pensioned at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following: "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Hester A. Bostwick, widow of Burr H. Bostwick, late captain of Company K, Seventh Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension of $20 per month."

Mr. PICKLER. I hope that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAYTON] who reported this bill will make a brief statement of

Mr. LAYTON. I do not think it is necessary for me to make any statement. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Wilson] who introduced the bill, and who is much better able to state the case than I am, is present; and as my recollection of the facts is somewhat obscure, it having been a long time since the bill was reported, I ask the gentleman from Ohio, the author of the bill, to make a statement

Mr. ERDMAN. I shall call for the reading of the report. I think that is the most satisfactory way of considering the matter. The report (by Mr. LAYTON) was read, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1168) to increase the pension of Josiah P. Hill, late of Company F, Eighty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion.

During the eight years that I have been in Congress I have never asked at a Friday night session for the consideration of any bill out of its regular order, but having known the beneficiary of this bill for twenty-five years, personally and intimately, and knowing as I do his condition, I ask unanimous consent to-night for the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Josiah P. Hill, late of Company F, Eighty-first Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion, to $72 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report. I want to know something about this case.

The report (by Mr. Wood) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1168) to increase the pension of Josiah P. Hill, late of Company F, Eighty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion, submit the following 1168) to increase the pension of Josiah P. Hill, late of Company F, Eighty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion, submit the following report:

Josiah P. Hill was a sergeant in Company F, Eighty-first Illinois Volunteers, enlisted August 11, 1862, and honorably discharged August 5, 1865. His record during the service and since the war is good.

He is now pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, at $12 per month, which he has been drawing since August 13, 1891, for disease of lungs, rheumatism, and disease of heart. He seems to have made no application under the general law, and there is no evidence that his disability is of service origin, except as below stated.

In January, 1893, claimant had a stroke of paralysis, completely disabling his right side; his condition is slightly improved since; he can barely get about by aid of a crutch; he is 62 years of age; his intellect is much impaired, and his speech so defective by reason of the paralysis that it is very difficult to understand him when he attempts to say anything; he is unable to dress himself and requires a constant attendant; he has no means or income except his pension of $12.

The above facts concerning his condition appear from a petition of 63 citizens of Carbondale, Ill., where he lives, and from the affidavits of Dr. John T. McAnally and Dr. John O'Hara. The last named has been his family physician since his return from the service. He swears that he treated him soon after the war for "nephritis" (kidney disease) and lumbago; he has also treated him for rheumatism, sciatica, and vertigo. Of the paralysis, he swears it to be "the result, I think, of the foregoing diseases."

Your committee regard this as a case practically of charity. There is not sufficient evidence, it is believed, to pension this soldier under the general law, if he should make application. His record is long and honorable; his character good. For these reasons, as well as his great need, we think him fairly entitled to the bounty of the nation whom

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SUSAN E. CUNNINGHAM.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the objection to the request I made a few moments ago has been withdrawn, and I now ask unanimous consent that this Christmas present may be sent to this blind woman. I ask that the bill (S. 3182) granting a pension to Susan E. Cunningham may be taken up and passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut? There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Susan E. Cunningham totally and permanently blind, daughter of Thomas Cunningham, late private, Company F, Fourth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, at the rate of $12 a month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE L. BENNER.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that we proceed now with the Calendar. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next bill.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6841) granting a pension to George L. Benner. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of George L. Benner and grant him a pension because of a fracture of right thigh, received during the civil war while said Benner was an employee of the Quartermaster's Department; said pension to be rated according to the degree of disability existing as the result of said injury.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report read in that case. The report (by Mr. Miles) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 6841) entitled "A bill granting a pension to George L. Benner," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

sugmit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

This is a bill enacting that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of George L. Benner and grant him a pension because of a fracture of the right thigh, received during the civil war while said Benner was an employee of the Quartermaster's Department, to be rated according to the degree of disability existing as the result of said injury.

George L. Benner was a teamster during the war of the rebellion, employed by the United States under Captain Dana, United States Army, an assistant quartermaster; also under a wagon master named Lyles, and was accidentally injured, while performing his duties, by being caught between the front wheel of an army wagon and a tree, about November 7, 1861, incurring a fracture of the right thigh.

Dr. N. S. Lincoln, surgeon of quartermaster's hospital, testified February 28, 1896, that George L. Benner was admitted to the quartermaster's hospital under his (Dr. Lincoln's) charge on the 7th of November, 1861, on account of a bad fracture of the thigh; that he suffered severely many weeks, and has never completely recovered from the effects of the injury.

Dr. James T. Young, medical assistant quartermaster's hospital, testifies (February 29, 1896) that George L. Benner was admitted to the quarter master's hospital November 7, 1861, with a fracture of the thigh, and that he was discharged therefrom in March, 1862. He has never recovered from the effects of the injury. The fracture was treated by Dr. N. S. Lincoln with Dr. Young's assistance.

Your committee believe the bill is meritorious, and precedents having been set by previous action of Congress in pensioning the employees in Quartermaster's Department for injuries received in line of duty, earnestly recommend the passage of the bill without amendment.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

ANNIE E. NOLAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2129) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Nolan. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie E. Nolan, widow of Nicholas Nolan, late major Third United States Cavalry, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let the report be read. The report (by Mr. POOLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2129) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Nolan, adopt the following Senate report, No. 345:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2129) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Nolan, have examined the same, and ing an increase of pension to Annie E. Nolan, have examined the same, and report:

Nicholas Nolan served his country as a soldier continously from December 9, 1852, to October 25, 1853, at which time he died from wounds and disease contracted in the service. He entered the Army as a private and was successively promoted through the several grades to that of major of the Third United States Cavalry. He was an especially brave and faithful soldier, his service during the war of the rebellion in the Shenandoah Valley, and also in Arizona, the Indian Territory, and other far Western points, being of the highest military order. For a considerable time before his death he was a sick man, but he remained with his command and literally died at his post of duty, after a military career of over thirty-one years.

The following is Major Nolan's military record, as furnished by the War Department:

He served as private and corporal of Battery M, Fourth Artillery, from December 9, 1852, to September 1, 1858, as private, corporal, sergeant, and first sergeant of Troop K, Second Dragoons, from September 1, 1858, to September 5, 1861, and as sergeant and first sergeant of Troop B, Sixth Cavalry, from September 5, 1861, to September 22, 1862, when he was discharged having accepted appointment as second lieutenant, Sixth Cavalry, July 17, 1862; first lieutenant, July 5, 1864; captain, Tenth Cavalry, July 28, 1866; major, Third Cavalry, December 19, 1882. He was brevetted first lieutenant August 1, 1863, "for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Brandy Station, Va.," and captain March 31, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Dinwiddie Court-House, Va."

He served as an officer with his regiment in the Army of the Potomac to July 11,1863; acting assistant inspector-general. Major Nolan left a wife and one child without property of any kind. The widow is not strong, having undergone unusual hardships and privations with her husband in his campaigns. She is now receiving a pension of $25 per month and is exerting herself to earn sufficient to support herself and child, a daughter 14 years of age. The present bill asks for an increase of pension to $50 per month.

Your committee, after a very careful examination of the case, and in view of the long and distinguished services of Major Nolan, recommend favorable action on the bill.

In addition to the facts set forth in the Senate report, it is shown that this widow cares for an invalid stepson, the son of the soldier, for whose care and support she is in no way legally bound. This seems to your committee to raise this above the general run of cases, and to make it exceptional, inasmuch as the only way in which the Congress can provide for this invalid son of a brave soldier who died at the post of duty is by increasing the pension of the widow who cares for him.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "fifty" where it occurs in this bill and insert "twenty-five;" so that it will read "$25 a month."

I will state that the amount of pension provided in the amendment is the amount the widow of a major would receive under the general law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bills to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Hopkins having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Lacey reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report back favorably without amendment the following bills: Senate bills Nos. 2008, 637, 937, and 3182; and House bills Nos. 1061, 1498, 7317, 2364, and 6841. Also, that he had been directed to report with amendment, and, as so amended with favorable recommendation. Senate bill No. as so amended, with favorable recommendation, Senate bill No. 2129 and House bills as follows: Nos. 6233, 1311, 6528, 1474, 537, 5061, 4941, and 1168. Also, that the committee had directed him to report back the bill H. R. 1810 with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question may be considered as ordered on these several bills, with the limit of fifteen minutes' debate on each side on each bill.

Mr. BLUE. Well, I do not know about that. There is one bill that should be excepted.

Several Members. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10 o'clock and 30 minutes having arrived, the Chair will declare the House, under the rule, adjourned until to-morrow (Saturday) at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, December 19, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the Journal. I understood the Clerk to read that I had raised an objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, that it should be first considered in Committee of the Whole. I made no should be first considered in Committee of the Whole. I made no such objection and raised no such point of order. The Record states the point of order which I did raise, and if the Journal is made to conform to the Record it will be correct.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it be eliminated from the Journal. While I raised the point of order, I subsequently withdrew it, so that it need not appear in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made. The matter was always and the proceed and not be recorded to the second s only mooted and not brought up.

The Journal as corrected was approved.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD. I am reported in the proceedings of last evening's session as saying that in 1885 Commissioner Black decided that Gray's Battalion were not entitled to the benefits of the Mexican war pension act. That, of course, is an error, as the act had not passed at that time. I was referring to certain portions of the committee report, and what I intended to say was that General Black admitted a number of the members of that battalion to the pension rolls, but it was afterwards decided that they were not entitled to the benefits of that act.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a privileged report. I am directed by

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, the Chair will submit a communication from the governor of Georgia, on which the House may desire to take action.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF GEORGIA, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Atlanta, December 18, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: On the 16th instant there was a special election held in the Third Congressional district of Georgia to fill the vacancy in the Fifty-fourth Congress caused by the death of the Hon. Charles F. Crisp. There was only, one candidate, Charles R. Crisp, and consequently he received all the votes cast. As soon as the returns are received his commission will be promptly forwarded to Washington.

Very truly, yours,
[SEAL.]

Hon. T. B. REED, Speaker House of Representatives.

W. Y. ATKINSON, Governor of Georgia.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. Crisp be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] asks that Mr. Crisp be sworn in. That will require unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand these are not the credentials in the usual form, but that this is simply a communication from the governor of Georgia.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. It seems to be an official communication from the governor informing the House of the result of the election

Mr. DINGLEY. But not the ordinary credentials.
Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I will state to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that the election of this gentleman is universally conceded, and there was no opposition whatever. So far from there being any prospect of a contest, the election itself was unopposed by any party or faction in the district.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have seen that statement in the public journals.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be sworn as a member of the House, without waiting for the formal credentials.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. Crisp, accompanied by Mr. Bartlett of Georgia and Mr. Maddox, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed to report, from the Committee on Appropriations, an urgent deficiency bill carrying about $800,000, and I ask unanimous consent that it may have immediate consideration in the House. I believe it will not take more than three or four minutes to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asks unanimous consent to report an urgent deficiency bill, and that the same be considered by the House now.

Mr. BAILEY. Pending that, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Of course that bill would be open to amendment in the House, the same as if it were considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman chooses, I will request that

The SPEAKER. It the gentleman chooses, I will request that the bill be considered in the House under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request as modified?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9753) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. As this is under the five-minute rule, I ask that the first reading be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year 1897, and for other objects hereinafter stated, namely:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

For the fiscal year 1897, 8100,000.

For the fiscal year 1896, $2,004.21.

For completion of post-office at Columbus, Ga., $4,000.

BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING.

BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING.

To carry on the current work of the Bureau in repairs to machinery of naval vessels, and furnishing necessary stores and supplies therefor, $200,000.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

For compensation of one clerk, class 4, from January 1 to June 30, 1897, $900.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to know when the Clerk reaches the end of a paragraph. With the consent of the House, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] if it be true that this bill has not been printed?

Mr. CANNON. It is now reported to the House for the first time.

Mr. BAILEY. And has never been printed?

Mr. CANNON. It has not been printed. I have a copy, printed for the use of the committee, which I can send to the gentleman. I am sure that when the gentleman hears a brief explanation he will not that the committee is justified in its course. I will make I am sure that when the gentleman hears a orier explanation he will see that the committee is justified in its course. I will make the explanation now or later. When the gentleman hears it, I think he will see that the committee is justified in asking immediate consideration, instead of waiting for the printing of the bill and for its consideration on Monday.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the House is entitled to at least a brief explanation.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]

has the floor

has the floor.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman prefers, I will make the explanation now. This is a bill covering practically five items: First, "Contingent expenses, Independent Treasury,"$102,000, in round numbers. That fund by the 1st of January will be exhausted. The bare statement of that fact is sufficient to show the necessity for the appropriation. The amount of the appropriation for this purpose, as is usual, did not come up to the estimate by this amount, and when this appropriation is made, the service for this year will not cost quite as much as it did for last year.

The next item is a small deficiency in the service for miscellaneous items of expenditure in the Treasury Department contingent fund, which was incurred unavoidably and awaits appropriation for payment.

fund, which was incurred unavoidably and awares appropriation for payment.

In the Navy Department, in the next two items, are one of $500,-000 for the Bureau of Construction and Repair and another of $200,000 for the Bureau of Steam Engineering. The Committee on Appropriations very carefully examined these estimates, having the heads of these Bureaus before it, in addition to the formal estimates, which have been submitted to the committee, and they made a searching examination. We find that the appropriations carried by the naval appropriation bill for the current year for these Bureaus have been substantially exhausted, so that on the these Bureaus have been substantially exhausted, so that on the 1st day of January work will have to cease on the repairs of the various ships that now need it. It is proper for me to say that the time has arrived, in our policy of creating a navy, to repair those ships that have been in commission and service from four those snips that have been in commission and service from four to six years. They are much larger, more powerful, more expensive, and repairs more expensive, than ships of the old Navy, and the committee believe—in fact, it was so stated by the officers before us—that in the Navy, as upon the land, "A stitch in time saves nine." These repairs would cost less if made promptly than if they should run a year or two and increase.

I will state further that the committee believes the House desires

I will state further that the committee believes the House desires to be entirely practical, and in the main, so far as we have a new Navy, we believe it to be of efficient ships, well armed and ready for service, equal, so far as it goes, with any navy on the seas; and we believe that those repairs can be kept up as they are necessary at less expense than to let them wait. And we believed further, to be entirely practical, that our Navy should be in good condition; and so far as I am concerned, I would rather keep it in good condition for service really needed than to rush into the newspapers for interviews or to perform by word of mouth for war in time of peace.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me, I desire to state, in reference to these appropriations for the Navy, that unless they be made before the recess, many employees will have to be discharged from the various navy-yards; and it is there-

Mr. CANNON. Well, as to the employment of the navy-yard

Mr. CANNON. Well, as to the employment of the navy-yard force, as I understand, you can not make repairs without employing somebody to do the repairs; but the committee was thoroughly satisfied that these repairs can be most economically made now; that it is necessary to have this appropriation to make them, and that the ships ought to be, from a standpoint of public economy, kept in good condition.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my friend a greating many condition.

a question.
Mr. CANNON. Certainly.
Mr. CUMMINGS. Is it not true that these repairs are abso-States practically upon a war footing?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Would not a war footing be the proper footing in peace, and efficient in war if war comes.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I want to say to the gentleman that this is a substantial recommendation to do a proper thing, namely, to is a substantial recommendation to do a proper thing, namely, to keep our small but efficient Navy in good repair, as it ought to be kept, in peace or in war, for real work, or as a moral force, if you choose, in peace. And I make this recommendation—would have made it twelve months ago, and, if I shall have the honor to make recommendations, will make it twelve months hence as readily as I make it now; and I do not want anything I have said here in recommending this appropriation to be considered as a threat to anybody. There is quite enough of that throughout the world now. I would rather do substantial things.

Mr. CANNON. Which?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The last item read there, giving direction as to how certain printing shall be done for the Supreme Court.

Mr. CANNON. It does not change existing law, I will say to my friend. We have inquired into this matter, and find that heretofore it has been done in this way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to reserve the point of order against that item.

against that item.
Mr. CANNON. Why, certainly.
Mr. RICHARDSON. We are put to a very great disadvantage.
This is the first time an appropriation bill has ever been considered in this House without printing; and we did not know until we had entered into the consideration of the bill it had never been printed. I do not think unanimous consent was asked to consider it until it was printed.

Mr. CANNON. On the contrary, there were numerous occasions in the last session of this Congress and in prior Congresses when this has been done.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I venture to say it was never done unless unanimous consent was asked to so consider it.

Mr. CANNON. Unanimous consent was asked to consider it.

Mr. CANNON. Unanimous consent was asked to consider it.
Mr. RICHARDSON. We had no notice that it was to be considered. Not having been printed, we can not get copies of the bill, and do not know what is in the bill nor how much it carries.
Mr. CANNON. I will consider the gentleman's protest in, but he did not make it in apt time. Unanimous consent was given.
I have no objection to any line of remarks the gentleman desires to make in regard to the matter. But I want to say to him that this is an urgent deficiency bill, the urgency having been brought to the attention of the committee only within the last two days, and the bill is sought to be passed in this way now so that it can be enacted into law before the beginning of the holiday recess

mr. RICHARDSON. There is nothing unusual in that. We have urgent deficiency bills in every Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I say to the gentleman that this is not a new practice. Bills have been passed in this way at least a dozen

Now, touching the items the gentleman has referred to, if he desires to be informed about them I will cheerfully give him all desires to be informed about them I will cheerfully give him all the information I can. There is an appropriation of $7,000 for the current year for printing for the Supreme Court. Under that appropriation, as under similar appropriations heretofore made, the briefs and other printing of the court in the main have been done; but heretofore, under the law, the fees collected by the clerk of the court have gone into a fund from which the opinions of the institute and such other special confidential printing as was of the justices and such other special confidential printing as was desired was done by a private printer designated by the court. Since the creation of the appellate courts, narrowing the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the business has fallen off, cases have been fewer, and less fees have been collected, and the result is that been fewer, and less fees have been collected, and the result is that from that source there is not now sufficient money to pay for this private printing after the fund has provided for the other burdens that it has to bear, and a justice of the court, by its direction, appeared before your committee and said that, in view of this situation, the court desired to be authorized to use from the allotment made for its printing at the Public Printing Office sufficient money to do this confidential printing. For the reason I have stated, namely, that the fees of the court have fallen off, your committee, on full consideration, thought that was a reasonable request, and therefore they have made this appropriation available in part for that purpose.

able in part for that purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will allow me, this appropriation is made only to execute an existing law.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is nothing further to be said, I ask that the bill be placed on its

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means be discharged from further consideration of the bill (S. 2889) in relation to the Tennessee Centennial Exposition at Nashville, and that the bill be put upon its passage. I make this request with the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, a bill similar to this having been reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be exhibited at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition, to be held at Nashville, Tenn., in the year 1897, by the Government of the United States, from its Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, and the United States Fish Commission, such articles and materials as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in time of peace and its resources as a war power, tending to demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaptation to the wants of the people; and to secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of said Government exhibit a board of management shall be created, to be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, arrangement, safe-keeping, and exhibition of such articles and materials as the heads of said Departments and institutions of the Government may, respectively, decide shall be embraced in said Government exhibit. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to dispose of such building or buildings, or the material composing the same, at the close of the exposition, giving preference to the city of Nashville or to the said Tennessee Centennial Exposition Company to purchase the same at an appraised value, to be ascertained in such manner as he may determine, and whatever sum may be realized on sale of said building shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Sec. 3. That for the purpose of paying the expenses of the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, installation, care, and return of said Government exhibit, and for the maintenance of the building hereinbefore provided for, and for other contingent expenses incidental to the Government exhibit, to be approved by the chairman of the board of management and by the Secretary of the Treasury upon itemized accounts and vouchers, there is hereby

Sec. 6. That the United States shall in no manner and under no circumstances be liable for any bond, debt, contract, expenditure, expense, or liability of any kind whatever of the said Tennessee Centennial Exposition Company, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or incident to or growing out of said exposition, nor for any amount whatever in excess of the $130,000 herein authorized; and the heads of the Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, and the United States Fish Commission, and the board of management herein authorized, their officers, agents, servants, or employees, shall in no manner and under no circumstances expend or create any liability of any kind for any sum in excess of the appropriations herein made, or create any deficiency.

tion of this bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that the consideration of this bill was to be postponed until Monday.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was the suggestion at first. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] was supposed to stand in the way of immediate consideration because he had charge of an appropriation bill that he desired to have considered to-day, but he has consented that this bill be now taken up, and that consideration of the appropriation bill be deferred till this bill is called up.

sideration of the appropriation bill be deferred till this bill is called up.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have never seen one of these exposition bills defeated, and I suppose that if this bill is to pass it may as well pass now as at another time. If I had any means of defeating it, I should be glad to do so, but I shall not object to its present consideration.

Mr. HULL I May I sak the continuous from Tennages what object to its present consideration.

Mr. HULL. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee what reason there is for the Government of the United States holding an exposition or fair at Nashville, Tenn.?

Mr. McMILLIN. The Government, under this bill, does not become liable in any degree for the conduct of the exposition for any cost except that of making its own exhibit. The bill provides simply for the Government doing what it did at Omaha last year, and what it has done over and over again both at home and abroad. It provides only for making a Government exhibit, and even that is to be done only when the buildings have been erected and prepared by the people of Tennessee at a cost of about $500,000. Foreign nations and the other States and Territories have been invited to make exhibits.

to make exhibits.

Mr. HULL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the only reason why we should do this now is because we have been doing it heretofore.

Mr. McMILLIN. The occasion of this exposition is the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Tennessee into the Union, a State than which none is grander or more meritorious. The Government has not only made exhibits heretofore within our own borders, but has made them in foreign countries.

Mr. WASHINGTON. When Iowa has been one hundred years in the Union, we will celebrate the anniversary of her admission with even a greater celebration. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, are we not going to have a word on this subject? Are not the friends of the bill ready to make any defense of it?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that a bill similar to this has been reported favorably by the Committee on Appropriations. The report upon that bill contains a statement of the facts and reasons, and, if he desires, it can be

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that it be printed in the Record.
Mr. McMILLIN. I am perfectly willing that it shall be printed in the Record, if the gentleman from Texas does not desire to have it read at this time, and will have it done, with the permission of the House.

TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

The Committee on Appropriations, which has had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8193) to aid and encourage the holding of the Tennessee Centennial Exposition at Nashville, Tenn., in the year 1897, and make an appropriation therefor, submit the following report:

The corporation known as "The Centennial Exposition Company of Tennessee" was chartered for the purpose of celebrating an important event in the history of the nation (the admission of Tennessee as a State into the Union), as well as for the encouragement and support of art, agricultural, horticultural, and mechanical arts, such as fairs, exhibitions, art exhibits, and associations of like nature. The charter of incorporation was filed under the laws of Tennessee on the 18th day of July, 1934. The general powers of said corporation are such as are usually conferred upon like organizations. Nashville, Tenn., where this exposition is to be held, is a city of about 100,000 in habitants, having, according to the census of 1890, a population of about 9,000 in excess of the population of Atlanta, Ga. The population of Tennessee is 1,767,518, according to the census of 1890. The resources of the State are varied and almost matchless.

Tennessee was admitted into the Union June 1,1796. The Tennessee Centennial Exposition is the outgrowth of a patriotic desire on the part of the people of Tennessee to mark with becoming dignity and display the one hundredth anniversary of that event. It is distinctly a patriotic enterprise, and is therefore necessarily State and national in its character.

For a decade past there has been a feeling among Tennesseans that the nature of the celebration should be a great exposition of the arts, sciences, and industries, because such demonstrations are educational, and the memory of them is lasting. As the time approached the feeling grew stronger, until, in June, 1894, a largely attended mass convention of distinguished Tenneseans met in the State capitol and formally launched the enterprise and organized a management to preside committee was selected from among the best business men of Tennessee, and they have the control of the entire enterprise. No expenditures can be made except upon the authority of this committee, and the system of receipts and explanatory vouchers used, your committee is assured, is as perfect as that of the United States Government. It appears to be the determination of the management to carry out the wishes of the people in wasting no money and expending it all directly upon the exposition itself.

Congress has encouraged expositions of a similar character at Chicago, Philadelphia, New Orleans, and Atlanta, while Government aid has been extended to even lesser affairs in other parts of the country. We are assured that this exposition, designed to commemorate an important event in the history of the United States, will be on a larger scale than any other exposition held in this country, the World's Fair at Chicago alone excepted.

The citizens of Nashville and Tennessee have, as already shown, subscribed $359,711, a much larger sum of money than had been obtained from like sources either at New Orleans or Atlanta when Government aid was granted, and under the pending bill a much larger contribution is required of the citizens of Nashville and Tennessee than was required of New Orleans or Atlanta under the appropriations granted by Congress to the New Orleans and Atlanta expositions.

The sum asked for according to this bill is but $130,000, and the appropriation is not to take effect until "the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that the solvent appropriations made by the State of Tennessee, its counties and cities, and by individuals or companies to said centennial exposition, together with solvent subscriptions to the stock of the Centennial Company made by the State, its counties and cities, and by private corporations and by individuals shall amount to at least the sum of one-half million of dollars."

So that while the appropriation asked for in this case is much less, the guaranties of subscript quired of other expositions which were aided with appropriations by Congress.

The appropriation, as will be seen, is not asked for in order to directly promote the interests of the exposition company or of private exhibitors, but to enable the Government of the United States to erect a suitable building and to exhibit "from its Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, and the United States Fish Commission such articles and materials as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in time of peace and its resources as a war power, tending to demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaptation to the wants of the people."

Your committee is persuaded, aside from the large benefits that will accrue to the masses of the people who either as visitors or exhibitors may attend this exposition, that the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Tennessee as a State into the Union is an event entitled to proper celebration, and such as to commend itself to appropriate recognition by Congress.

Your committee report the bill back herewith without amendment and recommend its passage.

Mr. TALBERT. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Does

Mr. TALBERT. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Does this bill carry any appropriation on the part of the Government except the expenditure which it will incur in making its own

Mr. McMILLIN. Not a dollar. On the contrary, the bill expressly provides that the Government shall not pay any portion of the expenses of the exposition, and the officers representing the Government are forbidden to incur any liabilities on the part of the United States in addition to what is appropriated by this bill.

A portion even of that goes back when the Government building

Mr. GIBSON. The bill effectually guards the interests of the Government.
Mr. TALBERT. The Government will not be called upon to pay any back indebtedness?

Mr. McMILLIN. Not at all.

Mr. TALBERT. The Government, then, is expected to make only such an appropriation as will pay for its own exhibit?

Mr. McMILLIN. The bill does not look to anything beyond that, and that expenditure is not to be made until the buildings have been constructed and the success of the enterprise is thereby assured. I have before me, to be examined by members, pictures of the buildings. They are most beautiful, appropriate, and complete. I doubt if the same amount of money has ever, at any exposition of this country, been turned to greater advantage or resulted in more beautiful structures.

Mr. TALBERT. And the Government will dispose of its own

mr. TALBERT. And the Government will dispose of its own buildings as it sees proper?

Mr. McMILLIN. The bill provides that the buildings which may be erected by the Government shall be sold and the money covered into the Treasury.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How large an appropriation is asked?

Mr. McMILLIN. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be required. That is the amount, all told, so much thereof as may be required. That is the amount, all told, of possible expenditure.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to record my protest against this bill, as I have recorded it against all similar bills since I have been a member of this House. A little more than twenty years ago Congress was first induced to make an appropriation of this kind. At that time there was a very general opposition to such a measure; but it was urged that inasmuch as the appropriation then asked was for the centennial celebra-tion to be held at Philadelphia a similar occasion could not arise for one hundred years. I believe that such was the statement of Mr. Randall himself. I remember, too, that Hon. John Randolph Tucker, then a member from Virginia, predicted during that debate that the measure then about to pass would become a precedent, and that instead of that being the only one of its kind to be passed for one hundred years it would soon happen that there would be such a measure every year. In twenty years we have lived to see his prediction fulfilled. Last year I saw this House pass a bill appropriating something more than $200,000 to assist in holding an exposition of this kind in the city of Omaha, and it actually passed the bill without reading it.

Mr. MERCER. The bill was read.

Mr. BAILEY. It was read at first: but it was not read when it was put upon its passage. The truth is, I was at lunch; and the gentlemen interested in passing the measure, fearing that I might be back before the reading of the bill was finished, passed it without reading. And here at the very next session of this same Congress, within six months, we are asked to make another appropriation for the purpose of holding another centennial exposition.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrogate him?

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. MAHON. Does not the gentleman know that the million and the content of the conte

Does not the gentleman know that the million Mr. MAHON. dollars appropriated by the General Government for the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia in 1876 was paid back with interest?

Mr. BAILEY. The Government loaned $1,500,000, and was obliged to sue in order to compel its repayment.

Mr. CANNON. I presume the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] desires to be accurate.

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. CANNON. There was a loan of a million or a million and a half of dollars to assist in that exposition, which amount was repaid; but the Government put up its own buildings at its own expense, and made its own exhibit, just as it proposes to do here. The Philadelphia exhibit, the Chicago exhibit, and the Atlanta exhibit cost much more than this is to cost. exhibit cost much more than this is to cost.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no question about the fact that the loan of $1,500,000 was repaid under legal proceedings. I am not loan of $1,500,000 mistaken about that, mistaken about that,

Mr. CANNON. Well, it came back into the Treasury.
Mr. BAILEY. It came back under legal compulsion.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it came back into the Treasury.

Mr. BAILEY. It came back under legal compulsion.

Mr. Speaker, I have no expectation that the course which has been entered upon will ever be reversed. I expect that before we are through with this matter all the towns and cities in the land will have the benefit of similar appropriations, and when we finish the circle, I expect to see it made a second time, until within fifty years, at a moderate estimate, $50,000,000 will have been expended by the Government for purposes of this kind.

Now, if appropriations of this sort are justified upon the ground that in this way the Government is assisting in the education of the people, I do not hesitate to say that I would rather spend the same money in the maintenance of common schools—a proposition to which I am utterly opposed; but if the Government is going to to which I am utterly opposed; but if the Government is going to undertake to educate the people, let us educate those who need it most. Let us go out and take those who are ignorant and try to dispel the darkness from their minds. The people who attend these expositions are as a rule people who are able to travel—people who see something of the world anyway—people who do not need this kind of education. Appropriations of this sort are a gratuity of the covernment and though I have no how a first on the part of the Government, and though I have no hope of preventing them, I must protest against them.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the first appropriation of this kind was, I believe, for the exposition at Philadelphia; then there were two or three small appropriations until the Chicago appropriation was reached. That was a great appropriation; and it was a great exposition. Following upon that came the Atlanta Exposition. I advocated and voted for the Atlanta appropriation. When that point had been reached, I was quite content to quit. It seemed to me we had come to a point where we ought to quit. But then the appropriation for Omaha went through; and it seems to me, as that went through, that this has quite as much merit, and it is for another portion of the country. I, however, hope that in the future the House will stop making appropriations of this kind, or if we are to do anything, that we confine ourselves simply to the country of the country furnishing our own exhibit.

Mr. LOUD. Why not stop now? Is not this as good a time as yet I would dislike very much to have the idea presented and accepted here that the Government of the United States proposes to go to the expense of aiding any purely State exposition by making the Government exhibit contemplated in this bill, at an expenditure of $130,000.

Up to the present time I think all of the appropriations that have been made by Congress for this purpose have been for expositions international, or at least national, in their character; and the appropriations for them have been justified on the ground that they were rather of an international or interstate character that they were rather of an international or interstate character than as relating purely to any State.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman is entirely correct in that. The proposed exhibit at Nashville is of that character. Invitations have been extended to all countries to participate.

Mr. DINGLEY. I so understand.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. This exposition will be known as the Tennessee Centennial and International Exposition.

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course, Mr. Speaker, everyone will see at once the danger of making appropriations for purely State expositions.

sitions.

This bill provides for foreign exhibits as well as for the exhibits from the various States in the Union, and is for that reason rather of an international character. But I should not care to have it go forth that we had started out on the plan of aiding a purely State exposition. It must be international, or at least national, in character to justify such action on our part. And while I am not going to enter into the question of the wisdom of these appropriations, yet it must be conceded by all that such expositions, within the proper sphere, do subserve a great national purpose. There is no doubt of that; but care must be taken that a misapprehension in regard to the action of Congress in such matters may not exist among the people that we will participate in and appropriate for a purely State exposition, or even an exposition on narrower grounds where people come and ask the Government's aid for a Government exhibit. We must put it on the higher ground that it is purely national or international, as I have already Further, these expositions are not supposed to be multiplying until they cover every State in the Union. In the Omaha case, as I am informed, twenty-five States claimed to be interested. In the present instance the various States of the Union are invited to participate, as well as the governments of foreign nations.

But I only desired at this time to enter a caveat against the idea that we are aiding, by Government expenditure, a purely State exhibit.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word by way of explanation to the House. This Tennessee Centennial and International Exposition is not a local or mere State affair. The citizens of the State have already subscribed and expended some $400,000 in the inauguration of this enterprise. We will make a great success of it ourselves, but what we want is to have the Government help us to make it a still greater success. We expect to have people and exhibits from all of the States of the Union as well as from abroad. They are already asking for space from all parts of the country, which is being assigned to them, and, with the exception of the Chicago Exposition, we intend to make this the greatest State and International Exposition ever held in this country.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will not the gentleman except the Philadelphia Exposition?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Well, I doubt very much whether we will not make it a greater success even than that. We intend to make it a great success. It is already a great success as far to make it a great success. It is already a great success as far as we have gone, and now all we want is the Government's blessing that it shall be even a greater success,

Mr. DOCKERY. It would be cheaper for us to give you the Government's benediction. That would save something like $130,000. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, a single word with reference to the criticism of my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that it would not be proper for the Government of the United States to appropriate money for participation in what might be a

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman asks, "Why not stop now?"
He might have put that question when Omaha was asking an appropriation.
Mr. BAILEY. I tried at that time to have the House stop.
Mr. DOCKERY. Gentlemen ask, "Why not stop now?" In view of the activity manifested by the Tennessee delegation on both sides of this Chamber, I think gentlemen must realize that it would be difficult to do that. I simply desire to say that I am opposed to this bill.
Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken, I desire to make a single observation.
The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMillin], in speaking of this proposed exposition at Nashville, alluded to it as being the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Tennessee into the Union. While that is true in point of time,

Our own buildings have been already erected and completed in a large measure. The grounds have been graded and beautified, trees planted, walks and drives macadamized. In fact, all the necessary preparations have been finished to make this exposition a grand success. A plat of ground has been allotted for the Government building, and if this bill should not pass and the Government should fail to participate in our centennial exposition, that plat of ground will remain unoccupied, and on it will stand a board bearing the inscription: "This space reserved for the United States Government building and exhibit."

The people of Tennessee, individually and by counties and cities

The people of Tennessee, individually and by counties and cities and corporations, have subscribed and paid $458,943.77 to the capital stock of the exposition company. The remaining $41,056.23 and corporations, have subscribed and paid $458,943.77 to the capital stock of the exposition company. The remaining $41,056.23 necessary to meet the requirements of the proposed appropriation by Congress will be raised within the next ten days, $9,000 of that amount having been already pledged. The passage of this bill will inspire our people with new energy and stimulate them to further effort. In addition to the already large, commodious, and handsome buildings that have been completed, the management propose at once to begin the construction of three or four other buildings, in order to meet the daily increasing demand for more space by exhibitors. more space by exhibitors.

One word more. The centennial exposition will open its doors complete in every detail on the 1st of May, 1897. If the Government is to have an exhibit there, it is vital that this measure should pass now in order to insure sufficient time to erect the Governpass now in order to insure sumcient time to erect the Government building and to prepare properly the various objects in the several Departments which will form the exhibit.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, Mr. Bailey demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 127, nays 25.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I believe a bill like this ought not to be passed with less than a quorum, and I make the point of no quorum. It will save time if the gentleman will give us the yeas and nays. I would have demanded the yeas and nays except that and nays. I would have demanded the yeas and nays except that I did not desire to waive the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Bailey] makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER (after counting the House). One hundred and eighty-six members present-a quorum. The ayes have it, and the bill is passed.

On motion of Mr. McCALL of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rules to submit a report, and upon it I ask the previous

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] submits the following report from the Committee on Rules, on which he asks for the previous question. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 439, have had the same under consideration, and hereby report the following substitute therefor:

"Resolved, That on Tuesday, January 5, 1897, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. No. 4566, a bill to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter; that said bill shall be considered under the rules governing general debate during the said day and the following day, January 6, until the hour of 2 p. m., at which time general debate shall close, and said bill shall then be open to amendment and consideration under the five-minute rule until 4 p. m., at which time the committee shall rise and report the bill and pending amendments to the House. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the pending amendments and bill to its final passage."

Nr. OULGG. Mr. Speaker.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker— Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for the previous question.

Mr. QUIGG. Do I understand that the rule allows two days of general debate?

Mr. McMILLIN. In order that the right may not be waived, I will ask the gentleman to consent that a second be considered as ordered-

Mr. HENDERSON. I demanded the previous question when I presented the report

Mr. McMILLIN (continuing). Otherwise all debate will be cut off.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for the previous question, which, if ordered before any debate is had, would give twenty minutes' debate on a side.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hen-

Mr. HENDERSON. Let us have the previous question ordered, and then I will answer your question. The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] asked me a question, but I could not hear him.
Mr. QUIGG. I inquired, Mr. Speaker, whether this rule gave two days for general debate. I did not quite understand the reading but the Clark.

ing by the Clerk.

Mr. HENDERSON. It gives one day for general debate and until 2 o'clock on the next day; then from 2 until 4 o'clock on the second day for debate and amendment under the five-minute rule; then the amendments and the bill to be voted upon, the previous question being considered as ordered.

Mr. QUIGG. May I inquire whether the time for general debate is not a little problematical under the rule?

Mr. HENDERSON. Not at all.

Mr. QUIGG. When does the time for general debate begin?

Mr. HENDERSON, Immediately after the reading of the Jour-

Mr. QUIGG. When does the time for general debate begin?
Mr. HENDERSON. Immediately after the reading of the Journal. There is no opportunity to cut off the time that is set.
Mr. QUIGG. I did not hear the reading very distinctly.
The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.
Mr. CANNON. Is the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] opposed to the bill?
Mr. QUIGG. I am opposed to the bill in its present form.
Mr. CANNON. Well, if that is so, would had a better way to manifest that opposition be to let the bill take its chances along with the other business of the House, instead of being considered under the special order? As I understand the special order, it gives general debate for one day, and on the next day until 2 o'clock, and then two hours for amendment, which practically means no amendment. If the gentleman is really opposed, and if other members are really opposed to it in its present shape, and if it ought to be considered and amended, and defeated or passed, as the case may be, it can not be done except under the ordinary rules of the House. It is the bill or nothing, practically, under the special order. I call the gentleman's attention to that fact.
Mr. HENDERSON. I reserve the balance of my time.
Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, this bill is, as the gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] described it the other day, undoubtedly the most important piece of general legislation that is coming before Congress during this session. It makes very radical changes in the postal laws. I do not propose to discuss the bill now, except as to one or two features which the House ought to bear in mind when it comes to vote on this rule.
The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] suggests that under bear in mind when it comes to vote on this rule.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] suggests that under The gentleman from liminos [Mr. Cannon] suggests that under this rule we have got to vote for the bill or nothing, and if that is so—I could not hear the reading of the rule very well—I shall have to vote against the rule. This bill makes very extraordinary changes in the present postal laws, which the gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] says are in the interest of economy. I doubt it very much. The statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] that this bill will see the California [Mr. Loud] that this bill will see the California [Mr. Loud] the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] that this bill will see the California [Mr. Loud] the statement of the gentleman from California doubt it very much. The statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] that this bill will save to the Treasury the sum of from $20,000,000 to $40,000,000 is to my mind utterly, prodigiously absurd. Mr. Wanamaker, when Postmaster-General, figured out in dollars and cents what this bill would save if it had figured out in dollars and cents what this bill would save if it had then been the law; and he figured out that $1,000,000 would be saved on what is called the "sample-copy" privilege, and that $1,100,000 would be saved on what is called the "periodical" privilege. So that the estimate of the Postmaster-General at that time was that that bill would save $2,100,000. I can very easily demonstrate that the bill will cost a great deal more than that in the revenues of the Government in first-class matter and fourthclass matter, which, as the gentleman from California says, are the paying branches of the service, and which are greatly increased from the results of the second-class circulation.

This bill also confers upon the Postmaster-General most extraor-dinary powers. We now have in the postal laws twenty pages dinary powers. We now have in the postal laws twenty pages of regulations, which have all the effect of statute law, for every twenty lines of law. The powers we have already equipped the Postmaster-General with are so vast that he does not hesitate to make a law every time he needs one; and the present Postmaster-General says that if we do not pass this bill he will make it into law by simply writing out an order to postmasters. The gentleman from California read to us the other day what might be described as a rather bold statement on the part of the Postmaster-General. He thought it proper to tell us that if we do not give him this bill he will give it to himself. That is the way, I admit, that most of the important regulations now in the book of postal laws were brought into existence; and this bill confers upon the Postmaster-General much larger powers.

General much larger power

How much time have I, Mr. Speaker? The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used five minutes of his

Mr. QUIGG. This bill proposes to confer upon the Postmaster-General very much larger powers. The characteristics of mail matter as described in the law are added to in this bill in various ways, so that the Postmaster-General is empowered to say, for example, that the publication shall be ruled out of the mails because the persons claimed by the publisher as subscribers were not "voluntary" subscribers. Actually, this bill equips the Postmaster-General with power to say, "Your subscribers did not submaster-General with power to say, "Your subscribers did not sub-scribe voluntarily, and consequently you can not send your publi-cations through the mails as second-class matter." There are various other large grants of power in this bill. The postmaster can say what is a "periodical." At present the law assumes to say what a "periodical" is, and describes exactly what qualifications a publication must have in order to be considered a periodical. Unapublication must have in order to be considered a periodical. Under the bill that we are to consider under this rule the Postmaster-General is entitled to say what a "periodical" is, and if he does not like the looks of it or objects to the looks of the editor or the publisher, he can rule it out of the mails by a stroke of his pen.

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this bill ought to be considered very carefully. There is no objection that I know of to the bill com-

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this bill ought to be considered very carefully. There is no objection that I know of to the bill coming up, to its being debated, to its being acted upon in the ordinary way. There was no objection the other day to its consideration, provided the gentleman from California would consent to wait until the day following, in order that the facts and figures that we had in connection with this bill might be looked up a little. When he came here with a proposition to take up this bill, nobody had heard anything of it, and the bill had not been thought of since last summer, in the last session; and the gentleman proposed to take it up straightway. It had been six months since I had looked at any of the collection of documents that I have received from publishers and others interested in the mail service. I was from publishers and others interested in the mail service. I was from publishers and others interested in the mail service. I was not ready to go on, and the protest that was made then was addressed simply to going on at that particular hour of that particular day. But, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to go on at any time now. The gentleman does not need this rule. There is going to be no filibustering against his bill or the consideration of it; and I hope he will not insist upon a rule which is so sharp as this seems to be in regard to the time of debate. A rule that would simply bring the matter forward at a particular time, a rule that it should be considered until it was disposed of, and disposed of within a time long enough to give us a fair debate, I would be willing to support, but a drastic rule of this character would be willing to support, but a drastic rule of this character is certainly unnecessary.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to have two or three minutes.

Mr. QUIGG. I yield the gentleman the balance of my time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman from the Committee on Rules who has presented this rule a question. Does not the bill called the Loud bill stand before the House as unfished becomes and would it not come up immediately after the morning. business, and would it not come up immediately after the morning hour each day unless set aside by an appropriation bill or some vote of the House upon some other legislative proposition?

Mr. HENDERSON. It stands as unfinished business after the morning hour, but under that head we might never reach it. The members of the Committee on Rules thought that a bill which the House had expressed its desire to consider should be brought up for consideration at such a time as would enable it to become law if it is to be stamped with the favorable action of this House, and we might never be able to reach it should its present status continue.

Mr. BINGHAM. My objection to the bill is this: The Postmaster-General presumes that this is most important legislation.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman is speaking in his own time, is he not, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has been recognized for the remainder of the time of the gentleman from New York.

mr. BINGHAM. The Postmaster-General assumes that this is most important legislation, and in connection with that assumption he states in his annual report that if this legislation is not enacted by Congress, he shall proceed under existing law to literally almost carry out the paragraphs contained in the Loud bill. Mr. LOUD. Only one of them.

Mr. BINGHAM. Only one of them. The gentleman says that the Postmaster-General's statement has reference to but one of the the Postmaster-General's statement has reference to but one of the paragraphs of his bill. He does not so state it in his report. However, if the Postmaster-General can, by regulation in his Department and by construction of existing statutes, do this, there must ment and by construction of existing statutes, do this, there must be a neglect on his part in the performance of his duty, and I do not think that this House should hasten or expedite him in doing that which under the existing law he has authority to do. What I want in this case is the fullest debate. If this rule will give us full debate with full opportunity for amendment, I am for the rule; but I desire the rule to be so framed that under it this bill can be amended to meet what are called, and what may properly be called, inroads on the service, which the Postmaster-General can not meet by a ruling, but which, he claims, put the Government to great expense in carrying through the mails matter not authorized by law. My only inquiry, therefore, is whether this rule will give us full opportunity to make changes in this proposed legislation

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the question before us is not whether the House shall pass what is known as the Loud bill, but whether they shall consider it in a particular way. The importance of this proposed legislation is conceded on all hands, objections are made to the adoption of this rule. The obj The objection objections are made to the adoption of this rule. The objection made by my colleague [Mr. Bingham] who has just taken his seat is that the bill has already been under consideration by this House, and constitutes now an item of unfinished business. While that is true, it is unfinished business in the second morning hour, and my friend knows that the first morning hour, under the rules of this House, is a morning hour of indefinite duration, so that the chances are that this bill may not come up for a very long time.

Therefore, if it is to be considered at all, it ought to be considered so that if it pass the House it can go to the Senate and receive prompt action there. The other objection made to the rule is that there is not sufficient time allowed.

Now, this bill contains practically but a single proposition. It relates to second-class matter. It is not a long bill, and very little time will be required to consider amendments which will put it in such shape as gentlemen opposing it, or as the House, may desire, and besides, the bill has already been discussed the greater part of a day. In addition to all that, the House must remember that this is the short session, and that there are other bills of pressing importance brought to the attention of the Committee on Rules every day and time asked for their consideration. It is the intenevery day and time asked for their consideration. It is the intention of the committee, immediately after this shall have been disposed of, to present another rule fixing a time for the consideration of the funding bill. The committee took into consideration all the suggestions that have been made up to this time, and were clear in the opinion that, considering the character of this bill and the consideration that it had already had, sufficient time was allowed by the rule as reported, and I trust that the opponents of this bill will not attempt to shut off its consideration by the House in an orderly manner.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my

Mr. LOUD. I ask the gentleman to yield me two or three minutes minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I think the rule proposed by the committee is a most liberal one, allowing seven hours for general debate and two hours for amendments. No one knows better than the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] that there are but two propositions in this bill. There are but two objections that can possibly be raised by either of those gentlemen. Hence there are but two provisions in the bill that they would even seek to amend, and it seems to me that two hours is a liberal time for amendments after the bill shall have received seven hours' debate.

Some of the statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] seem to be wild and misleading, as I assume they will be in the future. The chairman of the Post-Office Committee has made no statement that this bill will save from twenty to will be in the future. The chairman of the Post-Office Committee has made no statement that this bill will save from twenty to forty million dollars a year. The claim that he has made (which I have repeated to many gentlemen) is that this bill will probably save $10,000,000 a year. Speaking of the loss on the transmission of second-class matter, the chairman has said that the amount was from twenty to forty million dollars, but we do not propose by this bill to wipe out the second-class matter and to throw it all into the third-class, and therefore the saving will not amount to any such sum. The statement by Postmaster-General Wanamaker, to which the gentleman refers, was that the loss in 1892 was about $2,200,000, but if the gentleman wants to be honest, he will see that that statement is incorrect and misleading, because wall see that that statement is incorrect and misleading, because at that time the Postmaster-General estimated that it cost only 3 cents a pound to handle and transmit this matter. If he will take the Postmaster-General's own figures, he will find that that statement or estimate of $2,200,000 was based upon an estimated cost of 2 cents a pound for transmission and handling. Postmaster-General Wanamaker made no statement or estimate of what it would cost to transmit this matter at 12 cents a pound. No Postwould cost to transmit this matter at 12 cents a pound. No Post-master-General until the present one—I say it with confidence— ever anticipated that it would cost 8 cents a pound to transmit all classes of mail matter.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. QUIGG. I call the gentleman's attention to page 185 of the RECORD.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the gentleman from New York

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] will not consume our time.

Mr. QUIGG. I have the permission of the gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] to ask him a question. He challenged a statement which I had made. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] need not be solicitous. The gentleman from California can take care of himself, I presume. I call the attention of the gentleman from California to these words of his on page 185 of the RECORD:

At the lowest calculation, there is involved in this bill a saving to the Government of $20,000,000 per annum.

I wish to say that is the statement to which I alluded.

Mr. LOUD. The statement, I think, must have been incorrectly reported. All that I have ever argued was that the amount would reach $10,000,000. I am willing to state that I believe the amount would really reach $20,000,000; but I do not believe that I have ever made that claim publicly. If I have, it has been a slip of the tongue. I have desired to put the matter very conservatively, and therefore have limited the statement to $10,000,000.

I do not think there would have been any occasion for this rule if

I do not think there would have been any occasion for this rule if we were not compelled to take into consideration the action of some gentlemen in this House, particularly the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], who said on the evening when we had this bill up for consideration:

I would have voted with the gentleman to take it up to-morrow. I will vote with him at any time to take up for consideration legislation on this subject.

That statement was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania,

I supposed, in good faith.

Mr. BINGHAM. "The gentleman from Pennsylvania" makes no change in that statement. "The gentleman from Pennsylvania" asked the gentleman in charge of the bill to give the House vania "asked the gentleman in charge of the bill to give the House such information as would enable us to act intelligently on the subject. I want the gentleman's legislation considered; I am perfectly willing to have it considered at any time.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman will bear in mind that he made that statement on the evening when we had this measure up for consideration. Yet he knows that he has blocked by the legislative appropriation bill the further consideration of this measure. I look simply at results, without considering the language that gentlemen may use.

Mr. BINGHAM. I told the gentleman in the decate that evening that I was instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to bring forward the legislative bill.

Mr. LOUD. That is something that the gentleman thought of subsequently, for further down in the report of the debate I see he made that statement.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from California has met with no antagonism from me, and I do not propose to be placed in a false position. Mr. LOUD. false position.

Mr. LOUD. I have only quoted the gentleman's language.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am in favor of considering the legislation which the gentleman proposes. I want it fully considered.

Mr. LOUD. Then let us go ahead under this rule, which I think is abundantly liberal.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining on this side?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do gentlemen on the other side desire to Do gentlemen on the other side desire to Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do gentlemen on the other side desire to say anything further?

Mr. QUIGG. I think not.

Mr. HENDERSON. In closing this discussion, I wish simply to say that this is a brief bill of three pages. Its consideration has already occupied a part of one day. By the proposed rule we give it practically two more days; and, with the work which the House has the consideration we have given this bill all the time. has to consider, we believe we have given this bill all the time that it would seem we can afford to give it. We have put this bill forward because it may never be reached under the ordinary rules; and after the decided expression which the House has already given in respect to and in favor of the bill, and with the already given in respect to and in favor of the bill, and with the information before us that its passage is going to make a large saving to the Government, the Committee on Rules unanimously felt that they should allow the House an opportunity to act upon it without any unreasonable delay. We bring this proposed rule forward now so that gentlemen of the House, if the rule be adopted, may know that this measure will come up immediately offer the helidary reason. after the holiday recess. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution reported by the Committee on Rules, it was agreed to; there being on a division (called for by Mr. Quigg)—ayes 102, noes 2.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents a privileged report, which will be read.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Committee on Rules have instructed me to present the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Thursday, January 7, 1897, immediately after reading the Journal, the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. No. 8189, entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act, and other acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and to provide for the settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain railroads, and to secure the payment of all indebtedness to the United States of certain companies therein mentioned; that said bill shall be considered under the rules governing general debate during the said day and the day following until the hour of 5 o'clock p. m., at which time general debate shall close, and then said bill shall be open to amendment and consideration under the five-minute rule until 5 o'clock p. m., the following day, at which time the committee shall rise and report the bill and pending amendments to the House. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the pending amendments and the bill to its final passage; and the final vote thereon shall be taken immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday, January II.

Mr. HENDERSON. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, January 7, 8, and 9, and Monday following to vote.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Thursday, the 7th of January?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, the 7th; immediately after the readof the Journal.

I would like to ask a question. If the amendments to be offered on Saturday to this bill are not sunicent to consume the day, which that time be occupied by general debate?

Mr. HENDERSON. We have two days for general debate and one for debate under the five-minute rule, when amendments will be in order, and Monday of the following week the vote will be taken, which practically allows four days for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. You can consume all the time on Saturday by formal amendments, moving to strike out the last word, etc., and debate

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. HUBBARD. Does the adoption of this report preclude a motion to recommit the bill?

Mr. HENDERSON. No; certainly not. That is a right reserved under the rules.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for me to say very much about the bill. The bill referred to in the resolution is what is known as the Pacific funding bill; and the only question before the House in considering the rule now is, Shall we take this matter up and consider it at all? It does not involve, in discussing the pending order, a discussion of the merits of the bill; and when we vote for this rule for the consideration of the bill it does not necessarily imply that afterwards it will involve the voting for the bill in question. The member reserves to himself the right to vote as he pleases on the passage of the bill.

I want to say that we have consulted—the Committee on Rules have consulted—with gentlemen entertaining opposite views in respect to the legislation proposed here, and we have endeavored to fix the time so as to meet the views of both sides, and give such time as is necessary to a full, candid, and fair consideration of

You will see that under the rule we give Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, after the disposition of the Loud bill, by the rule just adopted in the House, for discussing the Pacific funding bill and the amendments that may be offered; and on Monday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the vote on the bill and amendments and such substitute as may be offered is to be taken.

Mr. DOCKERY, Tudor the rule as a presented will there be seen.

amendments and such substitute as may be offered is to be taken.

Mr. DOCKERY. Under the rule as presented will there be an opportunity to offer a substitute?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly; because amendments are permitted, and a substitute is an amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the opportunity under the rule will not present itself unless the last section of the bill is reached.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me, I will state to my friend from Missouri that a substitute may be offered, but not voted upon until the time fixed.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is correct.

Now, a few words as to the question whether we should consider the bill or not. The subsidy bonds covered by the bill amount, I understand, to over $61,000,000. The amount of indebtedness on the 1st of next January will be, in round numbers, $111,000,000. The Government has a second lien for this on 2,293.4 miles of railroad, with the appurtenant property of the road. All of the prior The Government has a second lien for this on 2,293.4 miles of railroad, with the appurtenant property of the road. All of the prior liens upon the property remain unpaid, and hence the amount involved in the question to be considered is the Government claim, plus the prior liens, amounting in all to over $172,000,000.

The President tells us in his message that on January 1, 1897, there will be due on the bonds of the road $19,000,000, and by

January 1, 1899, an additional amount of more than $41,000,000. It is contended—I do not know with what truth—that if a fore-closure is had the Government will realize but very little out of its claim. That, I trust, is a point on which we will have ample discussion and full light, if the bill is to be considered. But it has been pressed upon us by the executive officers of the Government again and again that in order to protect the interests of the Government Congress should act, and by some method, either an extension of the time, a reduction of interest, or some other means, adopt a form of procedure or adjustment whereby all the claim of the Government can be ultimately secured. I desire to call the attention of the House to a few recommendations bearing upon the question of whether we should consider it, and on that question only. The Commissioner of Railroads, in his report for 1884, calls special attention to the subject and gives his idea of a remedy. On February 15, 1886, the President transmitted a communication to Congress on the subject, with the report of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railway Company. Of so great importance was the subject deemed that on March 3, 1887, an act of Congress was passed authorizing the appointment of three commissioners to investigate the whole subject of the relations of the bond-aided railroads to the Govern-ment. On January 17, 1888, President Cleveland transmitted the report of that Commission, known as the Pacific Railroad Commission, to Congress, closing his message with these words: The public interest urges prompt and efficient action.

In his annual message to Congress to the second session of the

Fiftieth Congress President Cleveland said:

Fiftieth Congress President Cleveland said:

The adjustment of the relations between the Government and the railroad companies (receiving bond aid) should receive early attention. The report of a majority of the commissioners appointed to examine the affairs and indebtedness of these roads, in which they favor an extension of the time of payment of such indebtedness in at least one case where the corporation appears to be able to comply with the well-guarded and exact terms of such extension, and the reenforcement of this opinion by gentlemen of undoubted business judgment and experience, appointed to protect the interests of the Government as directors of said corporation, may well lead to the belief that such an extension would be to the advantage of the Government.

The subject should be treated as a business proposition, with a view to a final realization of its indebtedness by the Government, rather than as a question to be decided upon prejudice or by way of punishment for previous wrongdoing.

To the first session of the Fifty-first Congress President Harrison

To the first session of the Fifty-first Congress President Harrison transmitted approvingly the report of the Secretary of the Interior, in which it is said:

Another question of great importance, etc., which it is necessary for the Fifty-first Congress to take up, and which I recommend to your earnest consideration, is that in regard to the debt rapidly maturing in favor of the United States against those Pacific railroads that received aid from the Government, etc. (Page 84.)

No recommendation is necessary further than that it should receive early and earnest attention as one of the most important subjects to be dealt with. The particulars of the settlement may be wisely left to Congress.

To the second session of the Fifty-first Congress President Harrison transmitted the report of the Secretary of the Interior, indors-The Secretary said:

The Commissioner of Railroads adheres to the opinion given in his last report that it will be necessary to extend the time in which the railroads may meet their obligations to the Government.

The subject was fully discussed by the present Secretary in his last annual report; the views then expressed are still retained.

In his annual message to the first session of the Fifty-second Congress President Harrison said:

A large part of the debt is now fast approaching maturity with no adequate provision for its payment. Some policy for dealing with the debt with a view to its ultimate collection should be at once adopted.

Observe the words "no adequate provision for its payment."

To the second session of the Fifty-second Congress President Harrison said as to the subsidy bond debt:

We must deal with the question as we find it, and take that course which will, under existing conditions, best secure the interests of the United States.

And he renews his recommendation of last year-

That a commission with full power be appointed to make settlement

To the second session of the Fifty-third Congress the President, To the second session of the Firty-third Congress the President, indorsing generally the Department recommendation, transmitted the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior, wherein that officer recommended action by Congress on the subject, and referred approvingly to the report of the Government directors, calling attention to the approaching maturity of the subsidy bond debt and renewing the recommendation so frequently made by their predecessors for a prompt and compete adjustment of the financial relations between the reilread companies and the United financial relations between the railroad companies and the United

In his message to the third session of the Fifty-third Congress, December 3, 1894, President Cleveland refers to this subject, espe-cially as to the Union Pacific Company, as—

Of pressing moment.

And he continues:

Not to enact the needed enabling legislation at the present session post-pones the whole matter until the assembling of a new Congress, and inevi-tably increases all the complications of the situation, and could not but be regarded as a signal failure to solve the problem, which has practically been before the present Congress ever since its organization.

In the first paragraph of his message to the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress the President indorses the recommendations of the Department officials.

Mr. Secretary Smith devoted a large space to the subject, and cressed upon Congress the necessity of action on the subject.

In his message to this session of Congress the President says:

The Secretary calls attention to the public interests involved in an adjustment of the obligations of the Pacific railroads to the Government. I deem it to be an important duty to especially present this subject to the consideration of the Congress.

Then he follows with a statement in regard to the indebtedness, closing his reference to it with these words:

Therefore, unless Congress shall otherwise direct or shall have previously determined upon a different solution of the problem, there will hardly appear to exist any reason for delaying beyond the date of the default above mentioned such Executive action as will promise to serve the public interests and save the Government from the loss threatened from further inaction.

I might quote further from the report of the Attorney-General, from the Commissioner of Railroads, and from different sources in respect to the importance of action. Now the time has come when Congress should treat this matter, or it will go from our hands and be treated by the executive officers of the Government.

The Committee on Rules, urged by the people's interests and by these different officers of the Government, have unanimously brought in this rule, so that the House might have an opportunity brought in this rule, so that the House might have an opportunity to determine whether or not it will take up this question and consider it. If they decide to consider it, then they must determine whether or not it is their intention to confess to the country that they have not the ability to bring forward a remedy by legislation. It may be that when this is considered no method can be pointed out that will show how the Government can save this vast sum of money. That is a matter for discussion, but at all events every Representative should have the courage to let this matter come up for full consideration and discussion, and see whether or not we can save these many millions to the country, or whether not we can save these many millions to the country, or whether we must abandon them to the chance of foreclosure, knowing a prior lien is upon every dollar of that which we have a second

I reserve the balance of my time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I realize that under the drastic rules of this House it is useless to oppose the report of the Committee on Rules giving and fixing time for the consideration of I am well aware that under the rules of the House cloture, which the committee invokes for the bill, applies to the consideration of the report, and I know also that a number of gentlemen who are opposed to the bill will not vote against the committee on this question.

committee on this question.

But, sir, I can not permit the statement just made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Henderson] to pass unchallenged. Several of his statements are misleading and some of them absolutely erroneous. The Government is not menaced by any such danger as the gentleman suggests. It is not the interest of the Government, but the interest of the debtor companies that are to be promoted by the Powers bill. The Government is amply proceedings will shortly be instituted, unless Congress as a favor to the defaulting companies shall relieve them from their obligations under that act by extending the time for the payment of the debt.

That the companies interested should be anxious to have the bill brought on speedily for consideration is quite natural, because brought on speedily for consideration is quite natural, because their interests are to be promoted by it, but the interests of the their interests are to be promoted by it, but the interests of the United States Government are now protected by the best safe-guard of which existing conditions will permit, namely, the right of foreclosure and such rights as it may have to pursue diverted assets and the unpaid subscriptions of stockholders. The provisions of the Thurman Act are far better for the Government than the proposed refunding act. The Thurman Act was a settlement of the Pacific Railroad question. It presented the alternative to the companies to pay or submit to foreclosure. They did not pay, and this urgent proposition is to relieve them of the alternative. That is all. The only defect so far developed in the Thurman Act is that it does not vest jurisdiction in any particular court (nor, in my opinion, any court) over the interests of the United States Government in the roads. Government in the roads.

If any change of existing law is needed, it is that jurisdiction be vested in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or some other particular court, to adjudicate and determine the interests of the Government in the roads.

interests of the Government in the roads.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Henderson] says that the question is how to get the most money for the Government. That question should properly be discussed when the bill is up for consideration on its merits. It is the question presented by the bill. That may be the ultimate question, but the gentleman is mistaken in stating that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Smith, suggested that refunding is the best method. He did not. He stated before the House committee and testified before the Senate committee that, in his opinion, foreclosure was the best means of getting the most money for the Government out of these roads. Messrs.

Anderson and Coombs, Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, who have investigated the matter fully, in like manner stated and testified that, in their opinion, foreclosure is the best method of procedure for the protection of the Government.

Mr. Coombs, Government director of the Union Pacific Railroad, testified before the Senate committee, and stated before the House committee that $120,000,000 can be obtained by foreclosure House committee that $120,000,000 can be obtained by foreclosure sale of these two roads, which would net the Government about $60,000,000. This is about $40,000,000 more than it will ever get if the bill now proposed to be given consideration shall pass. Mr. Anderson, Government director of the Union Pacific Railroad and author of the majority report of the Pacific Railway Commission, in which refunding was recommended, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Henderson], testified before the Senate committee, during its hearings last spring, that he had changed his mind on that subject, and that in his opinion foreclosure and not refunding was the best remedy.

The gentleman refers to the President's message to Congress at the opening of the present session, urging action, or, rather, declar-

The gentleman refers to the President's message to Congress at the opening of the present session, urging action, or, rather, declaring that if action be not taken by Congress by the 1st of January next there would seem then to be no further reason for delaying foreclosure proceedings. It seems to me that neither this House nor the country has anything to fear from that alternative. The House and the country may well permit every reason which has heretofore influenced the President to delay foreclosure proceedings to be removed by the failure of further Congressional action in the interest of these companies in the interest of these companies.

Let the course of judicial procedure ordinarily adopted in such cases among citizens be followed.

For my part, I am not only opposed to the bill, but opposed to the consideration of any such measure. It is neither necessary nor useful.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.
The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.
On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I call for the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has a motion that he desires to make to reconsider.
Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, in the vote of the House yesterday upon the report of the Committee on Accounts there were several items included, and I desire to move to reconsider the vote

The SPEAKER. Very well. The gentleman enters a motion to reconsider, which will be pending.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BINGMAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. A parliamentary inquiry. I understand that there are some messages from the Senate that have not yet been submitted to the House. If the regular order is called for, would not those messages come before the House at the next for, would not those messages come before the House at the next step?

The SPEAKER. They would, if the House ottes down the proposition to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not want to do that. I ask unanimous consent that the message from the Senate pertaining to the immigration bill may be disposed of; and on that I simply desire to say that questions of this character have been defeated by the simple exigencies of events, and if we can not get this matter disposed of now, it is likely it will not be disposed of at all. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that we return to the regular order, to have the question of the message from the Senate relating to the immigration bill disposed of.

Mr. KIEFER. I object.

Mr. BINGHAM. What does the gentleman wish? Simply the appointment of a committee of conference?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is all; or a reference to a committee. It will not take ten minutes' time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am perfectly willing. If it is simply for the appointment of conferees or reference to a committee, I will appointment of conferees or reference to a committee, I will not take ten minutes' time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will simply say, Mr. Chairman, that the extension of time proposed in this amendment has been determined after correspondence with the Attorney-General, and is approved by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States courts, Indian Territory: For salaries of the three judges of the United States courts in the Indian Territory: For salaries of the United States courts in the Indian Territory: For salaries of the United States courts in the Indian Territory: For salaries of the United States courts in the Indian Territory: The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If the matter is once entered on, of course the Chair can not interrupt the proceedings.

The parliamentary situation is this: The Committee on Appropriations have the right of way, and if they make the motion, then the House has got to pass upon it and determine whether it will go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or not. If the motion is not made, or if the motion is negatived, then the business on the Speaker's table will be in order, and the immigration bill is one of the pieces of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have made a motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman give us the right of way long enough to dispose of this immigration bill on Monday?

M. BINGHAM. If we can go on without delay, we shall get through with the legislative bill in a short time. I insist upon my motion, Mr. Speaker.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BINGHAM that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the Speaker declared that the ayes recorded to have it.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. I call for a division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 37.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Hepburn in the chair.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Clerk, reading the bill by paragraphs, read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk, $2,000;
For stenographer, $1,500;
For attorney, $3,500;
For interpreter and translator, $1,500; in all, $33,500.
For deputy clerks, as authorized by law, so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"SEC. 19. That the powers and functions of the court established by this act shall cease and determine on the 31st day of December, 1898, and all papers, files, and records in the possession of said court belonging to any other public office of the United States shall be returned to such office, and all other papers, files, and records in the possession of or appertaining to said court shall be returned to and filed in the Department of the Interior."

of this amendment that may be desired. In 1895 an act was passed reorganizing the judiciary of the Indian Territory, providing for marshals, attorneys, and commissioners, and putting them upon salaries. In the act on this subject which was passed at the last session of Congress, abolishing the fee system as to attorneys, marshals, and commissioners, it was thought best for all parties marshais, and commissioners, it was thought best for all parties to omit the Indian Territory from the operation of that act, but since then experience has induced the Department of Justice to deem it wise to include that Territory within the operation of the salary system, as provided in that act of last session, with the exception that the Department does not desire to disturb the commissioners system of the Territory, which now rest upon the act of 1895, under which the commissioners are salaried. The act of last session checking the fee system as to certain offices and affix. last session abolishing the fee system as to certain offices and affixing salaries thereto omitted the Indian Territory from its operation, and therefore omitted fixing the salaries of the United States attorneys and marshals for that Territory, so that we had to add attorneys and marshals for that Territory, so that we had to add in this amendment a provision for the pay of the attorneys and marshals of the Territory. In that Territory there are no justices of the peace. The United States commissioners are justices of the peace, or perform the ordinary duties of justices of the peace. In this amendment the commissioners system of the Indian Territory, organized under the act of 1895, is not disturbed.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, this proviso is recommended by the Attorney-General and by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF.

It is.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no objection to the amendment.
Mr. UPDEGRAFF. It is recommended by the Department of Justice and it has been submitted to the Judiciary Committee of the House, and I present the amendment under the instructions of that committee, whose unanimous approval it has received.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, in this connection, I desire to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Department of

There was no objection. The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., December 12, 1896.

Washington, D. C., December 12, 1896.

Sir: I inclose herewith, as requested by Mr. Dockery, the proposed amendment to the appropriation for salaries and expenses United States courts, Indian Territory, 1898, which is included in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1898.

Respectfully,

JUDSON HARMON, JUDSON HARMON, Attorney-General.

Hon. H. H. BINGHAM, House of Representatives.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That the pay of assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, laborers, and charwomen provided for in this act, unless otherwise specially stated, shall be as follows: For assistant messengers, firemen, and watchmen, at the rate of $720 per annum each; for laborers, at the rate of $600 per annum each, and for charwomen, at the rate of $240 per annum each.

Mr. DOCKERY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an additional section to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Section 996 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 996. No money deposited as aforesaid shall be withdrawn except by order of the judge or judges of said courts, respectively, in term or in vacation, to be signed by such judge or judges, and to be entered and certified of record by the clerk; and every such order shall state the cause in or on account of which it is drawn. And it shall be the duty of the judge or judges of said courts, respectively, to cause any moneys deposited as aforesaid which shall remain in the registry of the court unclaimed for ten years or longer to be deposited in a designated depository of the United States to the credit of the United States."

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to say that this amendment has the approval of the Attorney-General, and the reasons for its adoption will be found on page 23 of his report, in the paragraph which I ask the Clerk to read. The Clerk read as follows:

FUNDS IN REGISTRY OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Reports of examinations made by the Department of the various Federal offices show, from time to time, the existence of funds deposited by clerks or other officers of the courts, as provided in sections 995 and 5504 of the Revised Statutes. Money so deposited can not be drawn except by judicial orders (section 996), which are, of course, not made when the parties to whom the money belongs are unknown or disappear. I suggest that some provision be made for covering such deposits into the Treasury when they have remained unclaimed for a certain period.

The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.
Mr. BINGHAM. I understand that this concludes the paragraphs of the bill, save those which were set aside-first, the paragraphs with reference to the Library of Congress, and second, those with reference to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. QUIGG. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that the bill should be completed, and that we would then proceed with the consideration of the paragraphs in regard to the Library.

Mr. BINGHAM. I said that at the completion of the bill we would enter upon the consideration of the paragraphs covering the Library. Later on in the bill we reached the paragraphs concerning the Civil Service Commission, which stand in exactly the same position as the provisions with respect to the Library. As the latter provisions were first set aside, we should naturally in the first place proceed to their consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the portion of the bill relating to the Library of Congress, which was omitted when regularly reached.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

For Librarian, $6,000.

For the following, to be selected by the Librarian of Congress, by reason of special aptitude for the work of the Library, including the copyright work and the custody and care of the new Library building, and only under such rules as the Librarian of Congress may prescribe, namely: For chief assistant Librarian, $4,000; assistants, at $1,500 each; 13 assistants, at $1,200 each; 3 assistants, at $1,200 each; 6 assistants, at $1,200 each; 6 assistants, at $1,200 each; 6 attendants in collecting and distributing books, at $720 each; 2 attendants in Representatives' reading room, 1 at $900 and 1 at $720 each; 2 attendant in the Washington library, $900; 2 attendants in the Cloakrooms, at $720 each; attendant in the stamping room, $720; attendant in the packing room, $720; avatchment, at $720 each; chief of catalogue department, $3,000; 2 assistants, at $1,800 each; 4 assistants, at $1,500; 2 assistants, at $900 each; vsuperintendent of raps and charts, $2,000; 2 assistants, at $900 each; superintendent of manuscript department, $1,500; 2 assistants, indexing, at $720 each; superintendent of manuscript department, $1,500; 2 assistants, indexing, at $720 each; superintendent of manuscript department, $1,500; 2 assistants, at $300 each; superintendent of manuscript department, $1,500; 2 assistants, indexing, at $720 each; superintendent of music department, $1,500; 2 assistants, at $1,500; 2 assistants, at $1,400 each; and laborer, $720; in all, $93,020.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the reading of the paragraph should be concluded.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the paragraph. Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph having now been read, I wish to make the point of order that this clause, beginning in line 3, "To be selected by the Librarian of Congress, by reason of special aptitude for the work of the Library, including copyright work and the custody and care of the new Library building, and only under such rules as the Librarian of Congress may prescribe." is obnoxious to a point of order, because it is new

Mr. BINGHAM. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when this bill was reported to the House no points of order were reserved upon it. Therefore the bill as it now comes before the Committee of the Whole is not subject to points of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not the fact that a bill of this kind must be subject to points of order unless there is an agreement to the ontrary?

Mr. DOCKERY. Allow me to state in this connection that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] would undoubtedly be well taken but for the ruling of the Speaker, twice repeated at the last session, that points of the speaker, twice repeated at the last session, that points of the speaker, twice repeated at the last session, that points of the speaker, twice repeated at the last session, that points of the speaker, twice repeated at the last session, that points of the speaker, twice repeated at the last session, that points of the speaker, twice repeated at the last session, that points of the speaker is the speaker in this connection that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] would undoubtedly be well taken but for the ruling of the Speaker, twice repeated at the last session, that points of the speaker is the speaker in this connection that the point of the speaker is the speaker in this connection that the point of the speaker is the speaker in the speaker in the speaker is the speaker in the speaker order can not be made upon paragraphs carried in an appropria-tion bill unless they are reserved at the time the bill is reported. REED, decided that points of order must be reserved at the time a bill is reported.

Mr. BAILEY. It occurred to me that such a ruling could not have been made when the Speaker was in the chair, because the question would naturally have been raised in the Committee of the Whole, where the Speaker does not preside.

Mr. DOCKERY. I remember that in the first instance the question was raised by me simply by way of a parliamentary inquiry, and later (I do not remember the precise circumstances) the question was presented to the Chair by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], and the Chair held as I have just stated.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course, if that has been the ruling, I shall be compelled to acquiesce. It seems to me, however, a very dangerous ruling, because it would compel some member of the House ous ruling, because it would compel some member of the House every time a bill of this character is reported to reserve points of order upon it. When a bill is reported from a committee there is of course no member of the House who has read the bill except the members of the committee which reports it; and therefore under such circumstances all that any member could do would be simply to reserve points of order blindly. It looks to me as if nobody ought to be required to make a point of order until the paragraph which is the subject of it has been reached in the consideration of the bill. Of course, if the Speaker of the House has held that way, the question is res adjudicate and must be accepted by the House. But it would require a most excellent parliamentarian to convince me that the decision was correct.

Mr. SAYERS. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dockery] if, while Mr. Carlisle was Speaker of the House, he did not hold that it was not necessary to reserve such points of

Mr. DOCKERY. I am inclined to think such was Mr. Carlisle's ruling. But this I can say, in this presence, and I would not do so unless I felt that I was right, that this ruling was twice made by the present Speaker of the House.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It has been the ruling throughout this Congress. as I understand it, has it not?

Mr. DOCKERY. It has been, undoubtedly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That certainly would seem to settle the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not pretend to understand as well as the gentleman from Missouri probably does what has been the ruling of the Speaker on this particular point. But there is a matter of fact in connection with this subject which I think the gentleman does not take into consideration. There must be, of course, some point at which the point of order may be made to a given paragraph in a bill. Now, that point is naturally the point when the paragraph in question is first reached and read.

Certainly it will not be denied that this paragraph has not been considered or read, but by unanimous consent it was passed over when it was reached in the bill until all of the remainder of the items in the bill were disposed of. So that for all the purposes of consideration, including the purpose of making points of order, the paragraph is before the House now for the first time.

the paragraph is before the House now for the first time.

This is the first time that a point of order could have been reserved by anyone to this particular paragraph.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Balley], who seems to think there is no reason for the ruling cited, that the reason of the ruling is based on the fact, as I understand it, that the House had seen fit to commit to the Committee of the Whole a bill without objection whatever to its contents or to any new legislation that may be embodied in it. It is not in the power of the committee, therefore, to refuse to consider that which the House itself has seen fit to commit to it for consideration. for consideration.

It seems to me that the ruling is entirely logical.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was this bill ever read in the House?

Mr. DALZELL. That I do not know.

Mr. BAILEY. The logic of the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be entirely reasonable if the House, as a matter of fact, knew what it was committing to the committee.

Mr. DALZELL. I recognize the force of the gentleman's objection; but the rule rests on a logical basis, and the House is presumed to know what is in the bill when it commits it to the committee.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he get a little nearer to the gentleman from Mississippi, so that he can hear him, without reference to the fact of whether the rest of the House can do so or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUIGG. I ask for order upon the floor.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania this question for information: Was this bill ever read in the House before we sent it to the Committee of the Whole? My recollection is that it was not.

The reasoning the gentleman applies in vindication of the ruling of the Speaker is on the presumption that the bill was read in full before it was referred to the committee. But as a matter of fact this paragraph was never reached in the consideration of the bill until now. It was not subject to consideration, whether for the purpose of making points of order, or for any other purpose,

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If the gentleman will allow me, I understand that when the bill is brought in by the committee it is customary for any member who desires to do so to make a statement that all points of order are reserved, and it goes on the record in that shape. No such reservation was made with reference to this bill when it came in the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Proprocessors between relationship in the bill until

Mr. WILLIAMS. But we can not know what is in the bill until it is read. We did not know that this clause was embodied in it.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understand that that has been the ruling of the Speaker of the House; that it has been held during this Congress; and if that be true, there is no further discussions.

sion of the subject. I take it for granted that the Chairman of the committee would scarcely reverse the ruling of the Speaker to which reference has been made.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Speaker has so ruled twice.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was it under these circumstances, where the bill was never read in the House or elsewhere, and where by unanimous consent the paragraphs were passed over in the bill, to be recurred to afterwards?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon this question

If this were a new or original proposition, the present occupant of the chair would have no difficulty in sustaining the point of But my own recollection is, and I have refreshed my recollection by reference to certain precedents, that the practice of the House has universally been to reserve points of order against an appropriation bill, and that where that has not been done—where the bill is sent to the committee without objection—the whole of the bill is to be considered by the committee, and that it is not competent for the committee to refuse to consider any portion of the bill so committed to it.

The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.
Mr. QUIGG. I understand from the gentleman in charge of the bill that the entire paragraphs with regard to the Library are to be read.

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. QUIGG. I do not wish to lose my rights to amend any paragraph by substitution after the Clerk has passed it.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no disposition to deprive the gentleman of any of his rights. The purpose is to read the paragraphs set aside for action now, commencing on page 19 and closing on page 22—to read the paragraphs through; and the gentleman's amendment runs through all the paragraphs.

Mr. OUIGG. Precisely.

Mr. QUIGG. Precisely.
Mr. BINGHAM. And it makes a general substitute.
Mr. DOCKERY. But let me suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that, unless there be an agreement by consent, the gentleman can not offer his amendment by way of a substitute to all the paragraphs. I see no objection, however, to making the consent of the paragraphs.

ing the agreement by unanimous consent.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no objection to it. We are willing that that course shall be adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then all the paragraphs may be read and the general proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] be offered as a substitute to all the paragraphs; but that can not be done under the rule except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask for unanimous consent, then, that that Mr. BINGHAM. I ask for unanimous consent, then, that that privilege be extended to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] asks unanimous consent of the committee that the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] be permitted to introduce his substitute to all of the paragraphs that have been referred to the translation? ferred to. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For purchase of books for the Library, $4,000; for purchase of law books for the Library, under the direction of the Chief Justice, $1,500; for purchase of new books of reference for the Supreme Court, to be a part of the Library of Congress and purchased by the marshal of the Supreme Court, under the direction of the Chief Justice, $1,500; for expenses of exchanging public documents for the publications of foreign governments, $1,500; for purchase of files of periodicals, serials, and newspapers, $2,500; in all, $11,000.

Mr. PARKER. I have an amendment to that.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend page 21, line 19, by striking out "four" and inserting "twenty-five."

Amend section 22, line 4, by striking out "eleven" and inserting "thirty-two."

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the purpose of this?
Mr. PARKER. It adds $21,000 to the appropriation for the purchase of books for the Library. I think it would be better to consider this now, as it will take only a moment.
Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection to considering it now.
Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, for many years the Library of Congress has received an appropriation of only $4,000 a year for the purchase of new books for that Library. It is true that two sums of $1,500 each are given for the purchase of books for that sums of $1,500 each are given for the purchase of books for the use of the Supreme Court—books of reference and law books but this great institution, which we propose to make the national library of the United States, has received but $4,000 a year for new books.

new books.

Let us make comparison. The Boston Public Library, the library of a single city, received in the year 1894 over $27,000 for new books, $3,600 for binding, and $4,800 for periodicals.

The Royal Library at Berlin received $24,000 in 1880, which was increased in 1895 to $35,000. The National Library at Paris received for purchases of books and binding $45,000 in 1895. And the British Museum received, in the year 1881, the sum of $50,000 for new books, $12,500 for the purchase of manuscripts, $45,000 in addition for the expense of binding, and $15,000 for the mere expense of printing catalogues. No wonder that these libraries stand as the first libraries of the world. For years this Library of the greatest people in the world has been told that there was no room for more books, and that therefore appropriation should not be increased. This year the Committee on Appropriations report, be increased. This year the Committee on Appropriations report, for salaries and keeping alone of the magnificent palace that has been put up across the square, an increase from $56,320 to $213,900.

That is an addition of over $150,000 to the annual expense, besides that of furniture and moving, which is charged to the initial expense of the Library.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to this committee. We are building a library. Do not let us put up a palace and leave it without

I have not stated all that stands against us. The British Museum receives 8 copies, under the copyright law, of every book that is published in England, and 6 of them are available for exchanges for other books published abroad.

Our Library receives but two copies of any publication in this country, and must maintain those copies upon its own shelves. It has no material for exchange except Government publications. I have not asked much. It is about one-fourth of what is given to one library in London. It is about one-half of what is given to one library in Paris, where they have other Government libraries exceeding in number and contents those that we have here in the exceeding in number and contents those that we have here in the bureaus of the Departments. It is but $25,000. It is one-fifth of the amount appropriated this very morning to a single national exhibit at a particular exhibition. It is a policy that we are inaugurating; and I appeal to this House that we shall make a start toward buying new books for that Library.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will my friend allow me to suggest whether or not it would be good policy to wait until we catalogue and arrange the books now belonging to that Library before we buy new books?

new books?

Mr. PARKER. I would say not. The cataloguing and arranging of books is a work that is never completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARKER. May I ask permission to answer that question? The cataloguing and arranging of books will take years.

New books are easier arranged upon the shelves than old ones. The work of acquiring new books must be performed when they are published, or when they can be obtained, or the opportunities are lost. Daily, in the breaking up of old libraries, this Library is losing its opportunities to put the treasures of the world upon its shelves. And this year when we inaugurate a new library.

its shelves. And this year, when we inaugurate a new library, let us inaugurate a policy which represents the love of learning and the love of literature, and not merely the love of the home in which it is to be established. [Applause.]

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, in order to understand this appropriation, I will state the amount in the bill is $4,000 for the Library, and the gentleman's amendment is to increase that paragraph or line in the bill to $25,000. In order to understand exactly what we are doing, I will read: For purchase of books for the Library, $4.000; for purchase of law books for the Library, under the direction of the Chief Justice, $1.500; for purchase of new books of reference for the Supreme Court, to be a part of the Library of Congress and purchased by the marshal of the Supreme Court, under the direction of the Chief Justice, $1.500; for expenses of exchanging public documents for the publications of foreign governments, $1.500; for purchase of files of periodicals, serials, and newspapers, $2.500; in all, $11,000.

the Library, under the direction of the Chief Justice, $1.00; for purchase of new books of reference for the Supreme Court, to be a part of the Library of the Chief Justice, $1.00; for expenses of exchanging public documents for the publications of foreign governments, $1.00; for purchase of flee of periodicals, serials, and newspapers, $2.00; in all, $11.00.

Now, that covers the purchases for the Library. That has been the appropriation for many years; and we have never heard any complaints. Under the copyright law the author of every American publication that is copyrighted files two volumes of that publication in the Library; and therefore we have, by virtue of libraries appropriated for in this bill—for every Department, Again, there are throughout the city of Washington imnumerable libraries appropriated for in this bill—for every Department, almost every division; cortainly every bureau. I venture that the statement that in this bill, outside of this paragraph, we appropriate $1.00.

Now, we are going into this new Library and we have made in our bill every preparation for the transfer of the 740,000 volumes in the Library of Congress contains—and no one knows what it contains—the necessity for an increase of appropriation in this bill for the next fiscal year, certainly to my mind, my will be appropriated the property of the contains—the necessity for an increase of appropriation in this bill for the next fiscal year, certainly to my mind, my will be appropriated to the control of the proposition of the said there are the control of the proposition of the said the proposition of the said through the control of the proposition of the said through the control of the proposition of the said through the control of the proposition of the said through the control of the proposition of the said through the control of the proposition of the proposition of the proposition of the said through the said under the control of the proposition of the said through the control of the proposition of the proposition of the

"The Librarian of Congress shall make to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a report for the preceding fiscal year as to the affairs of the Library of Congress, including the copyright business; and said report shall also include a detailed statement of all receipts and expenditures on account of the Library and said copyright business."

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman desire to say anything on his amendment?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would simply submit that the pertinency of the gentleman's amendment is such that to my mind it should be ingrafted in the bill. While the statute of to-day directs that the Librarian of Congress shall give bond, he has been giving bond according to the statutes, which runs back to 1802, which reads as follows:

The Librarian of Congress shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, give bonds, payable to the United States, in such sum and sufficient security as the Joint Committee on the Library deems sufficient for the safe-keeping of the books, etc.

The present Librarian of Congress entered upon his duties in 64. He then gave bond for $3,000 in accordance with the states. Since that time, however, he has become the disbursing officer for the Library, and under the statute he gives a bond of $6,000 as disbursing officer. By a later statute he becomes the register of copyright, and he gives bond in the amount of $5,000 under that statute; so that to-day the present Librarian is under bonds to the amount of $14,000. But in view of the increased duties, obligations, and responsibilities that will devolve upon the Librarian who may be appointed, or who may be continued, under this legislation, I think that $50,000 is a reasonable amount for his bond. for his bond.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for all the paragraphs in relation to the Library that have been read, all the paragraphs in relation to the Library that have been read, with the exception of the one that has been voted on. That I desire to incorporate in the amendment that I send to the Clerk's desk. Mr. Chairman, there is no controversy between the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on the Library as to the sum to be appropriated for next year, nor as to the number of employees. The amendment I send to the desk begins at a point which I have indicated in pencil mark, and I ask that the reading of the amendment prior to that point be dispensed with, it being simply the appropriation bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the gentleman desire to add to his substitute the amendment just adopted by the committee, or does he offer his amendment as a substitute for everything else but that

Mr. QUIGG. For everything except what we have voted upon. The amendment of Mr. QUIGG was read, as follows:

shall, before the termination of the last session of each Congress, appoint, from the Representatives-elect, a temporary Committee on the Library, with similar powers and for the same purposes.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress—Mr. BINGHAM. How much time does the gentleman desire? Mr. QUIGG. Not long.
Mr. BINGHAM. Can not the gentleman state how much time he desires:

Mr. QUIGG. I do not desire very much time, but the gentleman has assured me that I shall have as much as I want. I can not state definitely just what time I shall want, but what I have to say will not take a week, and it may not take more than half an

Mr. BINGHAM. I have given the assurance that opportunity for reasonable debate will be given, but I think the committee are entitled to know how much time the gentleman from New York entitled to know how much time the gentleman from New York desires. We will try on this side not to occupy very much time. Will half an hour satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. QUIGG. No, I do not think I can finish in half an hour. I do not want to confine myself.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, I do not wish to have to ask that the committee rise, so as to have the debate on this paragraph limited by the House. I suggest to the gentleman that with reference to all subordinate matters in connection with the Library this hill all subordinate matters in connection with the Library this bill is in accordance with his own proposition almost word for word. is in accordance with his own proposition almost word for word. So far as the gentleman's argument on his general proposition is concerned (which is what the committee probably desires especially to be enlightened upon), that relates to certain distinct paragraphs of the proposed legislation, and the committee have raised no points of order against the gentleman's amendments.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist on making a speech right now, I shall not detain the committee very long. I can not, however, undertake to state at this time the exact number of minutes I shall occupy. The gentleman did assure me that there would be plenty of time for debate upon this proposition. It may be, too, that other members will desire to take part in the debate.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will say to the gentleman that not a single member has asked me for time.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a reasonably full

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a reasonably full statement of the reasons that have seemed to justify the Committee on the Library in bringing in the proposition which they have submitted, and I do not want to say in advance that I shall finish it in half an hour or in any particular time, although I do not think

I shall be half an hour in making my statement.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, if the gentleman thinks he will not be more than half an hour, it is all right.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress the Joint Committee on the Library was instructed to meet during the Joint Committee on the Library was instructed to meet during the recess "to inquire into the condition of the Library and to report upon the same at the next session of Congress, with such recommendations as may be deemed advisable; and also to report a plan for the organization, custody, and management of the new Library building and the Library of Congress." In accordance with this instruction, the Joint Committee on the Library met in Washington and held ten or twelve sessions. The committee examined the ton and held ten or twelve sessions. The committee examined the Librarian, examined Mr. Green, the engineer superintendent in charge, and a considerable number of librarians from various parts of the United States, who presented themselves before the committee at its request to be questioned about modern library methods and about the public uses to which the Library of Congress might be put. The committee has not yet had an opportunity to prepare its report. Some portions of the testimony that were submitted to gentlemen living at remote points for revision have not yet been returned, and the testimony is not yet in print. But the committee's recommendations are now before Congress in the bill which has just been read. the bill which has just been read.

The committee received information from the gentlemen who appeared before it of great interest and, as I conceive, great importance to Congress. Large powers under the law as it exists to-day seem to devolve upon the Joint Committee on the Library; and yet the law is so worded that while the powers of the committee seem to be ample, there are many respects in which the committee would not care to act without specific instruction from Congress. The legislation which we propose here is submitted for the purpose of obtaining from Congress either a release from all administrative functions or such clear direction and such ample authority as will warrant the committee in assuming the responsibilities which already the law implies. The paragraphs contained in this appropriation bill as submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania add to our confusion. They provide a sum of money, for instance, to cover the expense of the removal of the Library collections, but there is no authority in any particular person to perform the work of removing those collections, and the committee does not supply it. There is a sum appropriated for furnishing the building, but it is not made anybody's business to go and do it. The joint committee proposes that there shall be clear and explicit legislation on these points, and also touching the organization of the force and the conduct of the institution.

The Library of Congress came into existence in 1800 by one of the series of resolutions passed by Congress in that year for the removal of the seat of government from Philadelphia to Washington. The suggestion has been made that the powers which we propose to confer upon the Joint Committee on the Library are not warranted by the Constitution; that the administrative function therein conferred is unsuitable for a committee of Congress, and that when it is sought to empower the joint committee to select the force of employees to serve in the new Library building we are departing from the constitutional lines fixed by the fathers of the Government. This contention, if I understand it, assumes that the Library is an executive branch or bureau of the Government, and not an instrument of this Congress to assist it in the performance of its duties. I desire, therefore, to call attention to the language of the statute under which books were originally purchased for this Library. It is section 5 of an act approved April 24, 1800, and it reads as follows:

That for the purchase of such books as may be necessary for the use of Congress at the city of Washington and for fitting up a suitable apartment for containing them, and for placing them therein, the sum of $5.000 shall be, and hereby is, appropriated; and that said purchase shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives pursuant to such directions as shall be given and such catalogue as shall be furnished by a joint committee of both Houses of Congress, to be appointed for that surprise. for that purp

There is the language, Mr. Chairman, which justifies the joint committee in the proposition which is now submitted to the House. The act of April 24, 1800, was amended in 1802; and the law under which we are now acting was adopted in that year. That law directed the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House to establish rules and regulations for the government of the to establish rules and regulations for the government of the Library; and it directed that the President of the United States, solely, without any act of confirmation by the Senate, should appoint a Librarian. Since that time, Mr. Chairman, other statutes have been passed enlarging the functions of the joint committee and the one in force of the statutes of the point committee. mittee; and the one in force to-day is section 85 of the Revised

The Senate rule provides that its committee shall have power to act jointly with the similar committee of the House of Representatives. And the House rule provides that "all proposed legislation touching the Library of Congress shall be committed to the Joint Committee on the Library."

It will appear, Mr. Chairman, from this provision of the Revised Statutes that the powers of the joint committee are large and general. They can establish regulations not inconsistent with law in relation to the Library of Congress or either department thereof, and from time to time alter, amend, or repeal the same.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

me a question?
Mr. QUIGG. Yes, sir.
Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The gentleman says that the powers of the committee are quite ample. They include, as I understand him, the power of appointment of the employees in Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Practically it covers it.

Mr. QUIGG. Unless the paragraph brought in by the Com-

Mr. QUIGG. Unless the paragraph brought in by the Committee on Appropriations should be enacted.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. How many employees of the Library are there—about 140?

Mr. QUIGG. There are 42 at this time. There will be in the new building 187.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I understand the gentleman is a member of the Library Committee on the part of the House.

Mr. QUIGG. Well?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I wish to say that I do not think this House should take from that committee the authority which it now has to appoint those employees—which it now has to appoint those employees—

Mr. QUIGG. Does the gentleman desire to ask a question?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I think it would be a great injustice to take away from the committee that authority; and I believe the House is of that opinion.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?
Mr. QUIGG. Certainly.
Mr. BAILEY. The difficulty which I have is this: The employees in the Library are not now treated as employees of this House, are they?

Mr. QUIGG. Not of the House, but of Congress.
Mr. BAILEY. When we vote to allow the employees of the House an extra month's pay, do they draw it?
Mr. QUIGG. I can not answer that question.
Mr. DOCKERY. They do not.

Mr. BAILEY. The difficulty which occurs to me is this: If they are employees of the House, then plainly the President has no right to appoint the Librarian; and the Librarian appointed by the President would have no right to appoint his subordinates, because the employees of this House must be chosen by the House

Mr. QUIGG. I did not suggest that the employees of the Library were employees of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. That is just the point. I want to find out from the gentleman exactly how he does regard them.

Mr. QUIGG. I did say that they are employees of Congress. The authority which we have conferred upon the President, to appoint a Librarian, is one that certainly we could easily withdraw from him. from him.

The original act which I read to the House intrusts the work of the Library to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives. They were directed to buy the books. They expended a sum of money under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library. Afterwards, when the question of a Librarian came to be considered, as I understand the facts, it was Librarian came to be considered, as I understand the facts, it was impossible for the House and Senate to agree, and the matter was referred to the President solely, without any requirement of confirmation, and he appointed the Clerk of the House, who acted as Librarian. Subsequently a Librarian was appointed independently of either body. But as to the control of Congress over the whole question, I do not think there can be any doubt.

The ability of Congress to appoint the entire Library force, if it shall choose to do so, or to delegate the duty to anybody else, regardless of the constitutional provision, seems to be entirely regardless of the constitutional provision, seems to be entirely

Mr. BAILEY. That is so, of course, if it is treated as a power lodged in the House.

Mr. QUIGG (continuing). Now let us see what the constitutional provision is. It is found in section 2, Article II, which provides that the President—

Shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

So that if the employees of the Library are the employees of a Department or a bureau of the Government, and are officers of the United States, as are unquestionably the appointees of the Patent Office, which is an office that will bear comparison with this, then there can be no doubt that the appointment of minor officers has got to be lodged either in the Presidents or the courts of law or in the heads of Departments.

But the Constitution also provides that the House of Represents

But the Constitution also provides that the House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers, and that the Senate shall have a similar power. And if these persons employed in the Library are servants of Congress, then certainly Congress may lodge the power of their appointment and removal wherever it sees fit.

Mr. BAILEY. I perfectly agree with that. But what I was trying to ascertain was the position of the gentleman on the other question, namely, whether it had been the practice heretofore to consider the employees of the Library as employees of the House. Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman from Texas says "employees of the House." Certainly not of the House, but of Congress, assuredly. Mr. BAILEY. Then, if the gentleman will permit me, the Constitution of the United States really recognizes no such appointment as an officer of these two Houses. In this building the two Houses have necessarily a joint supervision, but there is no such thing recognized in the Constitution as an "officer of the Senate and the House." The Senate chooses its officers, and the House, under the Constitution, chooses its officers also; but nowhere are the House and Senate jointly authorized to choose an officer. officer.

Mr. QUIGG. Is it so? Why, here is an instance, Mr. Chairman, where those who made the Constitution proceeded to place a certain power in the hands of two men, who, by that act, were constituted officers of both Houses.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, the First Congress passed two or three laws that were held to be invalid, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. QUIGG. Yes, but I have observed that the statesmen of this day and generation are, or seem to be, more familiar with what the framers of the Constitution intended than those who gave it its first interpretations.

But here is a distinct commission by the Sixth Congress, when this question was fresh in the minds of those who wrote the Constitution, directing the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to act jointly as officers of the two Houses for the purchase of certain books for the two Houses for the establishment of this Library. They were placed in that work under the direct supervision—indeed, the control—of the joint committee of the two Houses, and they were required to purchase books according to a catalogue to be furnished to them by the joint commission.

by the joint commission.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow an inquiry?

Mr. QUIGG. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state as a preliminary that from 1802 to 1815 the Clerk of the House, for the time being, was appointed to act as Librarian of Congress. But when you come to the statute appointing the Librarian of Congress, it was not until the act of 1815 when the appointment was given solely to the Presi-

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman is mistaken in that. Mr. BINGHAM (continuing). That was the law until 1815, when the first provision that the statutes show as to the Librarian when the first provision that the state of Congress appears.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman is in error. The act was passed January 26, 1802.

Mr. BINGHAM. And the Clerk of the House was appointed for the time being. Now, the first Librarian appointed solely by the President was appointed in 1815.

the President was appointed in 1815.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman is mistaken. The act directing the President to appoint a Librarian is before me at this moment. It was passed in 1802.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. QUIGG. It said that a Librarian was to be appointed by the President of the United States solely.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. GUIGG. And he appointed the Clerk of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.
Mr. QUIGG. And he appointed the Clerk of the House.
Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; I grant you that; but a Librarian of Congress was not appointed until 1815 under that specific designation, which is the designation of the law to-day.
Mr. QUIGG. That is the specific designation—"a Librarian"—and it appears in the act of 1802.
Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.
Mr. QUIGG. There is nothing in the original act that suggests that an officer of the House or an officer of the Senate was to be appointed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Grant all that.
Mr. QUIGG. But a Librarian.
Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. QUIGG. And the President appointed the Clerk of the House to be that Librarian.

Mr. BINGHAM. He appointed the Clerk of the House for the time being, but the title of Librarian was never used in any appointment or commission until 1815.

Mr. QUIGG. It makes no difference what he was called. act gave the title to the office, and it was passed in 1802, and it makes no difference how the commission read.

Mr. BINGHAM. Unless the gentleman has a constitutional contention with the gentleman from Texas—

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quige] to say that the employees of the Library were, under the present law, officers or employees of Congress; and also to say that under his construction of the present law the Library had the review to expect these contents. Joint Committee on the Library had the power to appoint these employees.

Mr. QUIGG. Well, I do not know whether it has or not.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As a matter of fact, has a committee of Congress, especially any committee of the House, been appointing employees of the Library?

Mr. QUIGG. No; it never has.

Mr. MAHON. The Senate has got all the appointments.

It angiter 1

[Laughter.]
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Now, I understand your provision in this substitute authorizes the Speaker to continue or to appoint in this substitute authorizes the Speaker to continue or to appoint in this Senate duration. a committee of the next House to cooperate with the Senate during the adjournment?

Mr. QUIGG. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is that done to give to the House the same force and effect on that committee as the Senate members?

Mr. QUIGG. Precisely.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then I understand, also, that you have embodied in this substitute a provision that the Librarian shall be appointed with the advice and consent of the Senate?
Mr. QUIGG. Yes.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. While, as a matter of fact, the Librarian is appointed by the President at present, without the advice and consent of the Senate, and the provision reported by my colleague [Mr. BINGHAM] in charge of the appropriation bill does not contemplate that the Senate shall confirm the appointment at all.
Mr. BINGHAM. Not at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. Not at all. Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Therefore I should like to hear the gentleman upon the question whether he has not, in his substitute, clothed the Senate committee—in giving them the right to grant or withhold confirmation—with as much power as they now have?

Mr. QUIGG. I have not lodged with the Senate committee any new power at all.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me one suggestion?

me one suggestion?

Mr. QUIGG. I will answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] first. I say that this provision in my proposition to have the Speaker of the House appoint a temporary committee to act during the recess is for the purpose of preserving the equilibrium upon the joint committee between the two

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I see; but you still give to the Senate the right to confirm.

Mr. QUIGG. And if the administration of the Library is lodged,

Mr. QUIGG. And if the administration of the Library is lodged, as the substitute lodges it, in the hands of the joint committee, no possible injury can result to any proper interest of either House by having the Librarian appointed in the usual way.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let me conclude by another question. What about the permanency and stability of the management of the Library, with the committee changing with each House and with the Librarian serving a term of four years and going out and in with the different political coloring of the Administration?

Mr. QUIGG. There is the state of the property of the proper

Mr. QUIGG. There is no provision in regard to the term of the Librarian. There is nothing that requires the Librarian to go out at any time. No term of office is fixed. Once appointed, go out at any time. No term of office is fixed. Once appointed, he will remain, as now, until removed by the President.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I fail to see the necessity of any Librarian at all under the substitute. If the management of the whole business and the appointment of everybody and the making of rules is lodged in the committee, it seems to me there is no necessity for a librarian.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The chief Librarian has all the responsibility and gives a bond—

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And gets nothing out of it.

Mr. QUIGG. The powers invested by the substitute are the powers which are exercised to-day by the board of regents in New York, which differs from the joint committee materially, in that they are a permanent body. I concede that there are very obvious objections to the exercise of administrative functions by the joint committee of Congress, for the reason pointed out by the gentlethey are a permanent body. I concede that there are very obvious objections to the exercise of administrative functions by the joint committee of Congress, for the reason pointed out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE], and I should not be frank if I did not acknowledge that fact; but we are confronted with certain conditions. The Library has been administered for half a century precisely as the Committee on Appropriations proposes in this bill it shall be administered hereafter.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman now indicate what he deems to be the way it has been administered?

Mr. QUIGG. The language in the Revised Statutes empowering the Committee on the Library is very broad and general and gives to the committee so little of specific duty that practically it has done nothing. No effort has ever been made, so far as I am aware, to control the Librarian in any sense whatever.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is your neglect.

Mr. QUIGG. He informed the joint committee that he spends the sums appropriated in the appropriation bills without any reference to the joint committee or to anybody else; that he appoints as he chooses to appoint; that he administers all the affairs of the Library as seems good to his judgment, and he has made no report other than a general report to Congress at the beginning of each term.

each term.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question before he leaves that branch of the subject?

Mr. QUIGG. One moment, and I will. Under that method of government the Library has become absolutely chaotic, and serious abuses have arisen which have impaired its usefulness both to Congress and to the public. These misfortunes are mainly due to the fact that the language of the statute gave to the Committee on the Library no specific responsibility. The language is general. They can make rules and regulations.

Mr. BINGHAM. Regulations, not rules.

Mr. QUIGG. Well, regulations; and that is the extent of the commission at present held by the committee. Now, I want to say to gentlemen— Mr. QUIGG. One moment, and I will. Under that method of commission at present held by the committee. Now, I want to say to gentlemen—

Mr. CANNON. Now, will the gentleman, before he leaves that part of his subject, permit me to interrupt him? I want to get his proposition, to see if I understand it. I have not read his substitute. As I understand from what he says and what I have been told by others, the gentleman's substitute provides in terms that the Librarian shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. QUIGG. It does.

advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. QUIGG. It does.

Mr. CANNON. And that the other 185 employees—

Mr. BINGHAM. One hundred and eighty-six.

Mr. CANNON. One hundred and eighty-six employees—copyright, custodian of the building, and assistant librarian, all the employees—shall be appointed and shall be subject to removal by the Joint Committee on the Library. Am I right?

Mr. QUIGG. That is correct.
Mr. CANNON. Well, now, if my friend will allow me right at that point, this amendment, as I understand, leaves the copyright business with the Librarian?

Mr. QUIGG. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, why is it not entirely competent, if we have authority to legislate and administer both under the Constitution, for us not only, through the Joint Committee on the Library, to absorb the copyright business and to control it directly by the joint committee, but to take in the Patent Office, and the whole Interior Department, and all the other Departments except the Secretaries alone?

Mr. QUIGG. The committee proposes no change in the law.

The present copyright law says:

That the law shall be administered; that all records and other things relating to copyrights and records by law to be preserved shall be under the control of the Librarian of Congress and kept or preserved in the Library of Congress; that the Librarian of Congress shall have the immediate care and supervision thereof, and, under the supervision of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library, shall perform all acts and duties required by law touching copyrights.

Congress on the Library, shall perform all acts and duties required by law touching copyrights.

There is absolutely no change. Under this bill the copyright business is placed under the Librarian, as the gentleman from Illinois very well knows, for conventional reasons. We require everybody who brings a book to us to be copyrighted to deposit two copies of it with the copyright register, who is the Librarian, and the Librarian puts one away and places the other in the Library of Congress. And for the reason that we wanted the usufruct of the copyright law, we placed the administration of the law in the hands of the Librarian of Congress and under the supervision of the joint committee. We are proposing no change in the law. But there is no occasion for the patent law to be administered in that way. We do not want to use the patented articles. Congress, I repeat, wanted the use of the books that would accrue from requiring every man who desires a copyright to deposit two copies of his copyrighted book in the Library, and consequently it made the Librarian act as a copyright clerk.

Mr. BINGHAM. But in your bill you create the office of register of copyrights, and you fix the compensation of that officer. Now, you know very well that that matter was discussed in the Senate, and that it was a matter of controversy between the two Houses. It originated in the Senate on the legislative bill in the first session of this Congress. The law puts the business of copyrights in the hands of the Librarian of Congress. We took the ground that the proposition to create a register of copyrights in that way was not constitutional. The question went into conference. It went into the Senate, and the Senate, after two days' debate on the constitutionality of the proposition contained in the gentleman's substitute, withdrew it because it was not constitutional.

gentleman's substitute, withdrew it because it was not constitu-

Mr. QUIGG. The distinction between the proposition in this substitute and the proposition that was then pending before the Senate is very clear. That bill created the office and created the officer to fill it, and placed that office outside of the jurisdiction of the Librarian.

Mr. BINGHAM. What does your proposition do?

Mr. QUIGG. Here the Librarian is over the entire establish-

Mr. BINGHAM. Why, Mr. Chairman— Mr. QUIGG. I trust the gentleman will not interrupt me. Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman from New York is

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman from New York is so good-natured about interruptions that we can not help interrupting him, and I would like to ask him whether he does not think that this substitute of his places the Library in the control of what we call "politics," and whether he thinks that institution ought to be so controlled?

Mr. QUIGG. I could never bring myself to offend the sensibilities of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by proposing any such thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, I want to get on the committee. That is what I want. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUIGG. But I shall be very frank with the gentleman on that matter in a few moments. I wish to recur to the suggestion of his colleague [Mr. BINGHAM]. The measure that was in the Senate was a bill creating an office and an officer to fill it, but removing that officer and his functions from any relation to the Library of Congress; and the contention of Senators at that time was that this officer would no longer be a servant of Congress, was that this officer would no longer be a servant of Congress, would no longer have any connection with the Library, and that the reason why he should be appointed by the Joint Committee on the Library would not exist if he was to be removed from the Library in the discharge of his duties. The case was very clearly stated by Senators, and the Senator from New Hampshire, dealing with the question of our jurisdiction over the Library, used these expressions:

The Senator from Delaware always follows his constitutional theories to the uttermost limit; the Senator from Connecticut wants to run away from his, whereas I take the Library of Congress as I find it on the statute book, and I take the copyright law as I find it on the statute book, and I say it was a solecism to authorize the President of the United States to appoint the Librarian of Congress. I think the provision for his appointment grew out of a notion that had no foundation in correct constitutional law, and that the provision might be repealed to-morrow, and I say that it ought to be repealed to-morrow, and the Librarian of Congress ought to be appointed by Congress itself.

Now, the contention in that debate, which covered this whole question, was that the register of copyrights was being removed from the Library of Congress—
Mr. BINGHAM. I think not.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think not.
Mr. QUIGG. I so understand.
Mr. DRAPER. If I may interrupt the gentleman a moment, I should like to be informed how the minor officers are now appointed in the Library, and how they have been appointed for years past, so as to understand this proposed change.
Mr. QUIGG. Well, Mr. Chairman, I should have some difficult to racke a clear statement on that subject. So far as the

Mr. QUIGG. Well, Mr. Chairman, I should have some difficulty to make a clear statement on that subject. So far as the law is concerned, I apprehend that it clothes the Joint Committee on the Library with power to make the appointments. So far as regards the practice, I would better divide the practice, I think, into two parts—theoretical practice and actual practice. [Laughter.] In theoretical practice the Librarian of Congress (who is by the legislation of my friend from Pennsylvania confirmed in all these duties and responsibilities) has made the appointments. In actual practice I do not think that has occurred. I do not know who has made them. I do not know whom the persons employed in the Library represent. I found it very difficult to obtain evidence on that subject, and such evidence as I did obtain is quite conflicting. I do, however, remember an incident in conobtain evidence on that subject, and such evidence as I did obtain is quite conflicting. I do, however, remember an incident in connection with the bill for the registration of copyrights. I remember that when that bill was being considered by the House in the last Congress, before it got very far everybody knew who was to be the register of copyrights; and I remember that the bill did not make much progress until it was known who was to be register of copyrights; and I suspect the policy has been for the Librarian to appoint as he thought it wise to do.

Now, I will say to the House very clearly, so far as the present

Now, I will say to the House very clearly, so far as the present joint committee is concerned, what will be done if the legislation which that committee proposes to the House shall be passed. I do which that committee proposes to the House shall be passed. I do not know whether the present members on the part of the House will be members of the joint committee in the next Congressor not, but I do know what is the unanimous purpose of the Senators and Representatives who are on the present joint committee. In the first place, we want the House to say clearly and distinctly what the authority of the joint committee is, and, so far as I am personally concerned, I would much rather that the House should agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania than with me, for the task this bill imposes upon the Joint Committee on the Library is not an easy or an envisible one. I will cheerfully yield it to the conthis bill imposes upon the Joint Committee on the Library is not an easy or an enviable one. I will cheerfully yield it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But if that function is imposed upon the joint committee, and if it should be the present joint committee, I can say very distinctly just what will be done. In the first place, the counsel and advice which the joint committee has received from the distinguished librarians of this country will be received from the distinguished librarians of this country will be taken as to the uses to which the Library can be put.

It is true that this substitute of the joint committee places the director of the Library under the supervision and direction of the joint committee. And that was done advisedly; that was done upon the suggestion of all the librarians who came before the committee. Reflecting the views of educated men generally, of students and scholars, they want this Library to be of some service to the country. Up to this time it has been of no service to the country, and practically of no service to Congress. Nobody knows what the Library contains. Nobody knows how many books there are in it. Nobody knows anything of the vast collections that have accumulated there during all these years. They tions that have accumulated there during all these years. tions that have accumulated there during all these years. They have never been catalogued adequately, and there exists to-day for all the contents of the Library nothing except the card catalogue—740,000 cards for 740,000 books—and if ever a card is "lost, strayed, or stolen," that ends the usefulness of the Library so far as concerns the book to which that card refers. There is no inventory maintained day by day; there is no shelf list to act as a directory to the Librarian as to where he shall go for books. Those two catalogues are maintained in every well-conducted library in connection with a card catalogue.

With the proper appliances it would be possible for the Librarian to get out for the instruction and information of Congress a rian to get out for the instruction and information of Congress a bibliography upon any subject coming before us for legislation; and if this proposition passes and the now existing joint committee should administer it for a season, it will be the duty of the Librarian when any subject of importance is pending in Congress to lay before members a bibliography showing every book that contains information on the question and the points covered by the book. That is the kind of work that the Library of Congress ought to do if it is going to be of service.

I say to gentlemen that there is much more involved in this bill than the organization of the force. In the first place, there is distinct, unequivocal authority to some one to go and move the Library. No such authority exists now or is conferred in the appropriation bill, or could be—it would be new legislation. In the next place, it terminates the service of the gentleman now in charge of the building, which might be prolonged unnecessarily far into the next year, unless some proposition of this kind were adopted. And, finally, it requires the joint committee to furnish the building and places at the committee's disposition a sum of money now remaining out of sums heretofore appropriated for the construction of the building. There is no authority in the paragraphs brought here by the Appropriations Committee to do any of these things.

I should like to say (although it does not bear directly upon the subject we are discussing) something with regard to the time which has been occupied in the construction of this building. It ought to be said by somebody. I think the history of the construction of this building is unique among public buildings. When General Casey was put in charge in 1886, he said that the building would be done within eight years, and he fixed the sum of money that it would cost to build it. Two years ago he told the House that that building would be ready one year before the date which he had originally supposed possible as the time of its completion. And with that building, incomparable as it is among public monuments in this or any other country, almost ready for occupancy, there exists in the Treasury to-day a balance of $60,000 out of the appropriation of $6,500,000 made for its construction. [Applause.] I say this is a unique history. No eulogy could be pronounced upon that officer more illustrative of his fine character than is contained. Lay this is a unique history. No eulogy could be pronounced upon that officer more illustrative of his fine character than is contained in the work he did in the construction of this building. General Casey died a year before the Library was completed. The work has gone on under the officer who was his assistant while he lived.

Mr. Chairman, a great deal is to be done in moving into that new building. There are vast collections that need to be looked over and assorted. And it was the judgment of the librarians who came here that expert testimony—the judgment of artists and book lovers—should be taken by the joint committee as to what ought to be done with these collections, as to how and where they cheef the desired and all that is included in the level.

what ought to be done with these collections, as to how and where they should be displayed. And all that is involved in the legislation which the joint committee has proposed.

Now I come right down to the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE]. Some of these positions in the Library call for men of peculiar qualifications; they ought to be filled by men who know the library business. The positions of cataloguers and librarians are positions that require technical information, in order that their duties may be properly performed. There exist in this country colleges where the duties of a librarian are taught. Several of the colleges maintain a chair for the instruction of young men in library economy. If the joint committee should be intrusted with the selection of this force, regard will be paid to the public interests—

Mr. BINGHAM. How do you know that?

Mr. QUIGG. I have several times made the qualifying provision to which the gentleman seeks to draw attention.

Mr. BINGHAM. How does the gentleman know what the future committee will do?

Mr. QUIGG. He does not. Neither does he know who will be appointed Librarian. We do know, however, that under the gentleman's bill the present Librarian is continued.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. During good behavior.

Mr. QUIGG. And we do know that the present condition of the Library is not ideal. positions of cataloguers and librarians are positions that require

Mr. GUIGG. And we do not that the Library is not ideal.

Mr. BINGHAM. How could it be in its present quarters?

Mr. QUIGG. I should think that the gentleman, who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, would not have asked that question.

asked that question.

I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that if the selection of the force is left to the present Joint Committee on the Library, those positions that ought to be filled by experts will be filled after examination, and that those positions that do not call for peculiar qualifications will be filled according to the best judgment of the joint committee. That may not be the ideal way of doing the work, but it seems to be the way that will get the best result to the public service.

Mr. ADAMS. How do you know that the next committee will take the same view of the matter?

Mr. QUIGG. Oh, well, we are assuming, and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree with me that from among the 357 Representatives who will come from all over the United States it will be possible for the Speaker of the House to select three who will be honest and upright and intelligent in the administration of their duties under the bill. We can safely suppose that the people of this country who have elected these Representatives will be willing to trust them, whether in the passage of legislation on this floor or in the conduct of the affects of the legislation on this floor or in the conduct of the affairs of the Library of Congress.

But it is the plain effect of the Appropriations Committee's bill to continue in office the present Librarian, to increase his salary $2,000, and to confirm him in a right of selection of the employees in the new building, concerning the results of which in the past nobody in the House can form any proper judgment.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. QUIGG. Certainly.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In response to the gentleman's last suggestion, I would ask: Where do you get any information that it is the intention of the committee to continue the present Librarian?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is a very pertinent question.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Where do you get any such an idea?

Mr. QUIGG. It is in the bill.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No; the gentleman is mistaken.
The bill says the President shall appoint a Librarian.
Mr. QUIGG. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The bill says nothing of the kind. Is there anything in this bill calling on the nothing of the kind. Is there anything in this bill calling on the President to make any appointment?

Mr. BINGHAM. The statute itself so provides.

Mr. QUIGG. Oh, yes; the "statute," which has been on the statute books for ninety years, and the Librarian has been in office for thirty years. But there is nothing in your bill to change the situation. That is the point. You confirm it and enlarge it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But my point was this: The gentleman stated that it was the purpose of the committee in offering this bill to continue the present Librarian in office.

Mr. QUIGG. I am talking of the effect of the bill, of course. I did not say it was the "purpose" of the committee, I think. I said it was the effect of the bill. If it is not the purpose of the committee, it is certainly the effect of the bill.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly not.

Mr. BINGHAM. The bill simply makes the appropriation under the law.

under the law

under the law.

Mr. QUIGG. Well, Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I can not talk against three members at the same time, and all the time. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If the gentleman will allow me, I might say that if our committee had had charge of the matter a little more completely than we had, it is possible that an investigation would have been undertaken; and it is also possible that changes would have been made in the office to which the gentleman has referred. has referred

Mr. QUIGG. I did not understand the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I say there is nothing to justify the assertion that the purpose of the bill, or of the committee, is to retain the present Librarian in office.

Mr. BINGHAM. The President can turn him out to-day if he so desires.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And the bill expressly provides against the very condition of affairs that the gentleman from New York suggests. Mr. QUIGG. Mr. QUIGG. I do not know, of course, the purpose of the bill, but I do know its effect, and it is to reward the Librarian of Con-

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. A librarian.
Mr. QUIGG. No; to reward this present and particular Librarian for his conduct of the Library by an addition to his salary of $2,000 a year, and by the confirmation of all the powers that he has heretofore exercised, properly or otherwise, in regard to appointments. That is the effect of the bill, whatever may be the purpose of the gentleman framing it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman from New York is aware of the fact that the bill does not go into effect until July 1, next

Mr. QUIGG. Oh, well; no doubt that time will arrive.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (continuing). By which time we hope the President will be able to make a selection from the few remaining applications that he will still have on hand. [Laughter.]

maining applications that he will still have on hand. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, on behalf of my colleagues on the joint committee, that we do not look forward with any pleasure to the performance of the duties that are imposed upon us by that bill. We are entirely content to be relieved of them. We have thought it our duty to present the facts in the case with regard to the condition of the Library; and from those facts we take it that gentlemen will be able to see what the confacts we take it that gentlemen will be able to see what the conditions are that will arise in the new Library unless measures are taken such as the joint committee have proposed in this bill. Gentlemen need not be afraid at the suggestion to empower the joint committee to appoint. That power must go somewhere, and who can be better trusted than three of your own colleagues? From whom can the hope of excellent results be more assuredly expected?

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a

Mr. QUIGG. Yes.
Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman's statement is true, after you have an efficient force in every respect appointed, why should they not be protected from men who may follow you, who may choose to throw them out for purposes which are not commendable? Why not insert a provision that they shall not be removed except for cause, on charges made by the Librarian, to be investigated by the Joint Committee on the Library?

Mr. QUIGG. I am content to accept such an amendment, if the gentleman will reduce it to writing.

Mr. MAHON. I suggest to the gentlemen in charge of the measure that they insert a clause of that kind, that if an officer is an efficient man, he shall not be removed except on charges preferred by the Librarian, to be investigated by the joint committee of the two Houses

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a single word in reference to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg].

First, I want to answer the implied criticism of the gentleman when he states that the paragraph in the bill carrying a salary of $6,000 for the Librarian is in its effect a continuation of the present incumbent. I deny this proposition. The Committee on Appropriations have provided a salary for the Librarian under propriations have provided a salary for the Librarian under existing law.

Mr. BINGHAM. And increased his salary.

Mr. DOCKERY. And, as the gentleman suggests, we have increased the salary $2,000. But this increase of salary does not take effect until the 1st of July next. In other words, so far as the Librarian and his force are concerned, with the exception stated, we have simply provided salaries pursuant to the statute, taking into account the changed conditions that will obtain when the Library is removed to the new building. Now Mr. Chairman taking into account the changed conditions that will obtain when the Library is removed to the new building. Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I do not wish to be understood as desiring the retention of the present Librarian of Congress. The power to remove and appoint rests solely with the President.

Mr. BINGHAM. And nothing in the bill changes it.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true. The Librarian is not confirmed by the Screets.

by the Senate. We make no change whatever in the law. The power to remove and appoint is still lodged with the President, and if, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigo] intimates, the Librarian is not a competent officer—and I do not take issue with him on that point—the responsibility, under the law, is with Mr. QUIGG. That is where the gentleman is in the habit of leaving responsibilities—on the President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And where the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg] used to leave them.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is where they properly belong. This Library of Congress is a department of the Government. It is an executive department and should be under the control of the executive breach. It do not propose as the gentlement's substitute that the control of the executive breach. executive branch. I do not propose, as the gentleman's substi-tute does, to create the office of director of the Library at a salary of $6,000 per annum, with no right of the director, as the execu-tive head of that great department, to remove or appoint a Inductive head.

Mr. BINGHAM. Or a charwoman.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. QUIGG, Will the gentleman inform the committee where

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not intend to say that it is an executive department. It is, however, a department of the Government.
Mr. QUIGG. I understood the gentleman to say it is an executive department.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not desire to be so understood. it is called the Library of Congress, it is clearly, within the meaning of the statute, a bureau of the Government. The gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG], in reply to the queries of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], distinctly admitted that the employees of this Library are not under the control of the House. They are appointed in accordance with law by the Librarian, who is an appointee of the President. They are not, therefore, in any sense employees of the House. We have a House library and employees for that library carried in this bill.

The Senate have a library, and their employees are also carried The Senate have a library, and their employees are also carried in this bill. But the Library of Congress is an executive bureau, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] aptly suggests, and is no part of the library belonging to the House of Representatives and controlled by its employees. The House has, I think, five employees who have supervision of the House library. They are on the House roll, and if a month's extra pay is given the employees of the House these gentlemen are beneficiaries. But this Congressional Library—it is a misnomer to call it the Congressional Library. It is a great national Library [loud applause] and belongs to the Government of the United States. It belongs to the people of the United States, and is an executive bureau, and as such should be presided over by some executive officer with authority to appoint and remove its employees. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. And I would suggest to the gentleman from New York that a "peanut stand" can not be properly organized and conducted without some one to supervise the business and be responsible for its management. Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.
Mr. QUIGG. I ask the gentleman's attention to section 5 of the act organizing the Library:

That the keeper of said Library shall receive for his services a sum, the amount whereof, together with the necessary expenses of the said Library, after having been ascertained by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being, shall be paid out of the sum annually appropriated for the contingent expenses of both Houses of

Mr. DOCKERY. That is not the existing statute.
Mr. QUIGG. Does it not seem to indicate—
Mr. DOCKERY. That is not existing law. It is ancient his-

Mr. QUIGG. Does not that seem to indicate that this Library was obtained for the use of the two Houses of Congress?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; and also for all the people of the United States.

Mr. QUIGG. Oh, no.
Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly. It is now used by the people under existing regulations.
Mr. QUIGG. It is not that way now.
Mr. DOCKERY. It is used by the public under regulations that are now in force.

Mr. Chairman, the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigo] raises a grave issue. Under our form of government its legislative, executive, and judicial departments should be as contemplated by the Constitution—absolutely independent each of the other. Congress should keep in close touch with the executive branch by committees. We now require from the Executive Departments an annual report on the condition of the public business. We require them to report in efficient from the Executive Departments an annual report on the condition of the public business. We require them to report inefficient employees and delinquent officers and officers who have failed to pay moneys due the United States, but the Constitution and sound business judgment forbid any attempt on the part of Congress to take physical control and appoint or remove employees. In the direction of a close scrutiny of these Departments we ought not to relax supervision. We must not, however, even with the constitutional question aside, attempt to intermingle the legislative and executive functions of the Government, but keep them divorced. [Applause.] This has been our policy heretofore.

The gentleman from New York suggests that certain appointments have been made by the Librarian under the influence of men who have been in public life. I will assume that they are not now in public life. That is also true in the Treasury Department, the Department of the Interior, and in other executive branches of the Government. The gentleman himself, and other gentlemen, doubtless, in the past, as I have, have gone to the heads of those Executive Departments and solicited appointments for our constituents.

Mr. QUIGG. I have not had that opportunity so far.
Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman will do it under the incoming dministration. [Laughter.]
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not see how one can, with the Administration.

existing civil-service rules.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from New York may not have to prefer such requests in the event his substitute is agreed to, because he will have 187 offices of his own. I can see, Mr. Chairman, that we may intermingle the legislative and executive functions in connection with the Library to an extent that will absolutely paralyze the usefulness of that great Library. We have constructed the most magnificent library building in this country.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. In the world.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is a beautiful building, and I am proud of it. It is an imposing structure, and a credit to the great architect who designed it and the Republic which authorized its construction.

who designed it and the Republic which authorized its construction. It is almost oriental in its magnificence.

Now, Mr. Chairman, by the provision carried in the bill as it comes from the Committee on Appropriations, the incoming President can, with a salary of $6,000 a year, command the very best executive talent to direct and control the Library. Let us hold him to strict account for the proper conduct of the Library and care of the Library building, and if Representatives desire appointments under the Librarian they can present the claims of their constituents. constituents

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And relieve this committee.
Mr. DOCKERY. And relieve this joint committee. Mr. Chairman, I desire also to relieve the incoming Speaker of the House, because it is obvious that if this substitute becomes a law a great because it is obvious that if this substitute becomes a law a great many of us will be applicants for positions on the Committee on the Library. [Laughter.] There is now a great desire for places on the Committee on Ways and Means and on the Committee on Appropriations, but the pressure for those places now will not be a circumstance compared with the urgency there will be to secure positions on the Joint Committee on the Library. [Laughter.] Why, I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that my good friend from Pennsylvania on my left [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] has already indicated his desire for a place on that committee in the event the proposition of the gentleman from New York prevails.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Please do not forget the Ohio man.

Mr. DOCKERY. The "Ohio man" is never wanting where there is anything to be disposed of. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, in organizing this great library in that gorgeous new building, let us not make the grave mistake of also organizing a scramble for 187 offices to be disposed of under the direction and control of the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress, to the detriment of the public service. [Applause.]

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

mittee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hepburn, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill H.R. 9643, the legislative appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The historic old ship Constitution, now lying at the Portsmouth Navy-Yard, is in a sinking condition, and if something is not done very soon she will be beyond preservation. The people of New Hampshire are in favor of having her rebuilt, which appears to be the wish of the entire American people. It seems rather hard that Old Ironsides, the most famous relic in the Navy, should be allowed to go to the bottom, etc.

I wish to call the attention particularly of my colleague [Mr. Chandler] and of the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], both of whom are members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to this very important matter. and I ask unammous consent of the Senate that I may occupy a few minutes, not exceeding ten or fifteen at most, in submitting some remarks on this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I crave the indulgence of the Senate for a few minutes that I may once more make an appeal for the early consideration of the bill now on the Calendar in aid of the sneedy construction of the Nicarcana Canal. endar in aid of the speedy construction of the Nicaragua Canal under the control of the Government of the United States

Although I have heretofore on many occasions, in conjunction with other Senators who are favorable to this great enterprise, urged at length the importance of this measure as one paramount to any that could engage the attention of Congress, I do not intend to desist from any proper efforts I may exert in furtherance of the passage of this bill until success shall attend these efforts.

It will be remembered that the Senate, at the beginning of its It will be remembered that the Senate, at the beginning of its last session, when reorganizing the committees of this body, in view of the vast amount of other business always engaging the attention of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and which committee had, up to that time, jurisdiction of the Nicaragua Canal bill, organized a new committee called the Select Committee on Construction of the Nicaragua Canal, and to which committee was assigned exclusive jurisdiction of this important subject.

That committee, as is known, is composed of seven Senators, the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] being chairman, the other members being Senator Palmer of Illinois, Senator Martin of Virginia, Senator Hawley of Connecticut, Senator Mitchell of Oregon, Senator Squire of Washington, and Senator Sewell of New Jersey.

and Senator Sewell of New Jersey.

This committee at the last session, and immediately after its organization, entered upon the consideration of a measure having for its purpose the early construction of the Nicaragua Canal, under the direct control of the Government of the United States, and after a most thorough and careful consideration, perfected a measure which received the approval and cordial support of every member of that committee, and it was, on June 2 last, reported to the Senate by our distinguished chairman [Mr. Morgan] accom-panied by a very careful and elaborate report prepared by him, in which every phase of the project is discussed with great ability and circumstantiality, and which report also received the hearty approval of each member of such committee. The bill is now on the Calendar of the Senate, and is number 1221 of the Order of Business

Of course, not being chairman of the committee having the bill in charge, but merely a member thereof, it is not my province to move its consideration, but knowing full well how earnestly desirous the distinguished chairman of the committee is of securing consideration at the very earliest practicable moment, I felt it my duty to cooperate with him in appealing to the Senate that this important measure may not be sidetracked by other, and in the main, infinitely less important, matters which seem to be constantly pressing themselves to the front for consideration.

Until the bill can be taken up for discussion, it would of course be out of place for me to enter at length upon the arguments which to my mind are overwhelming in favor of this measure. These I have heretofore gone into at length on several occasions. And while my purpose at this time is to aid in bringing about the consent of the Senate to an early consideration of this bill, it may not perhaps be out of place, with the indulgence of the Senate, to state briefly the purport of the pending measure.

The bill provides that the capital stock of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua shall consist of 1,000,000 shares of $100 each Company of Nicaragua shall consist of 1,000,000 shares of $100 each and shall be nonassessable, and no more than this number of shares shall be issued, except by the consent of Congress.

It is further provided that if the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua shall within one year from the passage of the act show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that all the stock of the company heretofore subscribed for or issued, except the company heretofore subscribed for or issued. that heretofore issued to the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, has been called in, returned to, and canceled by the treasurer of the company, or satisfactory arrangements have been made for the return and cancellation of said stock, and that bonds issued by said company and obligations to deliver bonds have been redeemed and canceled, or that satisfactory arrangements have been made for their redemption and cancellation, and that all liabilities of the said company have been satisfied and all contracts and agreements heretofore made by said company, including all contracts with the Nicaragua Canal Construction Company, have been canceled, or that provision has been made for the satisfaction and cancellation of said contracts, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall, in behalf of the United States, subscribe for 700,000 shares of shall, in behalf of the United States, subscribe for 700,000 shares of the capital stock of said company, and said company shall thereupon issue to the said Secretary of the Treasury of the United States 700,000 shares of the capital stock, the same to be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, and which stock shall be issued in consideration of the guaranty by the United States of the bonds of such company and shall be regarded as fully paid and consecretable. nonassessable.

It is further provided that in addition thereto 70,000 shares of nonassessable capital stock of said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua shall be issued and delivered to such person or persons as may be designated by those stockholders of the said company whose stock has been surrendered and canceled.

The bill further provides that upon the issuance and delivery of the stock and bonds which the bill provides for, the board of directors of the company shall consist of 11 members, 1 to be appointed by Costa Rica, 1 by Nicaragua, 1 by the stockholders of the Maritime Canal Company other than the said Governments, and the remaining 8 to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and removable by the President of the United States for cause. removable by the President of the United States for cause. In case of a vacancy in the membership of directors appointed by the President, the same shall be filled by appointment by the President in the same manner for the unexpired term.

It is further stipulated that no director appointed by the President of the United States shall own, directly or indirectly, any stock or pecuniary interest in said company, nor shall any stock-

It is further provided that at their first meeting the directors appointed by the President of the United States shall divide themselves by lot into three classes, one of which shall consist of two

The director named by the holders of stock other than that held by the United States and the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica shall hold office for six years and until his successor is appointed and qualified. Six of the eleven directors, of whom five at least must be directors appointed by the President of the United States, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The board of directors shall elect a president and of business. The board of directors shall elect a president and vice-president from their number, and also a secretary and assistant secretary and treasurer, but neither the secretary nor the assistant secretary nor the treasurer shall be a director.

It is further provided that the treasurer of said Maritime Canal Company shall give bond to said company in such sum as may be fixed by the board of directors; and that the compensation of the directors shall be $5,000 per year, except the president, who shall receive $6,000 per year. The actual traveling expenses incurred by said directors in the service of the company shall be paid on receive $6,000 per year. The actual traveling expenses incurred by said directors in the service of the company shall be paid on approval of the same by the president of the board. The directors shall fix the salaries and compensation of all their employees, agents, and managers, including engineers not detailed for duty by the Secretary of War.

Every director appointed by the President of the United States shall visit the canal and make a personal examination of the works at least once each year. And they shall on or before the 15th day of November of each year make and send to the President of the United States a full and complete report in writing of all the acts and doings of the company, with a clear and detailed statement of the progress and condition of the work, together with their recommendations. A copy of said report shall be laid before Congress by the President with his annual message.

The bill further provides, after making provision for the can-cellation of all outstanding claims and stock of the Maritime Canal Company, that, to secure the means to construct and complete said canal and to meet the expenditures made on account thereof, the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua shall issue coupon or registered bonds, or both, of the said company, in denominations of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000, to an amount not nations of not less than $30 nor more than $1,000, to an amount not exceeding $100,000,000, to be dated on the 1st day of July, 1896, to be payable on the 1st day of July, 1926, but redeemable at the pleasure of the United States at any time after the 1st day of July, 1906, at par with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable quarterly on the 1st days of October, January, April, and July of each year, from the delivery of the bonds to said company by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time. It is also provided that the President of the United States may at any time suspend the issue of said bonds until Congress, being informed by him of the issue of said bonds until Congress, being informed by him of the reasons for such suspension, shall otherwise direct. And said bonds shall be secured by a first mortgage on its property and bonds shall be secured by a first mortgage on its property and rights of property now existing or hereafter acquired, of all kinds and descriptions, real, personal, and mixed, of all franchises and rights of the said company, including its rights and franchise to be a corporation. It is further provided such mortgage shall be duly executed in triplicate by the officers of said company, and shall be recorded in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury in Washington, and in the proper offices in Nicaragua and Costa Rica, to be designated by the said States; and as additional security for the payment of said bonds, and to save the United States harmless by reason of its guaranty of the same, a first lien is created by the bill in favor of the United States upon the Nicaragua Canal.

The bill further provides that the said mortgage bonds shall be prepared, engraved, and printed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, in the city of Washington, at the expense of said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, and, after being duly executed by the officers of said company, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States at Washington, and shall be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time to the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua only as the work on the Nicaragua Canal progresses. The bill further provides that the said canal shall be constructed under the supervision and according to the plans and specifications prepared by the Engineer Department of the United States Army.

The President of the United States, upon the recommendation of the Chief of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, shall, under the provisions of this bill, detail three competent engineers from the War Department to enter regularly the service of the Maritime Canal Company, and said engineers shall select one of their number as chief engineer, and thereafter shall detail such additional number as may be required from time to time by the additional number as may be required from time to time by the board of directors for the construction of said canal, provided the same can be done without detriment to the public service.

That it shall be the duty of the chief engineer in making his surveys and estimates, and of the directors in letting contracts, to divide the work into such sections and parts as will secure the completion of said canal with the utmost expedition.

It is further provided that the President of the United States may, and is authorized, in his discretion, at any time to appoint a board of three civil engineers, the members of which shall be selected from civil life, to visit and carefully inspect the route of the said canal and to make and conduct such examinations and investigations in reference to the same as may be deemed necessary, and to report thereupon to the President of the United States. And the sum of $200,000 is appropriated for the purposes of such examinations and investigations by said board of civil engineers.

The bill further stipulates that the board of directors shall quarterly file with the Secretary of the Treasury a detailed statement of the work done and the expenses incurred therefor during the preceding quarter, and the amount due and payable thereon, together with all other expenses incurred by said board, and on his examination and approval of said statement he shall issue and deliver to said board of directors bonds sufficient at their par value to cover the amount approved by him.

It is also provided that the said Maritime Canal Company shall not issue any bonds or mortgages except as provided for in this bill, and shall not indorse or guarantee the paper, contract, or obligation of any person, persons, or corporation whatsoever, except as herein provided, and no contract shall be entered into or purchase made by said company beyond the amount of bonds authorized to be issued by this bill.

It is also provided that the bonds so issued to said directors shall be disposed of by them at not less than their par value, and the proceeds arising from such sales shall be paid into the treasury of the canal company, to be used for the purposes specified in the bill. It is further provided that Congress shall at all times have the power to alter, amend, or repeal this proposed act.

There are various other important provisions in the bill, all tending to place not only the construction of this great work, but also its operation and management, after it is constructed, under the direct and absolute control of the Government of the United States, and all tending, moreover, to authorize its early completion.

While the construction of the Nicaragua Canal as provided for in the pending bill will be of vast benefit to every section of the United States, and would be a controlling factor in both internal and external commerce, a regulator not only of freight rates, but of the distances of transportation lines, and with resultant beneof the distances of transportation lines, and with resultant benefits of incomparable character to the whole people, it is nevertheless a fact that that section of the country which I in part represent—the Pacific Coast States—would by the construction of this great work be advantaged immeasurably beyond that of any other section, and hence it is the people of that section, irrespective of party, are justly earnest in their demands for early legislation on this important subject.

The mere statement of the benefits that must inevitably accrue, as all must concede, to the people of California, Oregon, and Washington, and those of adjacent States, is of itself a most convincing and unanswerable argument in favor of the speedy consideration and passage by Congress of this measure.

To the wheat growers and producers of other cereals in those States, the producers of wool, hops, fruit, and other agricultural products, and of lumber and its manufactured products, to those engaged in our salmon and cod fisheries, the construction of the Nicaragua Canal is of most vital importance. These producers are to-day, by reason of enormous freight rates, not only between Pacific coast ports and Liverpool and other European ports, where they must dispose of their surplus products, especially of wheat, hops, salmon, but also between Pacific and Atlantic ports of both the United States and South America, in the latter of which—I mean the Atlantic ports of the United States—they must find a market for their surplus wool, fruits, lumber, and many other products, absolutely at the mercy not only of the foreign producer of those products, but also of those of the States east of the Rocky Mountains, more especially of those east of the Missouri

At present, to reach the principal market for our surplus wheat, salmon, and hops in European ports, our producers and shippers are compelled to proceed by the circuitous route doubling Cape Horn, a distance from San Francisco of 14,690 miles, and from Oregon and Washington ports a still greater distance. By the construction of the Nicaragua Canal this water route to Liverpool and other European ports in the same latitude would be reduced in length to the enormous extent of 6,996 miles, a saving within a fraction of 7,000 miles, reducing the distance from 14,690 within a fraction of 7,000 miles, reducing the distance from 17,000 miles to 7,694 miles.

Again, the sole water route at present between the ports of the Pacific and Atlantic coasts—that is, between Portland, Oreg., for instance, and the port of New York—is about 15,440 miles, and between San Francisco and New York 14,840 miles. By the construction of the Nicaragua Canal this distance will be shortened nearly 10,000 miles; to be entirely accurate, about 9,894 miles, or, stated differently, the distance of the water route then between our Pacific and Atlantic ports will be reduced from 14,840 miles, stated differently, the distance of the water route then between our Pacific and Atlantic ports will be reduced from 14,840 miles, taking San Francisco as a Pacific coast port, to 4,946 miles.

It is estimated the construction of this canal will result in reducing water freight rates from the Pacific ports of San Francisco, Portland, Yaquina, Coos Bay, Siuslaw, Tillamook, Astoria, and other California and Oregon ports and Puget Sound ports not less than $2 per ton below the present rates by Cape Horn, to say nothing of the great saving of time in the voyage by reason of the immense shortening in distance. Estimating that the Pacific Coast States have a surplus of 2,000,000 tons of wheat—it was over 1,800,000 tons three years ago—a saving of $2 per ton would be a saving annually to the wheat growers alone of the Pacific Coast States, to say nothing of the producers of lumber, hops, salmon, and other products, of $4,000,000 annually, or an amount more than sufficient to meet any possible annual liability of the Government under the proposed guaranties of the pending bill.

But not only so. The construction of this maritime canal will have a controlling influence in regulating freight rates on wool, lumber, the products of lumber, fruits, salmon, furs, and other products of the Pacific States, the markets for which are in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other Atlantic ports. As a regulator of freight rates on the several transcontinental lines of railroad, no expedient could possibly be so effective as the construction of the Nicaragua Canal. The provisions of the Interstate Commerce act and the labors and decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission have done much good in this direction, but the opening of this great competitive water route would do

Commerce Commission have done much good in this direction, but the opening of this great competitive water route would do more toward reducing, regulating, and equalizing transportation charges across the continent each way on all kinds and character of traffic than all other influences combined.

And in addition to all this, the construction of this great maritime work will lend a stimulus to the development of the immeasurable resources of the Pacific States, including those of Alaska, urable resources of the Pacific States, including those of Alaska, which can not but be marvelous in effect.

I have heretofore considered at length, and especially in a speech delivered in this body on January 7, 1895, the constitutional objections urged against the power of Congress to enact this proposed legislation. I have also heretofore urged the vast importance of the work, considered from a naval point of view. I have also discussed at length, not only the feasibility and practicability of this work, but also its undoubted success, when completed, as a business enterprise. The fact is, if this great work when completed will produce even one-fourth of the revenues of pleted, as a business enterprise. The fact is, if this great work when completed will produce even one-fourth of the revenues of the Suez Canal annually the company would be able to meet every possible liability of the Government of the United States under the pending bill, leaving a surplus of two or three million dollars annually to the company.

But as the bill is not now up for consideration, I must not detain the Senate. My purpose at this time is to cooperate with and aid the distinguished chairman of the committee having this subject in charge in indusing the Senate to give its consent to take up this

I now find that I was entirely misinformed, and so I shall endeavor to secure the early consideration of the subject by the Senate. I wish to add that I am very much delighted with the presentation of this matter to-day by the

The matter referred to is as follows:

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. Cameron, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report (to accompany S. R. 163):

Congress at its last session, after long and patient consideration, adopted with practical unanimity the view expressed by your committee that the time had come for resuming intervention with Spain for the recognition of the independence of Cuba. Spain having declined to listen to any representation founded on an understanding between herself and the insurgents, and

Congress having pledged itself to friendly intervention, the only question that remains to be decided is the nature of the next step to be taken, with proper regard to the customs and usages of nations.

Before deciding this question, your committee has preferred to examine with some care all the instances which have occurred during this century of insurgent peoples claiming independence by right of revolt. The inquiry has necessarily led somewhat far, especially because the right of revolt or insurrection, if insurrection can be properly called a right, seems in every instance except one to have carried with it a corresponding intervention. For convenience, we have regarded both insurrection and intervention as recognized rights, and have attempted to ascertain the limits within which these rights have been exercised, and their force admitted by the general consent of nations.

The long duration of the French revolutionary wars, which disturbed the entire world for five and twenty years, and left it in a state of great confusion, fixed the beginning of our modern international systems at the year 1815, in the treaties of Vienna, of Paris, and of the Holy Alliance. The settlement of local disturbances, under the influence of the powers parties to these treaties, proceeded without serious disagreement until 1821, when the Greeks rose in insurrection against the Sultan. The modern precedents of European insurrection and intervention, where independence was the issue involved, began with Greece.

1. GREECE—1821-1827.

The revolution broke out in Greece at the end of March, 1821. Within a month the robels wesseld by Turkish pairsons. The Suitan immediately called all Mussulmans to arms; the Greek Patriarch was hung at the towns exceeded in the control of the Russia," replied Strangford, the British Ambassador, "but not as regards the allies and friends of the porte. According to Turkish law it was not allowed to leave a house in a condition that endangered a neighbor's safety. The Turkish Government believed it had restored the old solidity of the wall, but he (Lord Strangford) feared they were mistaken." "God forbid," said the Turk, "but in any case this would be our affair, not yours." "God forbid," repeated Lord Strangford, "for this is our affair as well as yours."

This was the situation when Lord Castlereagh died, and George Canning became prime minister of England. Down to that moment the British Government had identified itself with the Turkish Government, and had overstepped the line of neutrality in order to assist the Turkish campaigns by sea and land. Lord Castlereagh and Lord Strangford avowedly considered the Greeks as a worthless and mongrel race, incapable of self-government, whose claims were to be wholly rejected. George Cauning held that the greater danger to the peace and welfare of Europe was the Holy Alliance had refrained from interfering, while it was actively repressing disturbances in Spain and Italy, Canning held that intervention was proper, and that the duties and interests of England required her to intervene. His chief anxiety was to bring about his object without war between any of the parties.

He began by recognizing Greek belligerency. The Greeks issued a proclamation declaring a strict blockade of the ports of Patras and Lepanto; and thereupon the Ionian high commissioner, on the 17th of November, 1824, recognized this "communication from persons exercising the functions of government in Greece," and ordered "all ships and boats of whatever description, bearing the Ionian flag, 'to respect the same in the most strict and exact manner."

This seems to have been the step which led to Canning's somewhat famous definition of the nature of belligerency in 1825. "The Turkish Government."

insert his "communication from persons exercising the functions of government in Greece," and ordered "all ships and boats of whatever description, bearing the Ionian flag, 'to respect the same in the most strict and exact manner."

Me are told, "complained that the British led to Canning's somewhat famous definition of the nature of belligerency in 1825. "The Turkish Government," we are told, "complained that the British Government allowed to the Greeks a belligerent character, and observed that it appeared to forget that to subjects in rebellion no national character could properly belong." To this remonstrance Canning replied through the British resident at Constantinople that "the character of belligerency was not so much a principle as a fact; that a certain degree of force and consistency acquired by any mass of population engaged in war entitled that population to be treated as a belligerent, and even if their title were questionable, rendered it the interest, and the strict of the strict

"1. That the arrangement to be proposed to the Porte, if that Government should accept the proffered mediation, should have for its object to place the Greeks toward the Ottoman Porte in the relation hereafter mentioned:

"Greece should be a dependency of that Empire," etc. * * * Canning wished to save Turkey from Russian aggression, but Turkey refused to be saved. The Sultan would listen to no mediation between himself and his revolted subjects, least of all at a moment when his military position warranted him in feeling sure of success in subduing the revolt. Another year passed without bringing the issue to a point. Then France joined with England and Russia, and the three Powers, on the 5th of July, 1827, united in a formal treaty, signed in London, which committed them to armed intervention in case the Sultan should still reject their proffered mediation within the space of one month.

The preamble to this treaty set forth the motives which led the three sovereigns to intervene:

"Penetrated with the necessity of putting an end to the sanguinary contest which, by delivering up the Greek provinces and the isles of the archipelago to all the disorders of anarchy, produces daily fresh impediments to the commerce of the European States and gives occasion to piracies which not only expose the subjects of the high contracting parties to considerable losses, but besides render necessary burdensome measures of protection and repression, His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and His Majesty the King of France and Navarre having besides received on the part of the Greeks a pressing request to interpose their mediation with the Ottoman Porte, and being, as well as His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, animated by the desire of stopping the effusion of blood and of arresting the evils of all kinds which might arise from the continuance of such a state of things, have resolved to unite their efforts and to regulate the operation thereof by a formal treaty, with a view of reestablishing peace between the contending parties by means of an arrangement which is called for as much by humanity as by interest of the repose of Europe."

The treaty proceeded to bind the three parties to offer their mediation immediately on the basis of Turkish suzerainty and Greek self-government, and in case Turkey should not accept within one month the proposed mediation the powers should prevent further hostilities by ordering their squadrons to interpose.

from to interpose.

The Turkish Government, August 30, reiterated its decided, unconditional, final, and unchangeable refusal to receive any proposition on behalf of the Greeks. The next day the ambassadors sent the necessary orders to their squadrons, and in attempting to carry out these orders the admirals, much to the regret of the British Government, brought on the battle of Navarino October 20, 1827.

2. BELGIUM-1830.

The next European nation that claimed its independence on the ground of the right of revolution was the Belgian.

By a provision of the general European settlement of 1815 Holland and Belgium were united in one kingdom, known as that of the Netherlands, over which was placed the son of the last Stadtholder of Holland as King William I of the Netherlands.

When the French Revolution of July, 1830, occurred it spread instantly to the Netherlands. Toward the end of August, 1830, disturbances began, and soon became so serious as to threaten grave complications abroad as well as at home.

the Netherlands. Toward the end of August, 1830, disturbances began, and soon became so serious as to threaten grave complications abroad as well as at home.

King William sent a formal note, dated October 5, to the British Government, identical with notes to Prussia, Austria, and Russia, the four contracting parties to the treaty of 1815, calling on them to restore order, since all were bound "to support the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the actual state of Europe."

Representatives of the four powers, and with them the representative of France, met in London, November 4, 1830, and adopted a protocol:

"His Majesty the King of the Netherlands having invited the Courts of Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia, in their quality of powers signatory to the treaties of Paris and Vienna, which constituted the Kingdom of the Netherlands, to deliberate in concert with His Majesty on the best means of putting an end to the troubles which have broken out in his States; and the Courts above named having experienced, even before receiving this invitation, a warm desire to arrest, with the shortest possible delay, the disorder and the effusion of blood, have concerted ** * "

This protocol at once set aside the King of the Netherlands, ignoring his exclusive claim to supporting King William, the Five Powers imposed an immediate armistice on both parties.

Naturally the Belgian rebels then declared themselves independent. With such encouragement, their safety was guaranteed almost beyond the possibility of risk. The claim of independence was made November 18, 1830, and was recognized one month later by the powers, in their seventh conference, December 20. The representatives of the five powers, whose names were among the most famous in diplomacy—Talleyrand, Lieven, Esterhazy, Palmerston, Bulow—adopted, without the adhesion or even an invitation to be present of the Netherlands minister, a protocol whi'h announced intervention pure and simple; beginning with the abrupt recognition of the revolutionary governme vention pure and simple; beginning with the abrupt recognition of the revolutionary government:

"The plenipotentiaries of the five cours having received the formal adhesion of the Belgian Government to the armistice proposed to it, and which the King of the Netherlands has also accepted.

" * the conference will occupy itself in discussing and concerting the new arrangements most proper to combine the future independence of Belgium with the interests and the security of the other powers, and the preservation of the European equilibrium."

to combine the future independence of Belgium with the interests and the security of the other powers, and the preservation of the European equilibrium."

The Netherlands minister immediately recorded, December 22, a formal protest, and a reservation of King William's right to decide on "such ulterlor measures as should be taken in the double interests of his own dignity and the well-being of his faithful subjects."

A few days later, January 4, 1831, Holland entered a still more formal protest. In this strong and dignified paper the King's Government pointed out to the Five Powers the extreme importance of the new precedent they had established in international law:

"As King, called to guard the well-being of a fraction of the European population, His Majesty has been deeply concerned to remark that the complications arisen in Europe have appeared so grave that it has been thought proper, as the only remedy, to sanction the results of a revolt which was provoked by no legitimate motive, and thus to compromise the stability of all thrones, the social order of all states, and the happiness, the repose, and the prosperity of all peoples.

"Independent of the solidarity established between the different members of the European system, His Majesty, as sovereign of the Kingdom of the Netherlands, has seen in it an attack directed against his rights.

"If the treaty of Paris of 1814 placed Belgiumat the disposition of the high allies, these, from the moment they fixed the lot of the Belgian provinces, renounced, according to the law of nations, the faculty of returning on their work, and the dissolution of the bonds formed between Holland and Belgium under the sovereignty of the House of Orange Nassau, became placed beyond the sphere of their attributes. The increase of territory assigned to the united province of the Kingdom, and other pecuniary charges.

"The conference assembled, it is true, at the request of the King, but that circumstance did not conferon the conference the right to give its protocols a directi

The Belgians meanwhile continued to organize their Government on a basis, diplomatic and territorial, that assumed in their favor all the points in dispute. The King of Holland therefore putan end to the armistice and marching forward routed the Belgian forces August 11 and moved on Brussels, Belgium was then at his mercy. The King of the Belgians meanwhile wrote directly to the King of France requesting the immediate succor of a corps of French troops, and without waiting for concert with other powers the French Government marched 40,000 men across the frontier. (Granville to Palmerston, August 4, 1831. British State Papers, 1833.)

Thus within less than a year after rebellion had broken out, and without waiting for evidence of the right or the military force of the insurrection, every sort of intervention took place, diplomatic and military, joint and separate. Nor did the intervention stop with the measures taken for the succor of Belgium. As King William of Holland continued to reject the conditions imposed by the powers, and held Antwerpas a pledge for more favorable conditions of peace, the Governments of France and England, abandoning the European concert, announced that they should put their naval and military forces in motion, and accordingly the British Government, November —, 1832, embargoed Dutch ships and blockaded the Dutch coast, while the French army, November 14, formally laid siege to Antwerp.

3. POLAND—ISSI.

While the Belgian revolution was going on, a rebellion broke out in the ancient Kingdom of Poland, and on the 25th of January, 1831, the Polish diet declared the Czar Nicholas no longer King of Poland, and elected a regency of five members, with Prince Adam George Czartoriski at its head.

The Czar instantly gave notice to the minister of the new French King, Louis Philippe, that he would tolerate no intervention in Poland. Louis Philippe, who owed his own crown to the right of revolution, was the only sovereign in Europe who could be supposed likely to interpose, but for the moment his interest in France and Belgium absorbed all his energy. Much popular sympathy was felt for the Poles, and Lafayette, then near the end of his life, founded a Polish committee and raised money for their assistance. Before the question could acquire diplomatic importance by establishing a claim founded on the power of the rebels to maintain themselves, the Russian armies crushed the rebellion, and on September 8 regained possession of Warsaw. The entire struggle lasted barely nine months, and from the first its result was universally regarded as inevitable, or in the highest degree unpromising to the success of the revolution. As a diplomatic precedent it seemed to have no value, except as far as it offered an example of the power of Russia, as the Belgian insurrection had shown the power of England and France when in union.

4. Hungary—1849.

unpromising to the success of the revolution. As a diplomatic precedent it seemed to have no value, except as far as it offered an example of the power of Russia, as the Belgian insurrection had shown the power of England and France when in union.

4. HUNGARY—1849.

The next European people who claimed recognition as an independent member of the family of nations seems to have been the Hungarians.

On the 14th April, 1849, the Hungarian Diet formally declared Hungary an independent State and the Hapsburg dynasty forever deposed from the throne. The next day the Diet elected Louis Kossuth provisional president. In regard to history, geographical importance, population, and military resources, this people had no occasion to excuse or explain their claims or their rights. Hungary was not a new country. Its Government existed from time farms at that moment. The Austrian Emperor could hardly dispose of a larger force for the purpose of conquest.

The young Emperor Francis Joseph instantly appealed for aid to the Czar Nicholas of Russia, who instantly intervened. The Czar issued a manifesto April 27, stating the facts and the grounds on which his intervention was both the weakness of the belligarent, but on hied the right of meer vention not be weakness of the belligarent, but on hied the right of meer vention not a principle that she must intervene, because if she did not intervene Hungary would establish her independence.

"The insurrection in Hungary," began the manifesto of April 27, 1849, "has of late made so much progress that Russia can not possibly remain inactive."

2. "Son's a state of things endangers our dearest interests, and prudence compels us to anticipate the difficulties it prepares for us. The Austrian insurgents, it has formally requested His Majesty the Emperor (Nicholas) to assist in the repression of a rebellion which endangers the tranquillity of the two Empires. It was but natural that the two cabinets should understand one another on this point of common interest, and our troops have consequ with the Magyar patriots, to stand prepared, upon the contingency of the establishment by her of a permanent government, to be the first to welcome independent Hungary into the family of nations. For this purpose I invested an agent, then in Europe, with power to declare our willingness promptly to recognize her independence in the event of her ability to sustain it. The powerful intervention of Russia in the contest extinguished the hopes of the struggling Magyars." * * *

To this paragraph and to some expressions in the instructions the Austrian minister was ordered to take exception. He protested accordingly. Daniel Webster had then become Secretary of State, and replied to the protest in a paper known as the Hulsemann letter, in which he declared what he believed to be the American policy and the law in regard to new nationalities claiming recognition:

"Of course questions of prudence naturally arise in reference to new states brought by successful revolutions into the family of nations; but it is not to be required of neutral powers that they should await the recognition of the new government by the parent state. No principle of public law has been more frequently acted upon within the last thirty years by the great powers of the world than this. Within that period eight or ten new states have established independent governments within the limits of the colonial dominions of Spain on this continent; and in Europe the same thing has been done by Belgium and Greece. The existence of all these governments was recognized by some of the leading powers of Europe, as well as by the United States, before it was acknowledged by the states from which they had separated themselves. If, therefore, the United States had gone so far as formally to acknowledge the independence of Hungary, although, as the event has proved, it would have been a precipitate step and one from which no benefit would have resulted to either party, it would not, nevertheless, have been an actagnist the law of nations, provided they took no pa Austria."

Secretary Webster's view of the rights of intervention did not cover ground so wide as that taken by the Czar in his circular of April, 1849, but the attitude of President Taylor seems to have been intended as a counteraction, or a protest, as far as the influence of America extended, not so much to the claims of right or law asserted by the Czar as to the object of his intervention. The instructions of June 18, 1849, expressly said that Russia "has chosen to assume an attitude of interference, and her immense preparations for invading and reducing the Hungarians to the rule of Austria, from which they desire to be released, gave so serious a character to the contest as to awaken the most painful solicitude in the minds of Americans."

Thus on both sides the right to intervene both for and against the Hungarians seems to have been claimed and not expressly denied by either; and no other power appears to have offered even so much opposition as was shown by President Taylor to the principles or to the acts of Russia, which settled the course of history.

5. STATES OF THE CHURCH-1850.

5. STATES OF THE CHURCH—1850.

Besides the four precedents of Greece, Belgium, Poland, and Hungary, where new nationalities were in question, a much larger number of interventions occured in Europe in the process of disruption or consolidation, which has, on one hand, disintegrated the ancient empires of the Sultan, of Spain, of the Church, and, on the other, concentrated the new systems of Germany, Russia, and Italy.

Interventions have occurred most conspicuously in Spain, by France, in 1823; in Portugal, by England, in 1827; again in Spain and Portugal in 1836, by England and France, under what was called the "quadruple treaty;" in Piedmont and Naples, by the Holy Alliance, in 1821; and in so many instances since 1848 that the mere enumeration would be long and difficult; but none of the disturbed countries claimed permanent independence under a form of revolution unless it were perhaps the States of the Church, or Rome, which, on February 8, 1849, declared the Pope to be deposed and set up a provisional government under a revolutionary triumvirate. The National Assembly of France, which was then a Republic, hastened to adopt, March 31, 1849, a resolution that if, "in order better to safeguard the interests and honor of France, the Executive should think proper to support its negotiations by a partial and temporary occupation in Italy, it would find in the Assembly the most entire agreement." The Assembly doubtless intended to intervene in Italy in order to protect the revolutionary movement there from the threatened intervention of Austria. The French Executive, Louis Napoleon, gave another direction to the policy of France. He immediately sent a French army to Civita Vecchia, which landed there April 28, and after a bloody struggle drove the republican government out of Rome. The French entered Rome July 3. Pope Pius IX returned there in April, 1850, and during the next twenty years Rome remained under the occupation of a French army.

The only reason given by France in this instance for intervention was t

6. THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE-1878.

6. THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE—1878.

Since the year 1827 intervention in the affairs of the Ottoman Empire has been so constant as to create a body of jurisprudence and a long series of treaties, on which the existence of all political systems of southeastern Europe seems now to be more or less entirely based.

Not only Greece, Montenegro, Roumania, Bulgaria, Roumelia, Servia, and Egypt have been the creation of such intervention, or the objects of its restraints, but also Samos, Crete, and even the Lebanon, owe their legal status to the same source.

An authority so great must assume some foundation in law, seeing that the entire world acquiesced not only in the practical exercise of the force, but also in the principle on which it rested, whatever that principle was. The treaty of Berlin, in 1878, was a broad assertion of the right of the European powers to regulate the affairs of the Ottoman Empire, but the treaty contains no statement of the principle of jurisprudence on which the right rests.

rests.

The preamble merely declares that the Powers "being desirous to regulate, with a view to European order, the questions raised in the East by the events of late years, and by the war terminated by the preliminary treaty of San Stefano, have been unanimously of opinion that the meeting of a congress would offer the best means of facilitating an understanding."

In effect, the treaty of Berlin reduced the Ottoman Porte to tutelage, extinguished its sovereignty over certain large portions of its dominions, and restrained its rights over other portions. It recognized the independence of Servia, Roumania, and Montenegro, and fixed their boundaries. It established Bulgaria as "an autonomous and tributary principality under the suzerainty of the Sultan." It created the province of Eastern Roumelia "under conditions of administrative autonomy." It stipulated an organic law for Crete. It interfered in all directions with the internal arrangements of the Ottoman Empire.

Perhaps the most typical instance of assumption of power by the combined Governments was Article XXV of the treaty, which began: "The provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina shall be occupied and administered by Austria-Hungary."

Governments was Article XXV of the treaty, which began: "The provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina shall be occupied and administered by Austria-Hungary."

So liberal a use of the right of intervention has seldom been made, but the principle of jurisprudence on which it rested has never been officially declared. Nothing in the treaties expressly limits to the Ottoman Empire the right of intervention which was exercised in its case. The only principle jealously insisted upon seemed to be that of joint as against separate intervention by the European powers. With this implied restriction, the right of intervention "with a view to European order" appears to be the only foundation for the existing status of southeastern Europe and equally applicable to the rest of the world.

These six precedents include, as far as is known, every instance where a claim to independence has been made by any people whatever in Europe since the close of the Napoleonic wars in 1815. Other successful revolutions, such as those of Tuscany and the States of the Church in 1859, were the immediate results of intervention, and that of Naples in 1860 was from first to last perhaps the most striking example of intervention in modern times, although Naples hardly thought necessary to pass through any intermediate stage of recognition as an independent authority.

The six precedents therefore constitute the entire European law on the subject of intervention in regard to European peoples claiming independence by right of revolution. There is no other authoritative source of the law, for the judicial courts of Europe were bound to follow the political decision; and the opinions of private persons, whether jurists or politicians, being without sanction, could not be accepted as law.

From this body of precedent, it is clear that Europe has invariably asserted and practiced the right to interfere, both collectively and separately, amicably and forcibly, in every instance, except that of Poland, where a European people has resorted to insurrection to obtain independence.

The right itself has been based on various grounds: "Impediments to commerce;" "burdensome measures of protection and repression;" "requests" of one or both parties "to interpose;" "effusion of blood" and "visio of all kinds;" "humanity," and "the repose of Europe." (Greek Treaty of 1827.)

"A warm desire to arrest, with the shortest possible delay, the disorder and the effusion of blood." (Protocol of November 4, 1830, in the case of Belgium.)

"His own safety or the political equilibrium on the frontiers of his Empire." (Russian circular of April 27, 1849, in the case of Hungary.) "To safeguard the interest and honor" and to "maintain the political influence" of the intervening power. (French declarations of 1849-50 in regard to the States of the C

There remains the experience of Asia and America.

In regard to Asia, probably all authorities agree that the entire fabric of European supremacy, whether in Asiatic Turkey, Persia, Afghanistan, India, Siam, or China, rests on the right of intervention.

The exercise of this right constitutes another large but separate branch of public law, which, by common consent, is not regarded as applicable to nations of European blood.

Furthermore, although many governments in Asia have been extinguished by means of the right of intervention, none is known to have claimed independence founded on the right of insurrection. Certainly none has been recognized by Europe or America on that ground.

America, both North and South, has always aimed to moderate European intervention and to restrict its exercise. On this point we have the evidence of George Canning in a celebrated speech on the foreign enlistment act, in 1823.

"We have spent much time," said Canning, "in teaching other powers the nature of a strict neutrality; and, generally speaking, we found them most reluctant scholars. * * * If I wished for a guide in a system of neutrality, I should take that laid down by America in the days of the Presidency of Washington and the Secretaryship of Jefferson."

In fact, the British Government did take that guide. The American neutrality act of 1794, revised and reenacted in the act of April 20, ISIS, served as the model for the British foreign enlistment act in 1819. The cause of that act of 1819 was stated by Canning in the speech just cited:

"When peace was concluded between this country and Spain in 1814 an article was introduced into the treaty by which this country bound itself not to furnish any succors to what were then denominated the revolted colonies of Spain. In process of time, as those colonies became more powerful, a question arose of a very difficult nature, to be decided on a due consideration of their de jure relation to Spain on the one side and their de facto independence of her on the other. The law of nations was entirely silent with respect to a course which, under a circumstance so peculiar as the transition of colonies from their allegiance to the parent state, ought to be pursued. It was difficult to know how far either the statute law or the common law was applicable to colonies so situated. It became necessary, therefore, in the act of 1818 to treat the colonies as actually independent of Spain." *

Apparently Canning did not consider that the revolt of the American Colonies in 1776 offered a precedent for "a circumstance so peculiar as the transition of colonies from their allegiance." He regarded the situation as so peculiar that it needed to be met by measures in regard to w with England.

The disturbances in the Spanish colonies in America had begun as a consequence of the overthrow of the Bourbon dynasty by Napoleon, and the establishment of Joseph Bonaparte as King of Spain in 1808; but the movements for independence took serious form at a much later time.

In Mexico, the first national Congress met at Chilpancingo in 1818, and formally declared the independence of Mexico on the 6th of November of that year. It was practically suppressed by the execution of Morelos, December 29, 1815, and did not revive until Iturbide, in January, 1821, Joined Guerrero in the so-called Plan of Ignala. Iturbide made his triumphal entry into the City of Mexico September 27, 1821.

Venezuela first declared independence on July 15, 1811, but the Spanish forces continued the war until General Bolivar drove them from the interior in 1821, and General Paez captured Puerto Cabello in 1823.

Chile began her revolution in 1810, but did not declare independence until January 1, 1818, and then only by proclamation of the executive authority, "the actual circumstances of the war not permitting the convocation of an Benos Ayres also began her revolution in 1810, but did not declare independence and claim recognition until October 25, 1816.

The question of intervention began in 1817. The Spanish Government appealed to the European powers for aid. The Czar openly took sides with Spain, and when, in September, 1817, the Spanish Government asked permission to build several ships of war in the Russian dockyards, the Czar suggested that Spain should buy five ships of the line and three frigates belonging to the Russian may. This was don't fill the seal of the substance of European intervention.

Great Britain declared energetically that she would have no part in trying to force back the subjects of Spain under the domination of an oppressive government. In fact, Lord Castlereagh had already assured President Monroe that if Great Britain intervened at all it would be on a system of perfect liberality to the Spanish provinces; and the President decided, as early as April, 1815, to discourage European mediation, and to take the ground that ence of the South Americans. In Angust he made a formal proposal to the British and French Governments of a concerted and contemporary recognition of Buenos Ayres, whose de facto independence made that country the natural object of a first step toward the establishment of a general policy. In December he notifie recognition of all the revolted colonies of Spain—Mexico, Colombia, Chile, and Buenos Ayres.

These countries asked no more. They based their claim on their independence de facto, and Monroe admitted its force. "The provinces," he said, "which have declared their independence and are in the enjoyment of it ought to be recognized." He added that "the measure is proposed under a thorough conviction that it is in strict accord with the law of nations." In reality it created the law so far as its action went, and its legality was recognized by no European power. All waited in open or tacit disapproval of Monroe's course. England herself, even after Canning succeeded Castle-reagh, refused to approve. Spain protested vigorously; and as far as concerned objections, the Spanish Minister in Washington offered them in great numbers and with sufficient energy. He instantly protested, not only on grounds of morality and fact, but also of policy. "Buenos Ayres," he said, was "sunk in the most complete anarchy." In Peru, "near the gates of its capital," a rebel and a Spanish army divided the inhabitants. In Chile "an individual suppresses the sentiments of its inhabitants. "On the coast of Terra Firma, also, the Spanish banners wave." "In Mexico, too, there is no government." And he concluded, with force: "Where, then, are those governments which ought to be recognized?"

The question was not without difficulties, as Monroe knew, and on this point all Europe supported the Spanish contention. Although Congress unanimously approved and adopted the President's views and immediately appropriated $100,000 for diplomatic expenses, and although Mexico, Colombia, Chile, and Buenos Ayres were in consequence admitted into the family of nations by the sole authority of the President of the United States, with the approval of Congress, two years passed before the British Government consented even to discuss the subject in Parliament as a serious measure of policy.

Then, on June 15, 1824, a motion was made by Sir James Mackintosh, and policy.

Then, on June 15, 1824, a motion was made by Sir James Mackintosh, and Canning replied. His speech made no allusion to the action of the United States; it denied the de facto right of recognition, so far as to say that "We ought not to acknowledge the separate and independent existence of any government which is so doubtfully established that the mere effect of that acknowledgment shall be to mix parties again in internal squabbles if not in open hostilities." Canning still thought "that before we can act information as to matters of fact is necessary."

Nevertheless, Monroe's act, which extinguished the last hopes of the Holy Alliance in America, produced the deepest sensation among European conservatives, and gave to the United States extraordinary consideration. England used it as a weapon at the congress of Verona to threaten the other powers when they decided on intervention in Spain. Slowly Canning came wholly over to the side of Monroe, as France and Austria forced his hands in Spain. As early as October, 1823, he sent consuls to all the chief cities in rebellion throughout Mexico and Central and South America. Immediately after his speech in Parliament of June 15, 1824, he authorized his consul at Buenos Ayres to negotiate a commercial treaty with that Government. On the 1st of January, 1825, he notified other powers that England had determined to recognize the independence of Columbia, Mexico, and Buenos Ayres. In a speech in Parliament on the 15th of February, 1825, he explained and defended his conduct, blaming the United States, by implication, for pursuing "a reckless and headlong course," and claiming credit for following one "more strictly guarded in point of principle." "The whole question was one of time and mode."

Notwithstanding Canning's explanation, the principle of intervention on which he acted was not clear. Nothing in his act of recognition revealed a rule of any general value. He considered that "any other period or mode than that chosen would have been liable to some objection." Yet the period and mode he chose were strongly objected to throughout Europe, and met with energetic protest from Spain. Nearly two years more passed before he cleared up the mystery. Then, when driven to armed intervention in the affairs of Spain and Portugal, he made, on the 12th December, 1826, a speech in Parliament which was perhaps the most celebrated of his life. At the very end of this speech he explained the "principle" on which he had acted in regard to the independence of the Spanish colonies and the "time and mode" of recognition. It was the moment when a French army took possession of Spain.

"If France occupied Spain, was it necessary, in order to avoid the consequences of that occupation, that we should blockade Cadiz," Not, I looked

At the very end of this speech he explained the "principle" on which he had acted in regard to the independence of the Spains colonies and the "time possession of Spain.

"If France occupied Spain, was it necessary, in order to avoid the consequences of that occupation, that we should blockade Cadiz! No! I looked another way. I sought materials of compensation in another hemisphere, another way. I sought materials of compensation in another hemisphere, which is the principle that the state of the 10d."

The principle thus avowed by Canning added little to the European law of intervention, but the principle avowed by Monroe created an engine body of view it was not an isolated act; it was part of a system altogether new and wholy American, and it was to be justified on grounds far wider than itself. The European law and practice of intervention, extending as it did its scope only by creating an American law and practice of intervention, extending as it did its scope only by creating an American law and practice of intervention and empire and created a ming, who, in the midst of his European intervention and empire and created a ming, who in the midst of his European difficulties in 1831, intimated that England would be well pleased to see the United States take ground even more advanced than it he recognition of the South American revolted States. Lev. 1832, he announced the principle that the new nation which are system, and that the United States would regard any attempt to extend that system among them as unfriendly to the United States.

 It is equally disposition toward the United States and papiness.* * * It is equally disposition toward the United States and happiness.* * * It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should beload such interposition, in a system and that the United States would regard any attempt to extend that the Allied Powers should extend

In the case of Texas, however, we have to call attention to a subject on which the proposed action of Congress necessarily depends.

In a report made June 18, 1836, by Mr. Clay, from the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, in respect to the recognition of the independence of Texas (Senate Document No. 406, Twenty-fourth Congress, first session), are the following passages:

"The recognition of Texas as an independent power may be made by the United States in various ways: First, by treaty; second, by the passage of a law regulating commercial intercourse between the two powers; third, by sending a diplomatic agent to Texas with the usual credentials, or lastly, by the Executive receiving and accrediting a diplomatic representative from Texas, which would be a recognition as far as the Executive only is competent to make it. In the first and third modes the concurrence of the Senate in its executive character would be necessary, and in the second in its legislative character.

tent to make it. In the first and third modes the concurrence of the Senate in its executive character would be necessary, and in the second in its legislative character.

"The Senate alone, without the cooperation of some other branch of the Government, is not competent to recognize the existence of any power.

"The President of the United States by the Constitution has the charge of their foreign intercourse. Regularly he ought to take the initiative in the acknowledgment of the independence of any new power, but in this case he has not yet done it, for reasons which he without doubt deems sufficient. If in any instance the President should be tardy, he may be quickened in the exercise of his power by the expression of the opinion or by other acts of one or both branches of Congress, as was done in relation to the Republics formed out of Spanish America. But the committee do not think that on this occasion any tardiness is justly imputable to the Executive. About three months only have elapsed since the establishment of an independent government in Texas, and it is not unreasonable to wait a short time to see what its operation will be, and especially whether it will afford those guaranties which foreign powers have a right to expect before they institute relations with it."

Taking this view of the whole matter, the committee conclude by recommending to the Senate the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the independence of Texas ought to be acknowledged by the United States whenever satisfactory information shall be received that it has in successful operation a civil government capable of performing the duties and fulfilling the obligations of an independence of Texas ought to be acknowledged by the United States whenever satisfactory information shall be received that it has in successful operation a civil government capable of performing the duties and fulfilling the obligations of an independence of Texas ought to be acknowledged by the United States whenever satisfactory information s acknowledged by the United States whenever satisfactory information should be received that it had in successful operation a civil government capable of performing the duties and fulfilling the obligations of an independent power." After treating shortly the principles of recognition, President Jackson continued:

"Nor has any deliberate inquiry ever been instituted in Congress, or in any of our legislative bodies, as to whom belonged the power of recognizing a new state; a power the exercise of which is equivalent, under some circumstances, to a declaration of war; a power nowhere expressly delegated, and only granted in the Constitution, as it is necessarily involved in some of the great powers given to Congress—in that given to the President and Senate to form treaties with foreign powers and to appoint ambassadors and other public ministers, and in that conferred upon the President to receive ministers from foreign nations. In the preamble to the resolution of the House of Representatives it is distinctly intimated that the expediency of recognizing the independence of Texas should be left to the decision of Congress. In this view, on the ground of expediency, I am disposed to concur; and do not, therefore, consider it necessary to express any opinion as to the strict constitutional right of the Executive, either apart from or in conjunction with the Senate, over the subject. It is to be presumed that on no future occasion will a dispute arise, as none has heretofore occurred, between the Executive and the Legislature in the exercise of the power of recognition. It will always be considered consistent with the spirit of the Constitution and most safe that it should be exercised, when probably leading to war, with a previous understanding with that body by whom war can alone be declared, and by whom all the provisions for sustaining its perils must be furnished. Its submission to Congress, which represents in one of its branches the States of this Union and in the other the people of the United States, where "her independence would be speedily recognized by that enlightened body." Until now no further question has been raised in regard to the powers of Congress.

So much space has been taken by this historical summary that the case of Texas must be passed over without further notice, and the cases of Haiti and Santo Domingo may be set aside as governed by peculiar influences. The record shows that in every instance except Poland down to 1850 where any people has claimed independence by right of revolt the right of intervention has been exercised against the will of one or the other party to the dispute. In every instance the only question that has disturbed the intervening powers has regarded neither the right nor the policy so much as the "time and mode" of action. The only difference between the European and American practice was that the United States aimed at moderating or restricting the extreme license of European intervention, and this was the difference which brought the United States nearly into collision with Europe in 1861 and 1862. Lords Palmerston and Russell, as well as the Emperor Napoleon and his ministers, entertained no doubt of their right to intervene even before our civil war had actually commenced, and accordingly recognized the insurgent States as belligerents in May, 1861, although no legal question had yet been raised requiring such a decision. The United States Government never ceased to protest with the utmost energy against the act as premature and unjust, and this last and most serious case of interference in which the United States were concerned as an object of European intervention revealed the imminent danger of its destruction.

The United States And Mexico—1861-1866.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO-1861-1866.

Allusion has been already made to the declaration of Lord John Russell on the part of the British Government in the House of Commons May 6, 1861, in which he announced that the law officers of the Crown had already "come to the opinion that the Southern Confederacy of America, according to those principles which seem to them to be just principles, must be treated as a beligerent." This astonishing promise of belligerency to an insurrection which had by the latest advices at that time neither a ship at sea nor an army on land, before the fact of war was officially known in England to have been proclaimed by either party, was accompanied by a letter of the same date from Lord John Russell to the British ambassador at Paris, in which he said that the accounts which had been received from America were "sufficient to show that a civil war has broken out among the States which lately composed the American Union."

"Other nations have therefore to consider the light in which, with reference to that war, they are to regard the Confederacy into which the Southern States have united themselves; and it appears to Her Majesty's Government that, looking at all the circumstances of the case, they can not hesitate to admit that such Confederacy is entitled to be considered as a belligerent, invested with all the rights and prerogatives of a belligerent."

Under these circumstances, Lord John Russell invited the Emperor of France to cooperate with England in "a joint endeavor" to obtain "from each of the belligerents" certain concessions in favor of neutrals. On May 8 the French minister "concurred entirely in the views of Her Majesty's Government issued its formal proclamation of neutrality between the United States and "certain States styling themselves the Confederate States of America."

Lord John Russell justified this action on the ground of "the size and population of the seceding States "and "the critical condition of our (British) commerce." He denled that the British Government had any thought of giving assistance to the South.

Nevertheless, the language of Lord John Russell showed that he considered the issue as decided in advance and that his measures were shaped on that assumption. His speech of May 6 characterized the insurgents, without qualification, as "the Southern Confederation of North America," or "the Confederate States of America," as though their independence were fully established. All his expressions and acts warranted the belief that the re and in May be advised it to intervene by forcibly raising the American blockade. Mercier's recommendation was communicated to Russell, who entertained no doubts as to the right of intervention, either diplomatic or military, even at that early moment, when the serious operations of war had hardly begun:

"There is much good sense in Mercier's observations," wrote Russell to Palmerston, October 17, "but we must wait; I am persuaded that, if we do anything, it must be on a grand scale. It will not do for England and France to break a blockade for the sake of getting cotton; but in Europe powers have often said to belligerents, "Make up your quarrels. We propose to give terms of pacification which we think fair and equitable. If you accept them, well and good. But if your adversary accept shem, and if you refuse them, our mediation is at an end, and you must expect to see us your enemies."

"France would be quite ready to hold this language with us. If such a policy were to be adopted, the time for it would be at the end of the year, or immediately before the meeting of Parllament."

Already, on May 6, Russell had officially announced the Greek precedent as his rule of law. In October he was ready to take the last step but one in the line of the Greek example. The five years of 1821 counted as five months in 1861. Palmerston was not yet ready, and the concession of the United States in the Trent affair in the following winter made an aggressive movement less popular in England, but in the autumn of 1862 Palmerston also thought the moment had arrived. Neither of these two powerful statesmen, the highest English authorities of their times on the subjects of foreign relations, doubted the right or the expediency of intervention after the second campaign in Virginia. On September 14, 1862, Palmerston wrote to Russell suggost flows, and a supplied to the free produce of the confederates. I agree further that in case of fallure, we describe good offices," as in the Greek protocol of 1828. Russell eagerly appro hand, they should have the follow."

Fortunately for the United States, Russell and Palmerston found their serious difficulties, not in France or in the law, but in the political division of their own party. These two powerful statesmen, who had been both honored with the position of prime minister of England, had united their influence to create the existing ministry. They seem to have supposed that their united authority was sufficient to control the ministry they had created, but the moment Russell opened the subject to others he received a check. He persevered; he issued a confidential memorandum suggesting his idea; he brought the subject before a cabinet meeting October 23, 1822, and the division of opinion proved to be so serious that the subject was postponed. The question became one of internal politics, social divisions, and party majorities.

The scheme of intervention was embraced by the Emperor of France as seriously as by Russell and Palmerston. Long before the two English statesmen decided to act, Napoleon III had given his first interview to the Confederate agent accredited to his Government. News of the defeat of the Union Army before Richmend reached Paris on the 15th of July, 1802, and the next day Mr. Slidell asked and received an interview. The Emperor talked with exceeding frankness, according to the report made by Mr. Slidell to Mr. Benjamin.

exceeding frankness, according to the report made by Mr. Slidell to Mr. Benjamin.

"The Emperor received me with great kindness and [said] * * * that he had from the first seen the true character of the contest, and considered the reestablishment of the Union impossible and final separation a mere question of time; that the difficulty was to find a way to give effect to his sympathies; that he had always desired to preserve the most friendly relation with England, and that in so grave a question he had not been willing to act without her cooperation; that he had several times intimated his wish for action in our behalf, but had met with no favorable response, and that, besides, England had a deeper interest in the question than France; that she wished him to draw the chestnuts from the fire for her benefit; * * * that he had committed a great error, which he now deeply regretted; France should never have respected the blockade; that the European powers should have recognized us last summer, when our ports were in our possession and when we were menacing Washington; but what, asked he, could now be done?"

Napoleon's language was not official; but he had committed himself beyond recall to the policy he described; for hardly had the civil war broken out than he had plunged into a scheme of armed intervention in Mexico. Perhaps the ultimate salvation of America in this crisis was due to the mistake of judgment which led Europe to attack the Monroe doctrine and the American system in Mexico, instead of attacking its heart. He made no secret of his wish to substitute French influence on the Gulf of Mexico in the place of American. This had been the dream of every great French ruler, and Napoleon III had a "doctrine" of his own, far more ancient than that of Monroe and backed by more formidable military force. Europe did intervene by arms in the American civil war, but fortunately she attacked our ally and only indirectly ourselves. Fortunately, too, in betraying his ultimate objects in Mexico, Napoleon alienated Eng mate objects in Mexico, Napoleon alienated England and did not conciliate Spain.

Yet the attack was made, violently in Mexico, more cautiously at Washington, and as systematically as the mutual jealousies of Europe permitted. At the moment when Russell and Palmerston brought their scheme of intervention before the British cabinet, Napoleon sent reenforcements of 35,000 men to his force in Mexico, with orders to occupy the country, and simultaneously sent a formal invitation to England and Russia to intervene in the American civil war.

These papers have not been published, and we do not know the express grounds on which the invitation was offered or declined. To the fact that Russia was avowedly friendly and that the two most powerful British prime ministers of their time were outvoted in their own cabinets America owed her escape from European domination. Mexico, indeed, suffered severely, but only while our civil war was in doubt. From the moment the authority of the Union was wholly restored, in 1865, the entire influence of the United States Government was exerted to reestablish also the authority of the Monroe doctrine. The life of the one was dependent on the life of the other.

Into this American system, thus created by Monroe in 1822-23, and embracing then, besides the United States, only Buenos Ayres, Chile, Colombia, and Mexico, various other communities have since claimed, and in most cases have received, admission, until it now includes all South America, except the Guianas; all Central America, except the British colony of Honduras, and the two black republics of Spanish Santo Domingo and Haiti, in the Antilles.

No serious question was again raised with any European power in regard to the insurrection or independence of their American possessions until in 1869 a rebellion broke out in Cuba, and the insurgents, after organizing a government and declaring their independence, claimed recognition from the United States.

The Government of the United States had always regarded Cuba as within the sphere of its most active and serious interest. As early as 1825, when the newly recognized States of Colombia and Maxico were supposed to be preparing an expedition to revolutionize Cuba and Puerto Rico, the United States Government interposed its friendly offices with those Governments to request their forbearance. The actual condition of Spain seemed to make her retention of Cuba impossible, in which case the United States would have been been partly due to the energy with which of manufacture of wour right and our power to prevent it." and his determination to use all the means within his competency "to guard against and forefied it."

This right of intervention in matters relating to the external relations of Cuba, asserted and exercised seventy years ago, has been asserted and exercised at every crisis in which the island has been involved.

When the Cuban insurgents in 1839 appealed to the United States for recognition, President Grant admitted the justice of the claim, and directed the minister of the United States for very member of the Senate, and was made the basis of its resolution last session, means nothing more than the useless sacrifice of human life and the utter destruction of the very subject-matter of the conflict."

Although the President appears to have reached a different conclusion from ours, we believe this to be the actual situation of Cuba, and, being unable to see that further delay could lead to any other action than that which the President anticipates, we agree with the conclusion of the message that, in such case, our obligations to the sovereignty of Spain are "superseded by higher cobligations which we can hardly hesitate to recognize and discharge." Foliowing closely the action of President Monroe in 1818, Congress has already declared in effect its opinion that there can be no rational interference except on the basis of independence. In 1822, as now, but with more force, it was objected, as we have shown, that the revolted States had no Governments to be recognized. Divisions, and even civil war, existed among the insurgents themselves. Among the Cubans no such difficulty is known to exist. In September, 1896, as we know by official documents printed on the spot, the insurgent Government was regularly organized, a constitution adopted, a President elected, and, in due course, the various branches of administration set in motion. Since then, so far as we are informed, this Government has continued to perform its functions undisturbed. On the military side, as we officially know, they have organized their system of administration in the field sufficient forces to baffe the exertions of 200,000 Spanish soldlers. On the civil side they have organized their system of administration in every proving the interesting of the supersymmetric properties of the control of the courty." ADDITIONAL VIEWS PRESENTED BY MR. MORGAN AND MR. MILLS IN SUP-PORT OF THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

The report of the committee has the unqualified approval of the undersigned members of that body, but they conceive that it is well to present therewith the former action of the Committee on Foreign Relations, in 1859, on the same subject and on some of the same points that are discussed in the signed members of that body, but they conceive that it is well to present therewith the former action of the Committee on Foreign Relations, in 1859, on the same subject and on some of the same points that are discussed in the present report.

On January 24, 1859, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations had under consideration a Senate bill "making appropriations to facilitate the acquisition of the Island of Cuba, by negotiation," and made a report, which is hereto appended and designated as Appendix No. 1.

That report covers a period of fifty-nine years, and sets forth the political conditions then existing in Cuba, and the disastrous effects of Spanish rule in Cuba during that time. They are the same in their leading characteristics that existed at the beginning of the insurrection that was set on foot by the native population in 1868, in the outbreak at Yarra, which was followed by ten years of internecine warfare, attended with horrible butcheries.

The causes that provoked that uprising of the native Cubans are the same that are stated in the report of the committee made ten years previously, in 1859. They are summed up in the following general statement of that committee:

"There can be no doubt that an immense majority of the people of Cuba are not only in favor but ardently desirous of annexation to the United States. It would be strange indeed if they were not so. Deprived of all influence, even in the local affairs of the island, unrepresented in the Cortes, governed by successive hordes of hungry officials sent from the mother country to acquire fortunes to be enjoyed at home, having no sympathy with the people among whom they are mere sojourners, and upon whom they look as inferiors; liable to be arrested at any moment on the most trifling charges; tried by military courts or submissive judges, removable at pleasure; punished at the discretion of the captain general, they would be less than men if they were contented with their yoke."

The "mother country," as it is styled by the committee, is t

Cuba as a decent respect for the world's knowledge of the truth of the actual situation of the people there would permit. It is dark enough without the illumination of the fires of devastation that succeeding years have witnessed in Cuba.

Among the great debates in Congress upon that report of the Committee on Foreign Relations the part of a speech that relates to Cuba and the report of the committee above referred to, made by Hon. Judah P. Benjamin in the Senate on February II, 1850, is appended hereto, marked Appendix No. 2.

Mr. Benjamin gives an accurate and much more complete statement of the condition of the people of Cuba and the methods of Spaniar The relations of Senate on Intellectual Cuba and the methods of Spaniar The relations of Sectual insurrection in Cuba as they were afterwards, from 1898 to 1878, and have been almost ever since and are now, by the excessive and inhuman abuses of power in Cuba, to which no limit can be now anticipated, either as to the time when they will end or the increased cruelty that is now a settled feature of the present Spanish war of extermination. The President recognizes the fact that the present war is for independence on the part of the Cubans, and not for the partification of personal armbition. or alone for the redress of personal or political grievances, with why and the independence of their country vidual sufferings.

Hon. T. Estrada Palma was duly accredited as diplomatic delegate plenipotentiary to the United States, under an appointment by the constituent assembly of the Republic of Cuba.

He appears to have been received, informally, for the purpose of presenting the case of Cuba to our Government.

On the 7th December, 1886, he addressed a note to the Secretary of State, accompanied by a state accompanied this note, the delegate stated the causes of the revolution in Cuba; that it had reached that stage in which the issue between the contenting parties "is independence or extermination."

The recent message of the President is clear on the point that he none of them is any bad purpose impuses when the contradicted those statements, or any material part of them, on the authority of the Spanish Government, or upon any official or other credible authority.

The tenor of the message of the President to this session of Congress is a reaffirmation of all this history, stated in all these papers. In the part of his message relating to Cuba he has laid them before Congress without any special recommendation, and has left to Congress the duty of making provision for the security of the rights, the property, and the lives of our citizens residing in Cuba, and of enforcing the right of indemnity on behalf of the legal successors of those who have been killed there. He has intimated that delay is the wisest policy, but he has refrained from saying that delay is required by our national honor, or by the interests of humanity.

A comparison of this message, which is appended hereto and marked Appendix 4, will show that it agrees with the statements of every President who has alluded to the subject, and it further shows that the same spirit of tyrannical domination now prevails in Cuba that has kept the people of that island in despairing servitude during this entire century.

The message of Mr. Cleveland, who has no aversion to Spanish rule in Cuba, confirms, in all important statements, the truth of the charges made by Mr. Estrada Palma against Spain in the exposition of the case of Cuba which he presented to our Secretary of State.

The only difference in the situation in Cuba as it is described in the President's message in 1896—thirty-seven years later—is that, as time has progressed, the wrongs of Cuba have been aggravated and the means of repression employed by Spain have grown into a war against humanity, a war of annihilation of property and the extermination of the native population. If the firm purpose of our predecessors to put an end to this condition of affairs in Cuba, in the comparatively mild form of tyranny that existed fifty years ago, has degenerated into however, that it was at that time the policy of this Government to acquire that island unless its inhabitants were very generally disposed to concur in the transfer. Under certain conditions the United States might be willing to purchase it; but it is scarcely expected that you will find Spain, should you attempt to ascertain her views upon the subject, at all inclined to enter into such a negotiation. There is reason to believe that she is under obligations to Great Britain and France not to transfer this island to the United States. Were there nothing else to justify this belief but the promptness with which these two powers sent their naval forces to her aid in the late Cuban disturbances, the proposition for a tripartite convention to guarantee Cuba to Spain, and, what is more significant than either of the above facts, the sort of joint protest by England and France, to which I adverted in my instructions to Mr. Buchanan, against some of the views presented in Mr. Everett's letter of the 2d of December last to Mr. Sartiges, the French minister, would alone be satisfactory proof of such an arrangement. Independent of any embarrassment of this nature, there are many other reasons for believing that Spain will pertinaciously hold on to Cuba, and that the separation, whenever it takes place, will be the work of violence."

From these and other extracts that might be presented it is manifest that the ultimate acquisition of Cuba has long been regarded as the fixed policy of the United States—necessary to the progressive development of our system. All agree that the end is not only desirable but inevitable. The only difference of opinion is as to the time, mode, and conditions of obtaining it.

The law of our national existence is growth. We can not, if we would, disobey it. While we should do nothing to stimulate it unnaturally, we should be careful not to impose upon ourselves a regimen so strict as to prevent its healthful development. The tendency of the age is the expansion of the great powers of the world.

The fruit that was not ripe when John Quincy Adams penned his dispatch to Mr. Forsyth (it has not yet been severed by violence from its native tree, as he anticipated) is now mature. Shall it be plucked by a friendly hand, prepared to compensate its proprietor with a princely guerdon, or shall it fall decaying to the ground?

In those cases the object of the appropriation was as well known to the country and to the world as if it had been specifically stated. The knowledge of that fact did not then in the slightest degree tend to defeat the intended object, nor can it do so now. Under our form of government we have no state secrets. the means which may be indispensable to success, it may well be considered by the President as an intimation that we do not desire the acquisition of the island.

It has been asserted that the people of Cuba do not desire a transfer to the United States. If this were so, it would present a very serious objection to the measure. The evidence on which it is based is that on receipt of the President's message addresses were made by the municipal authorities of Habana and other towns, protesting their devotion to the Crown and their hostility to the institutions of the United States. Anyone who has had an opportunity of observing the persuasive influence of the bayonet in countries where it rules supreme will know how much value to attach to such demonstrations of popular sentiment. There can be no doubt that an immense majority of the people of Cuba are not only in favor, but ardently desirous of annexation to the United States. It would be strange, indeed, if they were not so; deprived of all influence, even in the local affairs of the island; unrepresented in the Cortes; governed by successive hordes of hungry officials sent from the mother country to acquire fortunes to be enjoyed at home, having no sympathy with the people among whom they are mere sojourners, and upon whom they look down as inferiors; liable to be arrested at any moment on the most trifling charges; tried by military courts or submissive judges, removable at pleasure; punished at the discretion of the captain-general, they would be less than men if they were contented with their yoke. But we have the best authority, from the most reliable sources, for asserting that nearly the entire native population of Cuba desires annexation.

Apprehensions have been expressed by some Southern statesmen of perils resulting from the different elements composing the population, and the supposed mixture of races. They are not justified by the facts. The entire population, by the census of 1850, was 1,247,230, of which 605,560 were whites, 205,570 free colored, atmosphere of freedom.

Many of them, accompanied by their families, are to be met with every summer at our cities and watering places, observing and appreciating the working of our form of government and its marvelous results; many seeking until the arrival of more auspicious days an asylum from the oppression that has driven them from their homes; while hundreds of their youths in our schools and colleges are acquiring our language and fitting themselves hereafter, it is to be hoped at no distant day, to play a distinguished part in their own legislative halls, or in the councils of the nation.

These men, who are the great proprietors of the soil, are opposed to the continuance of the African slave trade, which is carried on by Spaniards from the Peninsula, renegade Americans, and other advanturers from every clime and country, tolerated and protected by the authorities of Cuba of every grade.

tinuance of the African slave trade, which is carried on by Spaniards from the Peninsula, renegade Americans, and other advanturers from every clime and country, tolerated and protected by the authorities of Cuba of every grade.

Were there a sincere desire to arrest the slave trade, it could be as effectually put down by Spain as it has been by Brazil. Cuba and Porto Rico are now the only marts for this illegal traffic; and if the British Government had been as intent upon enforcing its treaty stipulations with Spain for its aboltion as it has been in denouncing abuses of our flag. which we can not entirely prevent, this question would long since have ceased to be a source of irritating discussion, it may be, of possible future difficulty. Those who desire to extirpate the slave trade may find in their sympathy for the African a motive to support this bill.

We have, since the conclusion of the Ashburton treaty in 1842, kept up a squadron on the coast of Africa for the suppression of the slave trade, and we are still bound to continue it. The annual cost of this squadron is at least $800,000. The cost in seventeen years amounts to $13,800,000, and this, too, with results absolutely insignificant. It appears from a report of a select committee of the British House of Commons, made in March, 1830, that the number of slaves exported from Africa had sunk down in 1842 (the very year in which the Ashburton treaty was concluded), to nearly 30,000. In 1843 it rose to 55,000. In 1846 it was 78,000; in 1847 it was $4,000, and was then in a state of unusual activity. Sir Charles Hotham, one of the most distinguished officers of the British navy, and who commanded on the coast of Africa for several years, was examined by that select committee. He said that the force under his command was in a high state of discipline; that his views were carried out by his officers to his cultire satisfaction; that, so far from having succeeded in stopping the slave trade, he had not even crippled it to the extent of giving it a permanent

The importation of slaves into the United States was prohibited in 1808. Since then, a period of more than fifty years, but one case has occurred of its violation—that of the Wanderer, which has recently excited so much attention. Another consequence which should equally enlist the sympathies of philanthropists, excepting that class whose tears are only shed for those of chon hue, and who turn with indifference from the sufferings of men of any other complexion, is the suppression of the infamous coolist traffic—a traffic so much the more nefarious as the Chinese is elevated above the African in the scale of creation; more civilized, more intellectual, and therefore feeling more acutely the shackles of the slave ship and the harsh discipline of the overseer. The number of Chinese shipped for Cuba since the commencement of the traffic up to March last is 25,777, of whom 4,134 perished on the passage. From that date up to the close of the year the number landed at Habana was 9,449. We blush to say that three-fourths of the number were transported under the American and British flags—under the flags of the two countries that have been the most zealous for the suppression of the African slave trade. The ratio of mortality on the passage was 144 per cent, and a much larger proportion of these wrecked behaviors as 144 per cent, and a much larger proportion of these wrecked behaviors that have been completed, the small remnant of the survivors will furnish conclusive evidence of the barbarity with which they are treated. The master feels no interest in his temporary slave beyond that of extracting from him the greatest possible amount of labor during the continuance of his servitude. His death or incapacity to labor at the end of his term is to the master a matter of as much indifference as is the fate of the operative employed in his mill to the Manchester spinner.

Another effect of this measure, which will recommend it most strongly to the humanitarians, will be the better treatment and increased happiness of the A of the purchase. Is this sum to be weighed in the balance with the advantages, political and commercial, which would result from it? Your committee think that it should not.

A few words on the wealth and resources of Cuba, and your committee will close this report, which has swollen to dimensions not incommensurate with the importance of the subject, but which, it may be feared, will, under the pressure of other business during this short session, be considered as unduly trespassing on the attention of the Senate. The amount of taxes that can be levied upon any people, without paralyzing their industry and arresting their material progress, is the experimentum crucis of the fertility of the land they inhabit. Tried by this test, Cuba will favorably compare with any country on either side of the Atlantic.

Your committee have before them the last Cuban budget, which presents the actual receipts and expenditures for one year, with the estimates for the same for the next six months. The income derived from direct taxes, customs, monopolies, lotteries, etc., is $16,308,50. The expenses are $16,290,603.

This equilibrium of the budget is accounted for by the fact that the surplus revenue is remitted to Spain. It figures under the head of "Atenciones de la Peninsula," and amounts to $1,404,609, and is the only direct pecuniary advantage Spain derives from the possession of Cuba, and even this sum very much exceeds the average net revenue remitted from that island, all the expenses of the army and navy employed at or near Cuba being paid by the island. The disbursements are those of the general administration of the Island, those of Habana and other cities being provided for by special imposts and taxes. It may be moderately estimated that the personal exactions of Spanish officials amount to $5,000,000 per annum, thus increasing the expenses of the government of Cuba, apart from those which, with us, would be considered as county or municipal, to the enormous sum of $21,300,000, or about $31,350 per head for the who

Thus, for the 300,000,000 souls who are dependent on it, it gives but 8 pounds per head, while the consumption in England is triple that quantity and in the United States 20 pounds per head. The use of sugar in the world is rapidly increasing. In France it has doubled in thirty years. It has increased more than 50 per cent in England in fifteen years. In the Zollverein it has quadrupled. The production of beet-root sugar in France was for four years as follows:

Years.	Number working.	Kilos.
1854	208	77, 848, 208

1856	275	91, 003, 098
1857	341	132, 000, 000

The figures for 1857 are only to March 1, and exceed by 54,000,000 kilograms the product of last year. The production in the Zollverein in 1855 was as follows:

giving a total of 19,188,402. The increase in the consumption is immense. In 1841 the total for the three countries above named was 420,000 tons. This has increased to 800,000 tons, or a quantity nearly doubled, and the supply has come from Louisiana and from best roots; the former failed considerably in the last two years, and, as a consequence, nearly convulsed the world. The value of sugar in the open market, then, seems to depend upon the precarious crop of Louisiana, since, when that fails, the prices rise all over the world.—United States Economist.

The following table, derived from a reliable source, exhibits the total number of vessels that have arrived at this port since 1847 with Asiatics, their, flags, tonnage, number of Asiatics shipped and landed, number and percentage of deaths, etc. which, I think, will not be deemed uninteresting:

From the foregoing it will be seen that the loss of life on the total number shipped actually amounts to 144 per cent; and whilst the number of deaths of those brought hither in Portuguese ships amounts to only 24 per cent, the number brought in American ships amounts to 12 per cent, in British ships to 144 per cent, and in French ships to 134 per cent, whilst in Peruvian ships the number of deaths amounts to 384 per cent.

APPENDIX NO. 2.

SPEECH OF HON. J. P. BENJAMIN, OF LOUISIANA, ON THE ACQUISITION OF CUBA.

[Delivered in the Senate of the United States, Friday, February 11, 1859.] * .

I have thus far spoken, sir, of the beneficial results to humanity arising from the acquisition of Cuba, in the double aspect of the preservation of the island from a lapse into the barbarism and savage state of the other Antilles, and of regard for its miserable laboring population. What would be its effects on the superior race—on the white natives of the island, now numbering nearly three-quarters of a million?

In spite of pro form a petitions, recently forwarded from Habana, under the orders of the captain-general, the ardent aspirations of the Cubans for release from the grinding tyranny under which they languish are too well known for concealment. I will not appeal to a knowledge personal to us all; I will not rely on the fact that, amongst the numerous Cubans with whom I have had opportunity of conversing on the subject, I never yet have found one—no, not one—who did not pant for the hour of freedom, who was not ready to strike for his liberty if the remotest prespect of succor could be held out to him. I will appeal to history, and leave its teachings to the appreciation of a candid world. My sketch must be rapid.

At the close of the last and the commencement of the present century Cuba was presperous and happy. Subjected to a colonial system identical with that then generally prevalent amongst civilized nations, if her commerce was restricted by the monopoly established in favor of the mother country, her own internal administration was conducted by wise rulers, guided by paternal interest in her welfare. She shared the political benefits conquered by the Spanish people, and when the constitution of 1812 was established, Cuba reaped its advantages. When, on the death of Ferdinand VII, Queen Christina threw herself into the arms of the liberal party in order to insure the triumph of Queen Isabella over the pretensions of Don Carlos, the royal statute was proclaimed in both Spain and Cuba, and the latter was represented in the national congress and enjoyed the liberties accorded by that celebrated docu letters of Mr. Clay to the ministers of Colombia and Mexico, December 20, 1825.) The knowledge of this effervescence of the public mind induced, on the part of the Spanish King, one of the most extraordinary acts which ever emanated from a despot. He gave the Captain-General, by an ordinance of the 28th of May, 1825, all the powers granted to the governors of besieged towns; or, in other words, declared the whole island under martial law, with full power in the Captain-General over the lives, fortunes, and liberties of the people, and with the right of suspending all laws and royal decrees at his pleasure.

This would appear scarcely credible, but I desire to read a passage from this ordinance of 1825 of the Spanish King. I find it fortunately translated here in a little book called Cuba and the Cubans, which I would recommend to the condition of the island:

"On the 28th of May, 1825, the royal ordinance addressed to the Captain-General of Cuba declares: 'It has pleased His Majesty, in conformity with the advice of his ministers, to authorize your excellency, fully investing you with the whole extent of power which by royal ordinances is granted to the governors of besleged towns; in consequence thereof His Majesty most amply and unrestrictedly authorizes your excellency not only to remove from the island such persons holding office from the Government or not, whatever their occupation, work, class, or situation in life may be, whose residence there of you may believe to be prejudicial, or whose public or private conduct may appear suspicious to you, employing in their stead faithful servants of His Majesty. Also to suspend the execution of whatever royal orders or general decrees in all the different branches of the administration, or in any part of them, as your excellency may think conductive to the royal service.'" any part of them, as your excellency may think conducive to the royal service."

We are told that under this system of government the whites are contented. Why, sir, independent of the consulracies of which I have sooken.

We are told that under this system of government the whites are contented. Why, sir, independent of the conspiracies of which I have spoken, in 1832-24 and 1825, again in 1826 another conspiracy broke out, and its chiefs were arrested, and Sanchez and Aguerro were executed at Port au Prince; and again, at a later day, the conspiracy called the conspiracy of the Black Eagle broke out, and was again repressed, and those engaged in it executed or exiled or imprisoned. The different conspiracies that have existed of late years are familiar to us all; the various expeditions of Lopez and his companions; and the last of which I have any memory, or, at least, authentic detail, is that of 1851, when a few Cuban patriots, worn-out, disappointed fugitives, still had courage to meet together on the 4th of July, 1851, and declared the independence of Cuba. Here is their declaration of independence. I am going to refer to this, not so much for the purpose of showing this fact, not so much for the purpose of calling attention to the signatures, including names of this same family of Aguerro, that seems to have distinguished itself in behalf of the liberties of its country, but because there is a list of grievances in this declaration of independence to which I now desire to call the attention of the Senate, and which I will lay before it, asking every man who hears it, if it be possible that human beings subjected to grievances like these can be content, can be willing to kiss the rod which smites them?

They begin, sir, by stating the horrible cruelties that are exercised upon them. It is in Spanish; I will read it as well as I can; it will be probably somewhat imperfect in the translation.

They state that "they supposed the world would refuse credence to the history of the horrible iniquities which have been perpetrated in Cuba, and would consider, with reason, perhaps, that if there existed monsters capable of committing them, it is not conceivable that there should exist men who for so long a time had submitted to them; but if those persons are few who reach the truth of particular facts, by reason of the means of which the Government disposes to obscure and disfigure them, nobody can resist the evidence of acts that are public and official."

Therefore, they go on to relate:

"It was publicly, and with arms in his hands, that General Tacon despoiled the Island of Cuba of the constitution of Spain, proclaimed by all the powers of the Monarchy and which these powers had ordered to be sworn to as the fundamental law of the entire Monarchy.

"It was publicly, and by the acts of the courts, that Cuba was declared to be deprived of the rights which all Spaniards enjoyed, and which are naturally conceded to persons the least civilized.

"It was publicly that the decree was issued which deprived the sons of Cuba of all right of being chosen to occupy public offices or of employment in the State.

"It was publicly that omni-modal faculties were granted to the Captains-General of Cuba who may deny to these when they denote the Captains-General of Cuba who may deny to these when they denote the captains-in the State.

"It was publicly that omni-modal faculties were granted to the Captains-General of Cuba, who may deny to those whom they desire to have punished or sentenced by the tribunals even the form of a trial before the courts.

"Publicly prominent in the Island of Cuba are still those military commissions which in other countries the law permits only in extraordinary cases during a time of war, and then only for offenses against the State.

"Publicly has the Spanish press threatened Cuba with tearing from it the property in its slaves, of converting the island into ruin and ashes, and of disenchaining against it all the hordes of barbarous Africans which now exist within it.

"Public is the continual increase of the army and the creation of new mercenary bodies which, under pretext of public security, are only put upon us for the purpose of augmenting the burdens that lie upon Cuba and of exercising with greater vexation the system of subordination and espionage over its inhabitants.

"Public are the obstacles and difficulties which are placed in the each individual for monitored.

"Table is the continual increase of the army and the creation of new more cenary bodies which, under pretext of public security, are only put upon us for the purpose of augmenting the burdens that lie upon Guba and of exercising with greater vexation the system of subordination and espionage over its inhabitants.

But, sir, we are told that England and France will object. If that be true, it affords to my mind a controlling motive for persisting. I wish to examine a little into this subject of the interference of England and France; and first I desire the attention of the Senate to a fact which has not yet been adverted to in this debate—that as far back as 1823 Great Britain tried to buy Cuba from Spain, and made her offers of purchase, which were rejected; that then in 1825 and 1826 Great Britain was at the bottom of the plot for declaring Cuba independent, by an insurrection of the people, with the aid of the Colombian and Mexican forces, her object being to get the control of the island under a protectorate, which she thought she could establish without exciting our jealousy; and that it was these views of Great Britain which induced the interference of Mr. Clay with the Colombian and Mexican ministers, and this broke up the plot. July 10, 1823, Mr. Appleton, being then at Cadiz, wrote to Mr. Adams, our Secretary of State:

"The contents of the letter of which I herewith inclose a duplicate are substantially confirmed by all that has come to my knowledge since it was written. I shall say nothing of the official declaration of England; they are documents which must long since have reached you. I have it, however, in my power to say, upon the best authority, that the sentiments she now professes in relation to acquisition of territory at the expense of Spain have not always been entertained by her.

"Mr. Quadra, now deputy of the Cortes, had, when minister of ultra-marine in 1820, distant overtures made to him for the cession of the eastern side of Cuba to England. These overtures were treated with great coldness, and it is supposed have not been repeated. This fact has been communicated to me in confidence by Mr. Gener, adeputy from the Habana, who, being a European by birth, has had more access to the secrets of the cabinet than his companions, and has lately received a distinguished proof of the respect in which he

"Sir: The inclosed copy of a confidential dispatch addressed to the minister of state by the Conde de la Alcudia, Spanish minister at London, was handed to me to-day by a private friend, and may be depended on as authentic. As the communication was made to me in the strictest confidence, and as the document is in itself unsuitable for the press, I take the liberty of transmitting it to you, for the President's information, in the form of a private letter, and request that it may not be placed on the public files of the Department of State."

Here is the letter:

The Spanish minister at London to the minister of state.

LONDON, June 1, 1827.

Most Excellent Sir: I deem it my duty to give you notice for the information of the King, our Lord, that this Government dispatched a frigate some time ago to the Canary Islands, with commissioners on board, who were instructed to ascertain whether any preparations were making there for an expedition to America; and also the state of defense of those islands, and the disposition of the inhabitants. The result of these inquiries was that the said islands were in a wholly defenseless situation, provided with few troops, and those disaffected and ready for any innovation.

The frigate then proceeded to the Habana, where the commissioners found many persons disposed to revolt; but in consequence of the large military force stationed there and the strength of the fortifications, they considered it impossible to take possession of the island without the cooperation of the authorities and the army. In consequence of the information thus obtained, measures have been taken in both these islands to prepare the public opinion by means of emissaries in favor of England, to the end that the inhabitants may be brought to declare themselves independent and to solicit the protection of the British. The latter are prepared to assist them, and will in this way avoid any collision with the United States. The whole operation has been undertaken and is to be conducted in concert with the revolutionists resident here (at London) and in the islands, who have designated a Spanish general, now at this place, to take command of the Habana when the occasion shall require it.

The Duke of Wellington communicated to me the above information, which is also confirmed by an intimation which he gave to Brig. Gen. Don Francisco Armentecos, when this offlicer took leave of him to go to the Habana. The Duke then advised him, if he should discover any symptoms of disaffection in the authorities, to give immediate notice to the King, as it would be a grievous thing for this Majesty to lose the Habana.

I have thought it my duty to make these circum

May God keep you many years.

EL CONDE DE LA ALCUDIA.

This is the same Great Britain that now, having failed in her own attempt, generously proposes to the American people an alliance of three parties, France, England, and the United States, each of whom shall say, as they are bound to do in her estimate under the law of nations, that not one of them will ever acquire Cuba. Having failed herself, both by open negotiation and secret maneuver, to obtain possession of the island, she proposes to us magnanimously to renounce what she can not get, provided we will be equally generous; for such, after all, was the real proposition made in the dispatch to which Mr. Everett made his celebrated answer; and when we respectfully declined her proposal, we were informed through another dispatch that she held herself at liberty to act as she pleased for the future; and the British secretary actually proceeded, with a grave face, to argue that England had equal interests with ourselves in the Island of Cuba, because, in a geographical line, Cuba was no nearer to the United States than to the Island of Jamaica—that delectable paradise of her negro savages.

So much, sir, as regards any objections that may be made by England.

But France, we are told, will be offended; her sence of justice will be shocked at our violation of national courtesy in desiring to acquire a neighboring isle. The reproach will come with a good grace, sir, from the present Emperor of the French, who was so particularly regardful of public law when at Bologne and at Strasburg he attempted to overthrow the constitutional Government of his own country for the gratification of his own selfish ambition. We are to be called on to renounce all rights of national growth in deference, for sooth, to France and England. We alone are not to grow; and the reason is that we declare our purpose in advance, which gives to these intermeddling powers an opportunity of raising an outcry; whereas in the secrecy of their cabinets projects of invasion are entertained and executed before notice is given; and, when reproached for treaty with us; to call for her title to control the Nicaragua transit; and when she has made good in the law of nations that new title invented by Lord Clarendon, and which he calls "spontaneous settlement," then, and not till then, we shall be ready on our part to give her a reason why we want "spontaneous settlement" in Cuba.

If, sir, on the other hand, the Emperor of France shall make objection, let him be asked by what right he attempts to interfere with us in the purchase of territory from Spain, when we are only following the example of his uncle, who did the same thing? Let him be asked what greater right France had to buy Louisiana than we have to buy Cuba? And, sir, let both France and England be required to show by what principle of national law territorial acquisition is forbidden when peaceful and for a price, but permissible if effected by the exercise of violence committed by the strong against the weak.

Mr. President, there is one paramount principle affecting the whole question of annexation, which our self-respect requires us to present prominently before the world. It is that in the expansion of our system we seek no conquest, subjugate no people, impose our have on no unwilling subjects. When new territory is brought under our jurisdiction, the inhabitants are admitted to all the rights of self-government. Let noattempt be made to confuse this subject by the use of inappropriate terms. It is the fallacy lurking under the use of the word "belongs," of which despots make use. Cuba "belongs" to Spain. True. But in what sense? New York "belongs" to the United States also; but in what sense?

Cuba is subject to Spanish sovereignty. Her people now owe allegiance to Spain; but the island does not belong to Spain as property belongs to an individual. The Cubans are not the property of the Crown. Nay, the soil of the island belongs to private proprietors. The right of Spain, as a proprietary right, extends only to the public places on the island not disposed of to private individuals, and to such r nues, and make settlement hereafter with the people of Cuba for our advances."

If this offer be again refused, then let us announce to Spain in advance that whenever opportunity shall occur we are ready and resolute to offer to the people of Cuba the same aid that England offered to the other Spanish colonies; the same alliance, offensive and defensive, which France so nobly tendered to us in the hour of our darkest peril. Tell her that we shall repair the wrong by us done to the generation now passing away in Cuba when we impeded their efforts for gaining their independence by affording to the present generation our aid, countenance, and assistance. Tell her that, when the Cubans shall have conquered their independence, theirs shall be the right of remaining a separate republic, if they so prefer; that we will cherish, aid, and protect them from all foreign interference, and will draw close the bonds of a mutual, social, and commercial intercourse that shall be of incalculable benefit to both. Tell her, too, that if the people of the island, with their independence once acquired and republican institutions established, shall desire to unite themselves with us, they shall be admitted to the equal benefits which our system of government secures to each independent State that enters into its charmed circle. She shall unite with us freely, the equal associate of free States; and when the union shall have been accomplished, the sunder those whom the God of Freedom has united.

APPENDIX NO. 3.

CUBA'S CASE.

WASHINGTON, December 7, 1895.

Washington, December 7, 1895.

Sir: I hand you herewith a statement of the facts upon which I, as authorized representative of the Cubans in arms, ask that the rights of belligerency be accorded them by your Government.

If you so desire, I can exhibit to you the originals of the documents mentioned or set forth in said statement.

Should it be necessary or desirable for me to point out the arguments, based on the facts submitted, which I deem proof that we are now in condition to ask for belligerency, it will afford me great pleasure to do so.

Begging your earliest and most favorable consideration of this subject, I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, yours,

To Hop Richard Olney.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 7, 1895.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 7, 1895.

Sir: While admitting that, as a rule, governments do not take cognizance of the justice or injustice of a struggle in which they are called upon to grant the rights of belligerency to one of the contending parties, the revolution for the independence of the Cuban people, initiated on February 24 last, is so similar in its character to that which resulted in the establishment of the foremost Republic in the world, the United States of America, that I feel called upon to point out the causes leading to the present uprising in Cuba.

CAUSES OF THE REVOLUTION.

CAUSES OF THE REVOLUTION.

These causes are substantially the same as those of the former revolution, lasting from 1868 to 1878 and terminating only on the representation of the Spanish Government that Cuba would be granted such reforms as would remove the grounds of complaint on the part of the Cuban people. Unfortunately the hopes thus held out have never been realized. The representation which was to be given the Cubans has proved to be absolutely without character; taxes have been levied anew on everything conceivable; the offices in the island have increased, but the officers are all Spaniards; the native Cubans have been left with no public duties whatsoever to perform, except the payment of taxes to the Government and blackmail to the officials, without privilege even to move from place to place in the island except on the permission of governmental authority.

Spain has framed laws so that the natives have substantially been deprived of the right of suffrage. The taxes levied have been almost entirely devoted to support the army and navy in Cuba, to pay interest on the debt that Spain has saddled on the island, and to pay the salaries of the vast number of Spanish officeholders, devoting only $746,000 for internal improvements out of the $26,000,000 collected by tax. No public schools are within reach of the masses for their education. All the principal industries of the island are hampered by excessive imposts. Her commerce with every country but Spain has been crippled in every possible manner, as can readily be seen by the frequent protests of shipowners and merchants.

The Cubans have no security of person or property. The judiciary are instruments of the military authorities. Trial by military tribunals can be ordered at any time at the will of the Captain-General. There is, besides, no freedom of speech, press, or religion. In point of fact, the causes of the Revolution of 1775 in this country were not nearly as grave as those that have driven the Cuban people to the various insurrections which culminated in the present revolution.

A statement of the facts and circumstances that have forced the Cubans from peaceful to belligerent measures of obtaining that redress which they are satisfied can only come with absolute independence and republican form of government are set forth at large in the pamphlet hereto annexed, marked "A."

ABSOLUTE INDEPENDENCE OR EXTERMINATION.

ABSOLUTE INDEPENDENCE OR EXTERMINATION.

Every promise of reform made to procure peace in 1878 having been broken by the Spanish Government, and subsequent peaceful endeavor in that direction having proved useless, Cuba is to-day in the condition described by Vattel (Law of Nations, sec. 291):

"If his (the sovereigu's) promises are not inviolable, the rebels will have no security in treating with him; when they have once drawn the sword they must throw away the scabbard, as one of the ancients expressed it, and the prince destitute of the more gentle and salutary means of appeasing the revolt will have no other remaining expedient than of utterly exterminating the insurgents; these will become formidable through despair; compassion will bestow success on them; their party will increase, and the state will be in danger."

The only solution of the revolution in Cuba is independence or extermina-

PRELIMINARY ORGANIZATION FOR REVOLT.

Years before the outbreak of the present hostilities the people within and without the island began to organize, with a view of preparing for the inevitable revolution, being satisfied, after repeated and patient endeavors, that peaceful petition was fruitless.

In order that the movement should be strong from the beginning, and organized both as to civil and military administration, the Cuban revolutionary party was founded, with José Marti at its head. The principal objects were by united efforts to obtain the absolute independence of Cuba, to promote the sympathy of other countries, to collect funds with these objects in view, and to invest them in munitions of war. The military organization of this movement was completed by the election of Maximo Gomez as commander-in-chief. This election was made by the principal officers who fought in the last revolution.

THE UPRISING.

The time for the uprising was fixed at the solicitation of the people in Cuba, who protested that there was no hope of autonomy, and that their deposits of arms and ammunition were in danger of being discovered and their leaders arrested. A large amount of war material was then bought by Marti and vessels chartered to transport it to Cuba, where arrangements were made for its reception in the provinces of Santiago, Puerto Principe, and Santa Clara; but at Fernandina, Fla., it was seized by the United States authorities. Efforts were successfully made for the restitution of this material; nevertheless valuable time and opportunity were thus lost. The people in Cuba clamored for the revolution to proceed immediately, and in consequence the uprising was not further postponed. The date fixed for the uprising was the 24th of February. The people responded in Santiago, Santa Clara, and Matanzas. The provinces of Puerto Principe and Pinar del Rio did not respond, owing to lack of arms. In Puerto Principe rigorous search had previous to the 24th been instituted and all arms and ammunition confiscated by the Government. The leaders in the provinces of Matanzas and Santa Clara were imprisoned, and so the movement there was checked for the time being.

On the 27th the governor-general of the Island of Cuba, Emilio Calleja, issued a proclamation declaring the provinces of Matanzas and Santiago in a state of siege, and fixed a period of eight days within which all those who surrendered were to be pardoned. Under these conditions, on the 3d of March, Juan Gualberto Gomez surrendered, was brought to Habana, and set at liberty, but before he could leave the palace of the captain-general was rearrested on the ground that he had bought arms for the movement, and was subsequently court-martialed and sent in chains to the Spanish penal colony in Ceuta, Africa.

GROWTH OF THE REVOLUTION.

In the province of Santiago the revolution rapidly increased in strength under the leadership of Bartolome Masso, one of the most influential and respected citizens of Manzanillo; Guillermo Moncada, Jesus Rabi, Pedro Perez, José Miro, and others.

It was characterized by the Spanish Government as a negro and bandit movement, but many of the most distinguished and wealthy white citizens of the district flecked to the insurgent camp.

The Spanish authorities, through some of the Autonomists, attempted to persuade these men to lay down their arms. Gen. Bartolome Masso was twice approached in this behalf, but positively refused to entertain any negotiations which were not based on the absolute independence of Cuba.

On the 1st of April Gens. Antonio and José Maceo, Flor Crombet, and Augustin Cebreco, all veteran leaders in the former revolt, landed at Duaba, in the province of Santiago, and thousands rose to join them. Antonio Maceo then took command of the troops in that province, and on the 1lth of April a detachment received Gens. Maximo Gomez, José Marti, Francisco Borrerro, and Angel Guerra.

Captain-General Calleja was, on the 16th of April, succeeded by Gen. Arsenio Martinez Campos, the present commander-in-chief of the Spanish forces, who has the reputation of being Spain's greatest living general.

BATTLES AND CAMPAIGN.

Campos's first plan of campaign was to confine the revolution to the province of Santiago, and he then stated that he would crush the insurgents, establish peace, and return to Spain by the November following.

He asserted that the province of Puerto Principe would never rise in rebellion; and in order to give color to the statement and hope of labor to the unemployed he projected a line of railway from Santa Cruz to Puerto Principe, planning also another from Manzanillo to Bayamo.

These two projects, as well as the proposed construction of wharves, were never seriously contemplated. From the very beginning of the uprising, conflicts between the Spanish troops and the Cubans were of daily occurrence, and many engagements of importance also took place, forts being captured, towns taken and raided.

It is of course useless to describe every skirmish in this province. The following are among the General Rabid of eated the Spanish Colonels Santoscildes and Zabikoski: Ramon de las Yaguas, where Colonel Garzon surprised and captured Lieutenant Gailego and 50 men, who were disarmed and permitted to leave unmolested—the troops sent to reenforce the Spaniards being also defeated; El Guanabano, where General Masso and Colonel Estrada forced Santoscildes to retreat to Bayano, with great loss; Jarahuca, where General Combined operation of Generals Antonio and José Masco, who captured the town of Cristo and 20 rides and 40,000 rounds, while Colonel Garzon took the town of Cristo and 20 rides and 40,000 rounds, while Colonel Garzon took the town of Canpednela was attacked by Colonel Guerra and Colonel Estrada, who forced the garrisons of the two forts to surrender.

Juraguanas, where Colonel Estrada, with J.000 men, met an equal number and colonel General Rabi cut to pieces the Spanish forces under Lieut. Col. U. Sanchez and obtained many rifles and ammunition.

El Jobito: This was one of the most important engagements in the cast. It took place near Guantanamo, and Lieutrannt-Colonel Bach was killed and his trobal control of the control of the most important engagement in the cast. It took place near Guantanamo, and Lieutrannt-Colonel Bach was killed and his trobal condition, without food or hospitals, and were cut off from Manzanillo, and wishing by a concerted movement of his lieutenants to crush the revolution at one blow, started from Manzanillo on the 12th for the purpose of relieving Bayamo, and intending thene to march west and drive Gome of relieving Bayamo, and intending thene to march west a railroads, of which there are many lines or branches in this district.

GOMEZ'S CAMPAIGNS.

Immediately on the landing of Generals Marti and Gomez they set out to cross the province of Santiago and enter that of Puerto Principe. It will be remembered that at about this time General Campos arrived in the island with re-inforcements of over 10,000 men. The object of Gomez in marching into Puerto Principe was to lead those whom he knew were only expecting his arrival in that province in order to take the field. The citizens of Puerto Principe, or Camaguey, as it is also called, had the reputation of being rather conservative, and hence both Spaniards and Cubans waited their determination with great interest.

Gen. Martinez Campos boasted that the inhabitants of Camaguey would never rise in revolt against Spain, but to make assurance doubly sure he placed a cordon of troops numbering about 10,000 on the border between Santiago and Puerto Principe to prevent the entry of Gomez into the latter district. Gomez and Marti started on their westward journey with about 300 men. In trying to pass the first line of troops at Boca de Dos Rios a severe conflict took place May 18, with a greatly superior force, in which José Marti was killed. Great joy was manifested by the Spaniards, who claimed that the revolution had received its deathblow in the loss of Marti, but Gomez continued his advance westward, and ordering a feint to be made by Gen. Antonia Maceo at a point in the north of the Spanish cordon, he succeeded in eluding the enemy and entering the southern part of the province of Puerto Principe in the beginning of June. Here he was joined by Salvador Gisneros Betancourt, now the President of the Republic, the most influential Cuban of that province, together with all the young men of the city, and his forces were rapidly swelled to thousands by additions from all parts of the province. These he subsequently organized into the Third Army Corps.

Thus Gomez was successful in this first campaign of the revolution. Immediat

He was much criticised by Gen. Martinez Campos for his inactivity during the summer, but the Spanish troops, nevertheless, did not interfere with his plans. Early in July he issued the first of the now famous orders relative to the sugar crop, and announced his intention of marching through Santa Clara and into Matanzas in the winter in order to superintend the carrying out of his decrees, increasing his military stores in the meantime, as well as securing the food supply of his army by corralling the cattle of the province in secure places.

the Cuban army, forts are more easily taken. There has been constant communication from the interior to the coast; vessels of the Spanish navy have frequently been engaged by the insurgents, and in one case a small armed coast-guard vessel was captured by them.

Supplies are received by the Cubans at convenient points on the coast and transferred to the interior. When it is remembered that in the revolution of 1861 to 1878 there were never more than 10,000 armed insurgents in the field; that these rarely, if ever, took the offensive, and yet compelled Spain to maintain an army of 120,000 men in the field, many of whom were Cuban volunteers in the strict sense of the term; that this little band caused Spain to spend in the ten years over $700,000,000 and to lose over 200,000 men, and that when in contrast we see in this revolution there are already more than 50,000 Cubans in the field, directed by veterans of the last war, who now are on the offensive, and that now Cuban does not fight against Cuban, the chance of ultimate success of the Cuban arms must appear to an impartial observer, especially in the light of Gomez's wonderful western march, and that in two months more the climate will again militate against the Spanish troops.

MILITARY ORGANIZATION.

MILITARY ORGANIZATION.

The military organization of the Cubans is ample and complete.

Maj. Gen. Maximo Gomez is the commander-in-chief, as we have said, of all the forces, a veteran of the last revolution, as indeed are all the generals almost without exception. Maj. Gen. Antonio Maceo is second in command of the army of liberation, and was, until called upon to cooperate with the commander in chief in the late march to the western province, in command of Santiago.

almost without exception. Maj. Gen. Antonio Maceo is second in command of the army of liberation, and was, until called upon to cooperate with the commander in chief in the late march to the western province, in command of Santiago.

The army is at present divided into five corps—two in Santiago, one in Puerto Principe, and two in Santa Clara and Matanzas. These corps are divided into divisions, these again into brigades, and finally into regiments; the forces are moreover divided into cavalry and infantry, besides having engineers, and lately artillery and a perfect sanitary corps, which latter is in command of Engenio Sanchez Agramonte, with the grade of brigadiergeneral. Maj. Gen. José Maceo commands the First Santiago Corps, while Maj. Gen. Bartoline Masso commands the Second Corps in that province. Commanding divisions and brigades in these two corps are Brig. Gens, Pedro Perez, Agustin Cebreco, Jesus Rabi, Luis Feria, Bernardo Capote. Highio Vasquez, and Angel Guerra.

The Third Corps is in command of Maj. Gen. José M. Rodriguez. The Fourth Corps is in command of Maj. Gen. Cartos Roloff, the divisions and brigades being commanded by Maj. Gens. Francisco Carrillo and Serafin Sanchez and Brig. Gens. Tranquilino Perez, Juan B. Zayas, and Rogelio Castillo. The Fifth Corps is in command of Maj. Gen. Manuel Suarez, and the divisions and brigades are commanded by Francisco Perez, José Lacret, and José M. Aguirre.

The first two corps consist of 26,000 men, mostly infantry; the third, of about 4,000 men, mostly cavalry; the Fourth and Fifth Corps consisted before the late invasion of Gomez of over 20,000 men, both infantry and cavalry, which force has been considerably increased in these last days. Of the 50,000 men at least that there are in the field, more than half are fully armed and equipped, the rest carrying miscellaneous weapons or side arms.

The work of fully equipping the army is now proceeding rapidly. The higher grades and commissions are all confirmed by the Government.

As above indicated, Jose Marta was the head of the preliminary civil organization, and he, immediately upon landing with Gomez in Cuba, issued a call for the selection of representatives of the Cuban people to form a civil government.

His death postponed for a time the selection of these men, but in the beginning of September the call previously issued was complied with.

Representatives from each of the provinces of Santiago, Puerto Principe, Santa Clara, and the western part of the island, comprising the provinces of Matanzas and Habana, making twenty in all, were elected to the constituent assembly, which was to establish a civil government, republican in form.

A complete list of the members of the constituent assembly which met at Jimaguayu, in the province of Puerto Principe, on the 18th of September, 1895, together with an account of its organization and subsequent action, will be found in the document hereto annexed and marked B.

A constitution of the Republic of Cuba was adopted on the 16th of September, and copy of which will be found in document annexed marked B.

On the 18th of September the following officers of the Government were elected by the constituent assembly in accordance with the terms of the constitution:

President, Salvador Cisneros Betancourt, of Puerto Principe; vice-president, Bartolome Masso, of Manzanillo; secretary of war, Carlos Roloff, of Santa Clara; secretary of the treasury, Severo Pina, of Santa Clara; secretary of the treasury in the interior, Santiago Garcia Canizares, of Remedios; secretary of war, Mario Menocal, of Metanzas; subsecretary of the interior, Carlos Duois, of Baracoa; subsecretary of foreign relations, Fermin Valdes Dominguez, of Habana.

The installation of these officers duly followed. The election of the general in chief and the second in command, who is to bear the title of lieutenantigeneral, was then had and resulted in the unanimous election of Maximo Gomez and Antonio Maceo, respectively.

On the same day the constituent assembly elected by acclama of the treasury. The impositions, rate, and collection of the taxes, and sources of income of the Government, will also be found in Exhibit B.

All moneys collected in accordance with the laws of the Republic, as well as those received through voluntary contributions, are delivered to him or his duly authorized agent, and expended under his supervision or that of his agents, to supply the present needs of the Government, which are mainly purchase of arms and ammunition.

The money thus collected has been sufficient to equip the army and keep it supplied with ammunition, although, as it is natural, from the rapid increase of the ranks and the difficulty of bringing supplies into the island, many of the new recruits have not yet been fully armed. The problem of equipping the army is not a financial one, but arises from the caution necessary to blockade running, and, above all, the preventive measures taken by foreign governments, and the notice which is in all cases given to the enemy of the embarkment of munitions. No report of the secretary of the treasury has yet been made, as he has not been in office but three mouths.

For the purpose of properly collecting the imposts, the roads to all cities, as well as the coast, are patrolled by the Cubans. The Cuban Government publishes two newspapers, El Cubano Libre and the Boletin de la Guerra.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS.

From the beginning of this insurrection, the conduct of the Cubans as to prisoners has been in strong contrast to that of the Spaniards. Prisoners taken by the Cubans have been invariably well treated, cared for, and liberated, officers as well as common soldiers, as soon as it was possible under the circumstances, and word sent to the Spaniah officers to call for them, on the guaranty that the detachment would be respected.

As instances, we may recite those even admitted by the Spaniards, namely: Ramon de las Yaguas, Campechuela, and Peralejos, in Santiago; el Mulato, San Jeronimo, and Las Minas, in Puerto Principe; Taguasco, Pelayo, and Cantabria, in Santa Clara. After the last-mentioned engagement, Colonel Rego returned his prisoners to the Spanish lines, obtaining a receipt for their delivery, signed by a lieutenant, of which a copy is hereto annexed, marked D. This action, in accordance with the spirit of the insurrection, which is declared not to be against the Spaniards, of whom many are fighting for the independence of the island, but against the Spanish Government, is echoed by the general order of the commander-in-chief on this subject, of which the following is a copy:

CIRCULAR OF THE GENERAL IN CHIEF.

CIRCULAR OF THE GENERAL IN CHIEF.

"General Headquarters of the Army of Liberation, "Camaguey, August 1, 1825.

"In order to establish in a clear and precise manner the mode of procedure toward the chiefs, officers, and soldiers of the monarchy captured in action or operations, and toward those who voluntarily surrender to our columns or authorities. I have deemed it convenient to order as follows:

"ARTICLE 1. All prisoners captured in action or by the troops of the Republic will be immediately liberated and returned to their ranks, unless they volunteer to join the army of liberation. The abandoned wounded will be gathered and attended to with all care, and the unburied dead interred.

"ART. 2. All persons who shall be arrested, charged with committing the misdemeanors in the circular of July 1, by violating or disregarding the said order, will be summarily proceeded against.

"ART. 3. Those of the prisoners who are chiefs or officers of the army of the monarchy will be respected and considered according to their rank and treated according to the valor with which they may have resisted, and will all be returned to their ranks if they so desire.

"ART. 4. Those who volunteer to join the ranks of the republicans, and appear before our columns and authorities, will have their option in the mode of serving the cause of the Republic, either in arms or by more peaceful occupations, civil or agricultural pursuits.

"I communicate this to you for your instruction and for your rigid compliance. Country and liberty.

"MAXIMO GOMEZ,

"The General in Chief"

"I communicate this to you for your instruction and for your rigid compliance. Country and liberty.

"MAXIMO GOMEZ,

"The General in Chief."

On the part of the Spanish, attention is called to the order prohibiting newspaper correspondents from entering insurgent lines to prevent accurate information being given to the world at large; the order to shoot all who supply food or medicines to the insurgents; the order, which in every instance has been carried out, to shoot all officers of the Cuban army who may be captured, under which Domingo Mujica, Gil Gonzalez, Quirina Amezago, and Acebo have been executed. At the recapture of Baire, old men, women, and children were ruthlessly slaughtered by the Spanish soldiery, the hospital at Gran Piedra was captured and over seventy wounded and defenseless Cubans were killed; at Cayo Espino peaceful men and women were butchered by Colonel Molina, and the outrages committed by the troops under Garrido and Tejera are legion. The action of convicts who have been liberated by Spain to fight the Cubans under such leadership as that of the notorious Lola Benitez, who bears the title of colonel, are, as might be expected, a blot on any Christian army, the treatment of Cubans suspected of symmethy with the insurgents.

army.

As to the treatment of Cubans suspected of sympathy with the insurgents, we have but to consider the large number of men who have lately been arrested and on bare suspicion summarily sent to the Spanish penal colonies for life. Some foreign citizens have indeed escaped court-martial on the interference of their governments, but it is well known that even civil trials at this time are under the absolute control of the Government.

NOT A NEGRO MOVEMENT.

NOT A NEGRO MOVEMENT.

The Spaniards charge, in order to belittle the insurrection, that it is a movement of negroes. It should be remembered that not more than one-third of the entire population are of the colored race. As a matter of fact, less than one-third of the army are of the colored race. Take, for instance, the generals of corps, divisions, and brigades. There are but three of the colored race, namely, Antonio and José Maceo and Augustin Cebreco, and these are mulattoes whose deeds and victories have placed them far above the generals of those who pretend to despise them. None of the members of the constituent assembly or of the government are of the colored race. The Cubans and the colored race are as friendly in this war as they were in times of peace, and it would indeed be strange if the colored people were not so, as the whites fought for and with them in the last revolt, the only successful purpose of which was the freedom of the slaves.

If it be true that this is merely a movement of bandits and negroes and adventurers, as the Spaniards assert, why have they not armed the Cuban people to fight against the outlaws, or why have not the Cuban people themselves volunteered to crush this handful? On the contrary, they know that giving those Cubans arms who have them not would be but to increase the number of insurgents, and they have them not would be but to increase the number of insurgents, and they have sent over forty of their most famous generals; they have increased their navy, and virtually, so far as the Cubans are concerned, blockaded the entire coast. They have been compelled to make many onerous loans to carry on the campaign; they have increased the fortifications of their ports; they have brought torpedoes to protect their harbors, and they have even placed armed troops on their mail steamers to prevent their capture.

Besides this large army, they have between 60,000 and 80,000 volunteers to protect their towns. These volunteers, so called, are native Spaniards and a branch of the regular army at home, where their entire time must be given up, they volunteer to enter this body on emigration to Cuba, where they may follow to a considerable extent their occupation. In other words, they correspond to our home guards or militia, except that the service is obligatory and that the men can not leave the island without permission.

It is not denied that a large number of what the Spaniards term the lower classes are in this revolution, but this is only a proof of how deep into the mass of the people have been implanted the seeds of discontent and of republicanism. This is a movement not like our last revolution—the result of the agitation of the wealthy and the educated—but one which is the outcome of the popular sentiment of all classes.

Much surprise has been expressed that with the immense army and resources at hand Spain has not been able to crush the insurrection or prevent its rapid growth. Aside from the climate, which is deadly to the raw, ill-fed, ill-treated, and badly paid Spanish troops, the greater part of whom are mere lads, the Spaniards have to divide their troops into an army of occupation and another of operation. These must necessarily move in considerable numbers, because if compelled to flee without a knowledge of the intricacles of the country they would be decimated.

A Cuban command on dispersion is readily reorganized, as each man is his own guide. This is one of the most valuable of Cuban movements—to disperse as if routed, to rally at a previously agreed point, and then to fall upon and surprise the seemingly victorious enemy. The Cuban, used to the country and the climate, marches and rides much faster than the Spaniard. He can live and thrive, and does so in necessity, on food that is death to the Spanish soldier. Moreover, in a friendly country the movements of the enemy are readily ascertained by the

CHARACTER OF THE WAR.

CHARACTER OF THE WAR.

There was also an attempt made by the Spanish to brand the Cubans with carrying on an uncivilized warfare because of their use of dynamite. General Roloff before using this explosive issued a proclamation warning all persons of the danger of traveling by rail. Dynamite has been used freely, but only as a substitute for gunpowder in the destruction of railroad bridges, trestles, and trains which could be used and were used for the transportation of Spanish troops. Of course it is a serious loss to Spain to have these railroads destroyed, but no one can seriously deny that it is a measure justified by the necessities of war. The use of this explosive as a substitute for gunpowder in the operation of mines is simply a proof that the Cubans are keeping pace with the advance of inventions in the art of war.

DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY.

The subject, however, which has caused probably the most discussion is the order of General Gomez to prevent the grinding of sugar cane, and in case of the disobedience of said order the destruction of the crop. General Gomez issued a preliminary warning dated July 1, of which the following is a copy:

"General Headquarters of the Army of Liberation,"

"Najasa, Camaguey, July 1, 1895.

"To the Planters and Owners of Cattle Ranches:

The sugar plantations will stop their labors, and whosoever shall attempt to grind the crop notwithstanding this order will have their cane burned and their buildings demolished. The person who, disobeying this order, will try to profit from the present situation of affairs will show by his conduct little respect for the rights of the revolution of redemption, and therefore shall be considered as an enemy, treated as a traitor, and tried as such in case of his capture.

"The painful measure made necessary by the revolution of redemption drenched in innocent blood from Hatuey to our own times by cruel and merciless Spain will plunge you in misery. As general in chief of the army of liberation, it is my duty to lead it to victory, without permitting myself to be restrained or terrified, by any means necessary to place Cuba in the shortest time in possession of her dearest ideal. I therefore place the responsibility for so great a ruin on those who look on impassively and force us to those extreme measures which they then condemn like dolts and hypocrites that they are. After so many years of supplication, humiliations, contumely, banishment, and death, when this people, of its own will, has arisen in arms, there remains no other solution but to triumph, it matters not what means are employed to accomplish it.

"This people can not hesitate between the wealth of Spain and the liberty of Cuba. Its greatest crime would be to stain the land with blood without effecting its purposes, because of puerile scruples and fears which do not concur with the character of the men who are in the field, challenging the fury of an army which is one of the bravest in the world, but which in this war is without enthusiasm or faith, ill fed, and unpaid. The war did not begin February 24; it is about to begin now.

"The war had to be organized; it was necessary to calm and lead into the proper channels the revolutionary spirit, always exaggerated in the beginning by wild enthusiasm. The struggle ought to begin in obedience to a plan and method more or less studied, as the result of the peculiarities of this war. This has already been done. Let Spain now send her soldiers to rivet the chains of her slaves; the children of this land are in the field, armed with the weapons of liberty. The struggle will be terrible, but success will crown the revolution and efforts of the oppressed.

"MAXIMO GOMEZ, General in Chief."

The reasons underlying this measure are the same which caused this country to destroy the cotton crop and the baled cotton in the South during the war of the secession.

war of the secession.

The sugar crop is a source of large income to the Spanish Government, directly by tax and export duty as well as indirectly. The action of the insurgents is perfectly justified, because it is simply a blockade, so to speak, on land—a prevention of the gathering and hence the export of the commodity with, naturally, a punishment for the violation thereof.

PROTESTS OF ALIENS.

Strenuous protests have, too, been made by and on behalf of aliens residing in or having property in Cuba.

It is admitted in civilized warfare that the property of alien residents, whether they are in sympathy with the enemy or not, when in the track of war, is subject to war's casualties, and that all property which might be of aid and comfort to the enemy may be taken or destroyed, the commander in the field being the judge of the exigency and necessities which dictate such action. This proposition has been laid down by the State Department and the Supreme Court of this country in the matter of the destruction of cotton in the late war.

Court of this country in the matter of the destruction of cotton in the late war.

The provision of the constitution of the Republic of Cuba that the citizens of a country which acknowledges the Cubans as belligerents shall be exempt from the payment of taxes and contributions to the Republic naturally implies that the property of such citizens, after the granting of belligerency by their country, even though by all the laws of war it is contraband and may be seized or destroyed, will be absolutely respected, and, I have all reason to assert, will be under the special protection of the Cuban Government and its army.

For aliens to ask this protection as a right while their Government denies the existence of the belligerency of the Cubans might well be considered by the latter as allowing aid and comfort to go to their enemy, simply on the expectation that some time in the future the Government of those aliens may, out of gratitude to the Cubans, acknowledge, what is after all but a state of fact, belligerency. In the meantime the aid and comfort thus allowed by the Cubans to flow to the Spaniards must strengthen the latter and thus draw out the struggle or weaken the former. General Gomez explains the importance of this measure in the following letter:

"My Dear and Estremed Friend: It is not long since I wrote you, but an opportunity offers by which I may send you a few words of encouragement and good cheer. Rest assured I write you whenever I can, which is not often, owing to the great amount of work which at present falls upon my shoulders I know the pen is mightler than the sword, but my mission at present is with the latter; others must wield the pen.

"Eight days ago Gen. Antonio Maceo and myself met and fought the enemy with our forces in conjunction. The Spanish column, including infantry, cavalry, and artillery were our superiors in number, but the arms of the Cuban Republic were again victorious. I have not time at present to go into details of the battle, they will follow later. Suffice it to say, Spanish reports to the contrary notwithstanding, we won the day.

"Our advance may be slow, but it will be sure and firm. If you hear of our retreat, remember that it will be temporary and for a purpose. Our faces are turned toward the west, and nothing will stop us. The result of my observations as we proceed is that the Spaniards are in need of almost everything—money, sympathy, soldiers, and even leaders who have faith and courage in the righteousness of their cause.

"If Cuban valor and resolution do not fail us, and if the hearts of Cuba's children do not weaken, I have every reason to believe that the close of the six months' campaign now initiated will find everything satisfactorily settled and Cuba free.

"I know that unfavorable comment has been made on some of the methods we have been forced to employ in this revolution, but it will not do to listen to the complaints of the superficial and irresponsible. No sugar crop must be made this winter under any circumstances or for any amount of money. It is the source from which the enemy still hopes and dreams of obtaining its revenue. To prevent that end, for the good of our country, has been and shall be our programme.

"My Distincuished Fellow-Countryman: There have been many complaints made to me from various sources that the property of citizens of the United States of North America has been destroyed by our army of liberation in Cuba under the order of our distinguished general in chief, Maximo Gomez. I know very well how you and all my countrymen feel toward this Republic, and that you desire to do everything in your power to demonstrate your friendship, and I deem it my duty to communicate the above facts to you so that you may consider the matter carefully and thoroughly; at the same time I know that many Spaniards intend to transfer their property, as some have done already, to American citizens or companies especially organized for their purposes, in case that you should, before or after receiving the rights of belligerents, take active measures for the protection of North American interests.

In view of the history of this revolution as herein stated, in view of the causes which led to it, its rapid growth, its successes in arms, the establishment, operation, and resources of the Government of the Cuban Republic, the organization, number, and discipline of its army, the contrast in the treatment of prisoners to that of the enemy, the territory in its control and subject to the carrying out of its decrees, of the futility of the attempts of the Spanish Government to crush the revolution, in spite of the immense increase of its army in Cuba and of its blockade and the many millions spent for that purpose, the cruelties which on the part of the Spanish have especially characterized this sanguinary and flercely conducted war, and the damage to the interests of the citizens of this country under the present conditions, I, as the duly accredited representative, in the name of the Cuban people in arms who have fought singly and alone against the monarchy of Spain for nearly a year, in the heart of a continent devoted to republican institutions, in the name of justice, in the name of humanity, in the name of liberty, petition you, and through you the Government of the United States of America, to accord the rights of belligerency to a people fighting for their absolute independence.

Very respectfully, yours,

CUBA VS. SPAIN.

War is a dire necessity. But when a people has exhausted all human means of persuasion to obtain from an unjust oppressor a remedy for its fills, if it appeals as a last resource to force in order to repel the persistent aggression which constitutes tyranny, this people is justified before its own conscience and before the tribunal of nations.

Such is the case of Cuba in its wars against Spain. No metropolis has ever been harsher or more obstinately harassing; none has ever exploited a colony with more preediness and less foresight than Spain. No colony has ever been more prudent, more long-suffering, more cautious, more persevering than Cuba in its purpose of asking for its rights by appealing to the lessons of experience and political wisdom. Only driven by desperation has the people of Cuba taken up arms, and, having done so, it displays as much heroism in the hour of danger as it had shown good judgment in the hour of deliberation. The history of cuba during the present century is a long series of rebellions; but eviless struggle because of the obstinate blinds for the long, but eviles the tribulation of the colony and pointed to the remedy by pleading for the commercial from the beginning of this century, such as Presbyter Cabalero and Don Francisco Arango, who called the metropolitan Government's attention to the evils of the colony, and pointed to the remedy by pleading for the commercial franchises required by its economical organization, and for the intervention of the natives in its government, not only as a right, but also for political expediency, in view of the long distance between the colony and the home government, and the grave difficulties with which it had to contend. The requirements of the war with the continental colonies, which were tired of Spanish tyranny, compelled the metropolitan Government to gran a certain measure of commercial liberty to the Island of Cuba, a temporary concession which spread prosperty throughout its territory, but which was not sufficient to their forced state of political tutelage. No attention was given to them, and this brought on the first armed conflicts.

Before the formidable insurrection of 1868, which lasted ten years, the reform party, which included the most enlightened, wealthy, and influential Cubans, exhausted all the resources within their reach to induce Spain to initiate a healthy change in her Cuban policy. The party started the publication of periodicals in Madrid and in the island, addressed petitions, maintained a great agitation throughout the country, and having succeeded in leading the Spanish Government to make an inquiry into the economical, political, and social condition of Cuba, they presented a complete plan of government which satisfied public requirements as well as the aspirations of the people. The Spanish Government disdainfully cast aside the proposition as useless, increased taxation, and proceeded to its exaction with extreme severity.

It was then that the ten-year war broke out. Cuba, almost a pigmy compared with Spain, fought like a giant. Blood ran in torrents. Public wealth disappeared in a bottomless abyss. Spain lost 290,000 men. Whole districts of Cuba were left almost entirely without their male population. Seven hundred millions were spent to feed that conflagration—a conflagration that tested Cuban heroism, but which could not touch the hardened heart of Spain. The latter could not subdue the bleeding colony, which had no longer strength to prolong the struggle with any prospect of success. Spain proposed a compact which was a snare and a deceit. She granted to Cuba the liberties of Puerio Rico, which enjoyed none.

On this deceitful ground was laid the new situation, throughout which has run a current of falsehood and hypocrisy. Spain, whose mind had not changed, hastened to change the name of things. The capitan-general was called governor-general. The royal decrees took the name of athorizations. The commercial monopoly of Spain was named coasting trade. The bright of banishment was transformed in emable exploitation of the colonists' labor for the benefit of Spanish commerce and Spanish bureaucracy, both civil and military. To carry out the latter purpose it was necessary to maintain the former at any cost.

In order to render the native Cuban powerless in his own country, Spain, legislating for Cuba without restriction as it does, had only to give him an electoral law so artfully framed as to accomplish two objects. First, to reduce that it is, to the European colonists, notwithstanding that the latter represent that is, to the European colonists, notwithstanding that the latter represent that is, to the European colonists, notwithstanding that the latter represent that is, to the European colonists, notwithstanding that the latter represent that is, to the European colonists, notwithstanding that the latter represent that is, to the European colonists, notwithstanding that the latter represent the lectoral right dependent on the payment of a very high poll tax, which proved the more burdensome as the war had ruined the larger number of Cuban proprietors. In this way it succeeded in restricting the right of suffrage to only $3,000 inhabitants in an island which has a population of 1,e00,000 that is to say, to the derisive proportion of 3 per cent of the total number of Inhabitants give a decided preponderance to the Spanish European element, the electoral law has ignored the practice generally observed in those countributions and public officials, to the detriment of the territorial property (the ownership of real estate). To accomplish this, while the rate of the territorial at is reduced to 2 per cent, an indispensable measure, in view of the ruinous condition of the landowners, the exorbitant contribution of $25 is required from those who would be electors as freeholders. The law has, moreover, thrown the doors wide open for the perpetration of fraud by providing that the simple declaration of the had. Thus it comes to pass that the ruinous condition of the landowners, the exorbitant contribution of simple still. The qualifications required to be a senator have proved to be an almost absolute prohibition to the Cubans. In fact, to take a seat in the higher house it is necessary to have been president of that body or of congress, or a minister of the Crown, or a bishop, or a granded of Spain, a lieutenant-general, a vice-admiral, ambassador, minister plenipotentiary, counselor of state, judge, or attorney-general of the supreme court, of the court of accounts, etc. No Cuban has ever filled any of the above positions, and scarcely two or three are grandees. The only natives of Cuba who can be senators are those who have been deputies in three different congresses, or that they have an income of $1.50% or those who have a title of nobility, or have been deputies, provincial deputies, or mayors in towns of over 20,000 inhabitants, if they have in addition an income of $4.50% or pay a direct contribution of $900 to the treasury. This will increase by one or two dozen the number of Cubans qualified to be senators.

In this manner has legislative work, so far as Cuba is concerned, turned out to be a farce. The various Governments have legislated for the island as they pleased. The representatives of the peninsular provinces did not even were to be dealt with; and there was an instance when the estimates (budget) for the Great Antille were discussed in the presence of less than 30 deputies and a single one of the ministers, the minister of "ultramar" (session of April 3, 1889).

Through the contrivance of the law, as well as through the irregularities committed and consented to in its application, have the Cubans been deprived and in many cases they have been entirely excluded from them. When, and in many cases they have been entirely excluded from them. When, obtained some temporary majority, the Government has always endeavored and succeeded in making their triumph null and void. Only once did the home-rule party obtain a majority of the members of the permanent commission. Until that time this commission had be spent all his life in Spain, where he made his administrative career. In the other provinces there has never, probably, been a single governor born in the country.

In 1887 there was created a council, or board of ultramar, under the minister of the colonies. Not a single Cuban has ever been found among its members. On the other hand, such men as Generals Armilian and Pando have held positions in it.

The predominance of the Government goes further still. It weighs with all its might upon the local corporations. There are deputations in the provinces, and not only are their powers restricted and their resources scanty, but the governor-general appoints their presidents and all the members of the permanent commissions. There are "ayuntamientos" elected in accordance with the reactionary law of 1877, restricted and curtailed as applied to Cuba by Señor Canovas. But the governor-general appoints the mayors, who may not belong to the corporation, and the governor of the province appoints the secretaries, The Goverment reserves, moreover, the right to remove the mayors, of replacing them, and of suspending the councilors and the "ayuntamientos," partly or in a body. It has frequently made use of this right for electoral purposes, to the detriment always of the Cubans.

As may be seen, the crafty policy of Spain has closed every avenue through which redress might be obtained. All the powers are centered in the Government of Madrid and its delegates in the colony; and in order to give her despotism a slight varnish of a representative régime she has contrived with her laws to secure complaisant majorities in the pseudoelective bodies. To accomplish this purpose she has relied upon the European immigrants, who have always supported the Government of the metropolis in exchange for lasting privileges. The existence of a Spanish party, as that of an English party at one time in Canada, has been the foundation of Spanish rule in Cuba. Thus, through the instrumentality of the laws and the Government, a régime of castes has

IL.

What use the Spanish Government has made of this power is apparent in the threefold spoliation to which it has submitted the Island of Cuba. Spain has not, in fact, a colonial policy. In the distant lands she has subdued by force Spain has sought nothing but immediate riches, and these it has wrung by might from the compulsory labor of the natives. For this reason Spain to-day in Cuba is only a parasite. Spain exploits the Island of Cuba through its fiscal régime, through its commercial régime, and through its bureaucratic régime. These are the three forms of official spoliation, but they are not the only forms of spoliation.

When the war of 1878 came to an end two-thirds of the island was completely ruined. The other third, the population of which had remained peaceful, was abundantly productive; but it had to face the great economical change involved in the impending abolition of slavery. Slavery had received its death blow at the hands of the insurrection, and Cuban insurrectionists succeeded at the close of the war in securing its eventual abolition. Evidently it would have been a wholesome and provident policy to lighten the fiscal burdens of a country in such a condition. Spain was only bent on making Cuba pay the cost of the war. The metropolis overwhelmed the colony with enormous budgets, reaching as high a figure as $46,00,000, and this only for over the obligations of the State, or Tabler to III the unfathomatic was allowed to the country. Here follow a few figures: The budget for the fiscal year of 1878 to 1879 amounted to $46,504,000; that of 1870 to 1880 to an equal sum; that of 1882 to 1873 amounted to $46,504,000; that of 1870 to 1880 to an equal sum; that of 1882 to 1873 amounted to $46,504,000; that of 1870 to 1880 to an equal sum; that of 1882 to 1883 to $35,803,000; that of 1888 to $34,180,000; that of 1884 to 1885 to the same sum; that of 1885 to 1884 to $34,180,000; that of 1884 to 1885 to the same sum; that of 1885 to 1884 to $34,180,000; that of 1885 to the same sum; that of 1885 to 1884 to $34,180,000; that of 1885 to the same sum; that of 1885 to 1884 to $34,180,000; that of 1885 to the same by prorogation for the current fiscal year.

The gradual reduction that may be noted was not the result of a desire to reduce the overwhelming burdens that weigh upon the country. It was imposed by necessity. Cuba was not able by far to meet such a monstrous exaction. It was a continuous and threatening deficit that imposed these reductions. In the first of the above named years the revenue was $8,000,000. In the def

There are in Cuba 1,631,687 inhabitants according to the last census, that of 1887. That is to say, that this budget burdens them in the proportion of $16.18 for each inhabitant. The Spanlards in Spain pay only 42.06 posetas per head. Reducing the Cuban dollars to pesetas at the exchange rate of $6.16 for 5.00 posetas, there results that the Cubans have to pay a tribute of $5.16 pesetas for each inhabitant, more than double the amount a Spanlard has to pay in his European country.

As shown above, most of this excessive burden is to cover entirely unproductive expenditures. The debt consumes 40.89 per cent of the total amount. The defense of the country against its own native inhabitants, the only enemies who threaten Spain, including the cost of the army, the navy, the civil guard, and the guardians of public order, takes 36.59 per cent. There remains for all the other expenditures required by civilized life 22.52 per cent. And of this percentage the State reserves to us—what a liberality!—2.75 per cent to prepare for the future and develop the resources of the country!

Let us see now what Spain has done to permit at least the development of natural wealth and the industry of a country impoverished by this fiscal régime, the work of cupidity, incompetency, and immorality. Let us see whether that nation has left at least some vitality to Cuba, in order to continue exploiting it with some profit.

The economical organization of Cuba is of the simplest kind. It produces to export, and imports almost everything it consumes. In view of this, it is evident that all that Cuba required from the State was that it should not hamper its work with excessive burdens nor hinder its commercial relations, so that it could buy cheap where it suited her and sell her products with profit. Spain has done all the contrary. She has treated the tobacco as an enemy; she has loaded the defiance of law and without any authorization whatever. The minister was threatened with prosecution, but he haughtily replied that, if prosecuted, all his predecessors from every political party would have to accompany him to the court. That threat came to nothing.

In June of 1896 there was a scandalous debate in the Spanish Cortes, in which some of the frands committed upon the Cuban treasury were, not for the first time, brought to light. It was then made public that $6,500,000 had been abstracted from the "caja de depósitos," notwithstanding that the safe was locked with three keys, and each one was in the possession of a different functionary. Then it was known that, under the pretext of false vouchers for transportation and fictitious bills for provisions during the previous war, defalcations had been found afterwards amounting to $22,811,516. In the month of March of the same year General Pando affirmed that the robberies committed through the issue of warrants by the "junta de la deuda" (board of public debt) exceeded the sum of $12,000,000.

These are only a few of the most salient facts. The large number of millions mentioned above represents only an insignificant part of what a venal administration, sure of impunity, exacts from Cuban labor. The network of artful schemes to cheat the Cuban taxpayer and defraud the State covers everything. Falsification of documents, embezzlement of revenues, bargains with delinquent debtors, exaction of higher dues from inexperienced peasants, delays in the dispatch of judicial proceedings in order to obtain a more or less considerable gratuity—such are the artful means daily employed to empty the purse of the taxpayer and to divert the public funds into the pockets of the functionaries.

These disgraceful transactions have more than once been brought out to light; more than once have the prevaricators been pointed out. Is there any record of any of them having ever been punished?

We have shown that notwithstanding the promises of Spain and the ostengible changes introduced in the government of Cuba since 1878, the Spaniards from the control of the contr

It is true, however, that an explicit legal text was not necessary for the Government to nullify the precepts of the constitution. This was promulgated in Cuba, with a preamble providing that the Governor-General and his delegates should retain the same powers they had before its promulgation. The banishment of Cubans has continued after as before said promulgation. In December of 1891 there was a strike of wharf laborers in the Province of Santa Clara. To end it the governor captured the strikers and banished them en masse to the Island of Pinos.

The deportations for political offenses have not been discontinued in Cuba, and although it is stated that no executions for political offenses have taken place since 1878, it is because the Government has resorted to the more simple expedient of assassination. General Polavieja has declared with utmost coolness that in December of 1880 he had 265 persons seized in Cuba, Palma, San Luis, Songo, Guantánamo, and Sagua de Tánamo, and transported the same day and at the same hour to the African island of Fernando Po. At the close of the insurrection of 1879-80 it was a frequent occurrence for the Government to send to the penal colonies of Africa the Cubans who had capitulated. The treachery of which Gen. José Macco was a victim carries us to the darkest times of the war of Flanders and the conquest of America. Cuba recalls with horror the dreadful assassination of Brig. Gen. Arcadio Leyte Vidal, perpetrated in the Bay of Nipe in September of 1879. War had just broken out anew in the eastern department. Brig. Gen. Leyte Vidal resided in Mayari, assured by the solemn promise of the Spanish commander-inchief of that zone that he would not be molested. One month had not elapsed since the uprishing, however, the work of the same transfer and the compliance with an order from the Sea. revenue of $750,000. On the other hand, the sales of stamped paper constitute a revenue of $750,000. Thus the State derives a pecuniary profit from its administration of justice.

Is it, then, a wonder that the reforms that have been attempted by establishing lower and higher courts to take cognizance of criminal cases and by introducing oral and public trials should not have contributed in the least to improve the administration of justice? Onerous services have been exacted from people without proper compensation as gratuitous services. The Government, so splendidly liberal when its own expenses are in question, haggles for the last cent when dealing with truly useful and reproductive services. Is the Cuban compensated for his absolute deprivation of political power, the fiscal extortions, and the monstrous deficiencies of judicial administration by the material prosperity of his country? No man acquainted with the intimate relations which exist between the fiscal regime of a country and its economical system will believe that Cuba, crushed as it is yn unreasonable budgets and an enormous debt, can be rich. The income of Cuba in the most prosperous times has been calculated at $80,000,000. The state, provincial, and municipal charges take much more than 40 per cent of this amount. This fact explains itself. We need not draw any inferences therefrom. Let us confine ourselves to casting a glance over the aspect presented by the agricultural, industrial, and real-estate interests in Cuba at the beginning of the present year.

Despite the prodigious efforts made by private individuals to extend the cultivation of the sugar cane and to raise the sugar-making industry to the plane it has reached, both the colonists and the proprietors of the sugar plantations and the sugar mills (centrales) are on the brink of bankruptey and ruin. In selling the output they knew that they would not get sufficient means to cover the cost of keeping and repairing their colonies and sugar mills. There is not a single agricultural bank

City real estate has fallen to one-half and in some cases to one-third the value it had before 1884. A building in Habana which was erected at a cost of $000,000 was sold in 1836 for $120,000.

Stocks and bonds tell the same story. Almost all of them are quoted in Habana with heavy discounts.

The cause of the ruin of Cuba, despite her sugar output of 1,000,000 tons and her vast tobacco fields, can be easily explained. Cuba does not capitalize, and it does not capitalize because the fiscal regime imposed upon the country does not permit it. The money derived from its large exportations does not return either in the form of importations of goods or of cash. It remains abroad to pay the interest of its large debt, to cover the incessant remittances of funds by the Spaniards who hasten to send their earnings out of the country, to pay from our treasury the pensioners who live in Spain, and to meet the drafts forwarded by every mail from Cuba by the Spaniards as a tribute to their political patrons in the metropolis, and to help their families.

Cuba pays $2,192,795 in pensions to those on the retired list and to superannuated officials not in service. Most of this money is exported. The first chapters of the Cuban budget imply the exportation of over $10,600,000. Cuba pays a subsidy of $471,830.85 to the Transatlantic Company. It would be impossible to calculate the amount of money taken out of Cuba by private individuals; but this constant exportation of capital signifies that nobody is contented in Cuba and that everybody mistrusts its future. The consequence is that, notwithstanding the apparently favorable commercial balance, exchange is constantly and to a high degree against Cuba.

On the other hand, if Cuba labors and strives to be on the same plane as its most progressive competitors, this is the work of her own people, who do not mind any sacrifices: but the Government cares little or nothing about securing to the country such means of furthering its development as are consigned in the budget under the head of "Fomento."

And now, at the outbreak of the present war, Spain finds that, although the appropriations consigned in our budgets since 1878 amount to nearly $500,000,000, not a single military road has been built, no fortifications, no hospitals, and there is no material of war. The State has not provided even for its own defense. In view of this fact, nobody will be surprised to hear that a country 670 kilometers long, with an area of 118,838 square kilometers; in Puerto Principe and Las Villas not a single one. Cuba has 3,506 kilometers of seashore and 54 ports; only 15 of these are open to commerce. In the labyrint of keys, sand banks, and breakers adjacent to our coasts there are only 19 light-houses of all classes. "Many of our ports, some of the best among them, are filling up. The coasting steamers can hardly pass the bars at the entrance of the ports of Nuevitas, Gibara, Baracoa, and Santiago de Cuba. Private parties have sometimes been willing to remedy these evils; but then the central administration has interfered, and after y and 2 port lights; 246 meters of wharf were built, and a few ports were superficially cleaned and their shoals marked. This was all. On the other hand, the department of public works consumes unlimited millions in salaries and in repairs.

The neglect of public hygiene in Cuba is proverbial. The technical commission sent by the United States to Habana to study the yellow fever declared that the port of the capital of Cuba, owing to the inconceivable filth, is a permanent source of infection, against which it is necessary to take precautions. There is in Habana, however, a "junta de puerto" (board of port wardens) which collects dues and spends them with the same munificence as the other bureaucratic centers.

Does the Government favor us more in the matter of education? It will suffice to state that only $182,000 are assigned to public instruction in our splendid budget. And it may be proved that the University of Habana is a source of pecuniary profit to the State. On the other hand, this institution is without laboratories, instruments, and even without water to carry on experiments. All the countries of America, excepting Bolivia, all of them including Haiti, Jamaica, Triaidad, and Guadalupe, where the colored race predominates, spend a great deal more than the Cuban Government for the education of the people. On the other hand, only Chile spends as much as Cuba for the support of an army. In view of this it is easily explained why 76 per cent of such an intelligent and wide-awake people as that of Cuba and industrial, does not exist. The careers and professions most needed by modern civilization are not cultivated in Cuba. In order to become a topographer, a scientific agriculturist, an electrician, an industrial or mechanical engineer, a rallroad or mining engineer, the Cuban has to go to a foreign country. The State in Cuba does not support a single public fibrary.

profits from the operation. These dealers are, of course, Spaniards.

IV.

In exchange for all that Spain withholds from us, they say that it has given us liberties. This is a mockery. The liberties are written in the constitution, but obliterated in its practical appplication. Before and after its promulgation the public press has been rigorously persecuted in Cuba. Many journalists, such as Señores Cepeda and Lópes Briñas, have been banished from the country without the formality of a trial. In November of 1891 the writer Don Manuel A. Balmaseda was tried by court-martial for having published an editorial paragraph in El Criterio Popular, of Remedios, relative to the shooting of the medical students. The newspapers have been allowed to discuss public affairs theoretically, but the moment they denounce any abuse or the conduct of any official they feel the hand of their rulers laid upon them. The official organ of the home-rule party, El País, naming the transgressors. In 1837 that periodical was subjected to criminal proceedings simply because it had stated that a son of the president of the Habana "audiencia" was holding a certain office contrary to law.

They say that in Cuba the people are at liberty to hold public meetings, but every time the inhabitants assemble, previous notification must be given to the authorities, and a functionary is appointed to be present, with power to suspend the meeting whenever he deems such a measure advisable. The meetings of the "Circulo de Trabajadores" (an association of workingmen) were forbidden by the authorities under the pretext that the building where they were to be held was not sufficiently safe. Last year the members of the "Circulo de Hacendados" (association of planters) invited their fellowmembers throughout the country to get up a great demonstration to demand a remedy which the critical state of their affairs required. The government found means to prevent their meeting. One of the most significant events that have occurred in Cuba, and one which throws a fl

General looked with displeasure upon and forbade the holding of the great meeting. This was sufficient to frighten the "Circulo" and to secure the failure of the project. It is then evident that the inhabitants of Cuba can have meetings only when the Government thinks it advisable to permit them. Against this political régime, which is a sarcasm and in which deception is added to the most absolute contempt for right, the Cubans have unceasingly protested since it was implanted in 1878. It would be difficult to enumerate the representations made in Spain, the protests voiced by the representatives of Cuba, the commissions that have crossed the ocean to try to impress upon the exploiters of Cuba what the fatal consequences of their obstinacy would be. The exasperation prevailing in the country was such that the "junta central" of the home-rule party issued in 1892 a manifesto in which it foreshadowed that the moment might shortly arrive when the country would resort to "extreme measures, the responsibility of which would fall on those who, led by arrogance and priding themselves on their power, hold prudence in contempt, worship force, and shield themselves with their impunity."

This manifesto, which foreboded the mournful hours of the present war, was unheeded by Spain, and not until a division took place in the Spanish party, which threatened to turn into an armed struggle, did the statesmen of Spain think that the moment had arrived to try a new farce, and to make a false show of reform in the administrative régime of Cuba. Then was Minister Maura's plan broached, to be modified before its birth by Minister Abarzuas.

This project to which the Spaniards have endeavored to give capital im-of Spain think that the moment had arrived to try a new farce, and to make a false show of reform in the administrative regime of Cuba. Then was Minister Maura's plan broached, to be modified before its birth by Minister Abarzuas.

This project, to which the Spaniards have endeavored to give capital importance in order to condemn the revolution as the work of impatience and anarchism, leaves intact the political régime of Cuba. It does not alter the electoral law. It does not curtail the power of the bureaucracy. It increases the power of the General Government. It leaves the same burdens upon the Cuban taxpayer, and does not give him the right to participate in the information of the budgets. The reform is confined to the changing of the council of administration (now in existence in the island, and the members of which are appointed by the Government) into a partially elective body. One-half of its members are to be appointed by the Government and the other half to be elected by the qualified electors—that is, who assessed and pay for a certain amount of taxes. The Governor-General has the right to veto all its resolutions and to suspend at will the elective members. This council is to make up a kind of special budget embracing the items included now in the general budget of Cuba under the head of "Fomento." The State reserves for itself all the rest. Thus the council can dispose of 2.75 per cent of the revenues of Cuba, while the Government distributes, as at present 97.25 per cent for its expenses, in the form we have explained. The general budget will, as heretofore, be made up in Spain; the tariff laws will be enacted by Spain. The debt, militarism, and bureaucray will continue to devour Cuba, and the Cubans will continue to be treated as a subjugated people. All power is to continue in the hands of the Spanish Government and its delegates in Cuba, and all the influence with the Spanish residents. This is the self-government which Spain has promised to Cuba, and which it is announcing to the world, in exc

Spain denies to the Cubans all effective powers in their own country. Spain condemns the Cubans to a political inferiority in the land where they are born.

Spain confiscates the product of the Cubans' labor without giving them in return either safety, prosperity, or education.

Spain has shown itself utterly incapable of governing Cuba.

Spain has shown itself utterly incapable of governing Cuba.

Spain has shown itself utterly incapable of governing Cuba.

Spain has shown itself utterly incapable of governing Cuba.

Spain exploits, impoverishes, and demoralizes Cuba.

To maintain by force of arms this monstrous régime, which brings ruin on a country rich by nature and degrades a vigorous and intelligent population, a population filled with noble aspirations, is what Spain calls to defend its honor and preserve the prestige of its social functions as a civilizing power of America.

The Cubans, not in anger but in despair, have appealed to arms in order to defend their rights and to vindicate an eternal principle, a principle without which every community, however robust in appearance, is in danger—the principle of justice. Nobody has the right of oppression. Spain oppresses us. In rebelling against oppression we defend a right. In serving our own cause we serve the cause of mankind.

We have not counted the number of our enemies; we have not measured their stength. We have cast up the account of our grievances; we have weighed the mass of injustice that crushes us, and with uplitted hearts we have risen to seek redress and to uphold our rights. We may find ruin and death a few steps ahead. So be it. We do our duty. If the world is indifferent to our cause, so much the worse for all. A new iniquity shall have been consummated. The principle of human solidarity shall have suffered a defeat. The sum of good existing in the world, and which the world needs to purify its moral atmosphere, shall have been lessened.

APPENDIX NO. 4.

APPENDIX NO. 4.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The insurrection in Cuba still continues with all its perplexities. It is difficult to perceive that any progress has thus far been made toward the pacification of the pacific progress of the progress of the progress of the pacific progress of the pacific and in practical operation clearly perilous and injurious to our own interests. It has since been and is now sometimes contended that the independence of the insurgents should be recognized. But imperfect and restricted as the Spanish government of the island may be, no other exists there—unless the will of the military officer in temporary command of a particular district, can be dispified as a species of government. It is now also suggested that the United States should buy the island—a suggestion possibly worthy of consideration if there were any evidence of a desire or willingness on the part of Spain to entertain such a proposal. It is urged, finally, that, all other methods failing, the existing internecine strife in Cuba should be terminated by our intervention, even at the cost of a war between the United States and Spain—a war which its advocates confidently prophesy could be neither large in its proportions nor doubtful in its issue.

The correctness of this forecast need be neither affirmed nor denied. The United States has nevertheless a character to maintain as a nation, which plainly dictates that right and not might should be the rule of its conduct. Further, though the United States is not a nation to which peace is a necessity, it is in truth the most pacific of powers, and desires nothing so much as to live in amity with all the world. Its own ample and diversified domains satisfy all possible longings for territory, preclude all dreams of conquest, and prevent any casting of covetous eyes upon neighboring regions, however attractive. That our conduct toward Spain and her dominions has constituted no exception to this national disposition is made manifest by the course of our Government, not only thus far during the present insurrection, but during the ten years that followed the rising at Yara in 1888. No other great power, it may safely be said, under circumstances of similar perplexity, would have manifested the same restraint and the same patient endurance. It may also be said that this pe

Spain in connection with Cuba unquestionably evinces no slight respect and regard for Spain on the part of the American people. They in truth do not forget her connection with the discovery of the Western Hemisphere, nor do they underestimate the great qualities of the Spanish people, nor fail to fully recognize their splendid patriotism and their chivalrous devotion to the national broor.

They view with wonder and admiration the cheerful resolution with which vast bodies of men are sent across thousands of miles of ocean, and an enormous debt accumulated, that the costly possession of the Gem of the Antilles may still hold its place in the Spanish Crown. And yet neither the Government nor the people of the United States have shut their eyes to the course of events in Cuba, or have failed to realize the existence of conceded grievances, which have led to the present revolt from the authority of Spaingrievances recognized by the Queen Regent and by the Cortes, voiced by the most patriotic and enlightened of Spanish statesmen without regard to party, and demonstrated by reforms proposed by the executive and approved by the legislative branch of the Spanish Government. It is in the assumed temper and disposition of the Spanish Government. It is in the assumed temper and disposition of the Spanish Government is remedy these grievances, fortified by indications of influential public opinion in Spain, that this Government has hoped to discover the most promising and effective means of composing the present strife with honor and advantage to Spain and with the achievement of all the reasonable objects of the insurrection.

It would seem that if Spain should offer to Cuba genuine autonomy—a measure of home rule which, while preserving the sovereignty of Spain, would satisfy all rational requirements of her Spanish subjects—there should be no just reason why the pacification of the island might not be effected on that basis. Such a result would appear to be in the true interest of all concerned. It would at once stop t cuba will not be done according to both the spirit and the letter of the undertaking.

Nevertheless, realizing that suspicions and precautions on the part of the weaker of two combatants are always natural and not always unjustifiable—being sincerely desirous in the interest of both, as well as on its own account, that the Cuban problem should be solved with the least possible delay—it was intimated by this Government to the Government of Spain some months ago that, if a satisfactory measure of home rule were tendered the Cuban insurgents, and would be accepted by them upon a guaranty of its execution, the United States would endeavor to find a way not objectionable to Spain of furnishing such guaranty. While no definite response to this intimation has yet been received from the Spanish Government, it is believed to be not altogether unwelcome, while, as already suggested, no reason is perceived why it should not be approved by the insurgents. Neither party can fail to see the importance of early action, and both must realize that to prolong the present state of things for even a short period will add enormously to the time and labor and expenditure necessary to bring about the industrial recuperation of the island. It is, therefore, fervently hoped on all grounds that earnest efforts for healing the breach between Spain and the insurgent Cubans, upon the lines above indicated, may be at once inaugurated and pushed to an immediate and successful issue. The friendly offices of the United States, either in the manner above outlined or in any other way consistent with our Constitution and laws, will always be at the disposal of either party.

whatever circumstances may arise, our policy and our interests would constrain us to object to the acquisition of the island or an interference with its control by any other power.

It should be added that it can not be reasonably assumed that the hitherto expectant attitude of the United States will be indefinitely maintained. While we are anxious to accord all due respect to the sovereignty of Spain, we can not view the pending conflict in all its features and properly apprehend our inevitably close relations to it, and its possible results, without considering that by the course of events we may be drawn into such an unusual and unprecedented condition as will fix a limit to our patient waiting for Spain to end the contest, either alone and in her own way, or with our friendly expected in the contest, either alone and in her own way, or with our friendly expected in the contest.

sidering that by the course of events we may be drawn into such an unusual and unprecedented condition as will fix a limit to our patient waiting for Spain to end the contest, either alone and in her own way, or with our friendly cooperation.

When the inability of Spain to deal successfully with the insurrection has become manifest, and it is demonstrated that her sovereignty is extinct in Cuba for all purposes of its rightful existence, and when a hopeless struggle for its reestablishment has degenerated into a strife which means nothing more than the useless sacrifice of human life and the utter destruction of the very subject-matter of the conflict, a situation will be presented in which our obligations to the sovereignty of Spain will be superseded by higher obligations, which we can hardly hesitate to recognize and discharge. Deferring the choice of ways and methods until the time for action arrives, we should make them depend upon the precise conditions then existing; and they should not be determined upon without giving careful heed to every consideration involving our honor and interest, or the international duty we owe to Spain. Until we face the contingencies suggested, or the situation is by other incidents imperatively changed, we should continue in the line of conduct heretofore pursued, thus in all circumstances exhibiting our obedience to the requirements of public law and our regard for the duty enjoined upon us by the position we occupy in the family of nations.

A contemplation of emergencies that may arise should plainly lead us to avoid their creation, either through a careless disregard of present duty or even an undue stimulation and ill-timed expression of feeling. But I have deemed it not amiss to remind the Congress that a time may arrive when a correct policy and care for our interests, as well as a regard for the interests of other nations and their citizens, joined by considerations of humanity and a desire to see a rich and fertile country, intimately related to us, saved from comp submitted by the Senator from Alabama, there is discussed the constitutional power of Congress to pass the resolution presented, or whether the reports are simply confined to the propriety of the action suggested?

Mr. CAMERON.

I will state in reply to the Senator from New York that I do not think it within the province of the committee to discuss the constitutionality of the power of Congress.

ought to be admitted by everybody.

Mr. HILL. Then, as I understand it, the discussion of that subject is not contained in either report?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that I think the Senator from Pennsylvania has not seen my report.

Mr. HILL. That is what I supposed. Mr. MORGAN. In the report submitted by the Senator from Texas and myself no discussion is made of a question which we consider it is simply preposterous to discuss.

Mr. HILL. That is the reason why it is not discussed?

Mr. MORGAN. That is one very good reason.

Mr. HILL. That might be satisfactory to the Senator from Alabama, but I simply desired the information which I have already received, that it is not discussed in either report. That is all I care to know for the present.

IMPRISONMENT ABROAD OF NATURALIZED CITIZENS.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Call on the 14th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a report of all naturalized citizens of the United States of whose arrest and imprisonment, or trial, or conviction, or sentence, either to imprisonment at the penal colony of Ceuta or elsewhere, he has any information; and that he shall inform the Senate in such report of the persons now held in confinement at Ceuta and of the charges, briefly stated, on which they were condemned, and the nature of the evidence, so far as the same appears on the files of the State Department.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a joint resolution (S. RECOGNITION OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF A FOREIGN PEOPLE. Mr. VEST. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read at length. The joint resolution (S. R. 179) declaring that the President has not the exclusive power to recognize the independence of a foreign people struggling to establish a government for themselves was read the first time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, etc., That the President is not invested by the Constitution with exclusive power to determine when the independence of & foreign people struggling to establish a government for themselves shall be recognized by the United States; but this power is vested in Congress and the President, to be exercised in conformity with section 7, Article I, of the Constitution.

Mr. President, before any disposition is made of the joint resolution, I wish to say one word in explanation of a

It is very well known that the Secretary of State, Mr. Olney, for whom I have great respect personally and as a lawyer, upon Saturday last, in a carefully prepared and authoritative interview, declared that the power to recognize the independence of a people struggling to achieve it was vested alone in the President of the United States, and that while Congress might act upon that subject, it would simply be the declaration of opinion on the part of certain eminent gentlemen, which could not officially affect the Chief Executive at all.

I must confess that this statement, coming in an extraordinary way (for it is the first time I have known a Cabinet minister to address the people of the United States through an interview in the public press), excited with me great surprise. I had occasion when the matter was under discussion and deliberation to investigate to some extent this question, and I came to the conclusion, without putting my judgment against that of so distinguished an without putting my judgment against that of so distinguished an official and lawyer as Mr. Olney, that the President of the United States did not have this power. I found in the Madison Papers that when the framers of the Constitution of 1789 deliberately gave to Congress the war-making power they were under the impression that that grant included all the minor and subsidiary action which might be taken by the Chief Executive, that action probable hereing a great war.

ably bringing on war. It is to me a most astounding proposition that while the war-making power was given to Congress, the President of the United making power was given to Congress, the President of the United States could bring about war by exercising the high prerogative of declaring whether a people struggling to achieve their independence were entitled to recognition by this Government or not. If this proposition be true, then for a hundred years the statesmen of this country have been in the dark upon this question. The independence of Venezuela and other South American Republics was recognized, not by the action of the Chief Executive, but by Congress; and finally the Texas question, after years of debate, was determined by the admission of Texas into the Union by a right resolution of Congress.

was determined by the admission of Texas into the Union by a joint resolution of Congress.

Mr. HALE, Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine rises to a point of order. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. HALE. I do not think, under the rule, on any resolution, except by unanimous consent, any debate should take place. There has been no unanimous consent given to the Senator to discuss the expection. I do not think now are the whole publication. cuss the question. I do not think now, as the whole subjectmatter generally has gone over on the report of the committee, that the Senator should precipitate a discussion this morning on this grave question; and I must therefore ask that under the rule the resolution shall go over.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the Senator from Missouri may have unanimous consent to conclude his remarks.

Mr. VEST. No.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I would not inflict a word upon the Senate against the will of so respectable and eminent a Senator as the Senator from Maine. I do not wish even one unwilling auditor. Therefore, I have said all I propose to say.

Mr. HALE. The Senator sees that if he opens the subject generally, a debate will be precipitated when nobody has expected it.

I ask that the resolution may go over.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

Mr. HILL. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask may be read and lie upon the table. I give notice that at the proper time I shall offer the joint resolution as a substitute for the joint resolution reported by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] this morning from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. R. 178) declaring that a state of war exists in Cuba, and recognizing the parties thereto as belligerents, was read the first time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, etc. That it is hereby declared that a state of public war exists in Cuba, and that the parties thereto are entitled to and are hereby accorded belilgerent rights in accordance with the principles of international law, and the United States will preserve a strict neutrality between the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table, and it will be printed under the rule.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which I ask may be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

The amendment was read, as follows:

The head of each of the several Executive Departments, at his discretion, may reinstate or reappoint to any subordinate position which from any cause may become vacant in his Department any person now or formerly employed in the civil service of the Government who, in his opinion, was reduced in salary or was discharged from the service for causes not affecting his or her efficiency or moral character, and such prior service for that purpose shall be held to be equivalent to a civil-service certificate of eligibility, anything in any statute, rule, or regulation to the contrary notwithstanding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and privited

INDEPENDENCE OF CUBA.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to offer an amendment to the joint resolution (S. R. 163) acknowledging the independence of Cuba, which, at the proper time, I shall offer. I ask that it may be read and printed.

The amendment was read, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

GOVERNMENTAL OWNERSHIP OF THE TELEGRAPH.

Mr. PALMER. I submit a resolution in regard to reprinting a document, and I ask that it be read and considered.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies of enate Document No. 205, first session Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the document?
Mr. PALMER. It is Document No. 205, papers containing an article by Judge Walter Clark, entitled "Telegraph and telephone," in the American Law Review, and other matters of that sort. have a great many applications for it.
Mr. CULLOM. So have I.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

HARBOR AT ASTORIA, OREG.

Mr. MITCHEL of Oregon submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas it is alleged in a memorial submitted to Congress by the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Astoria, in the State of Oregon, that by reason of the improvement at the mouth of the Columbia River, made by building the jetty, which, it is averred, is a perfect success, the channel at the entrance having been widened, deepened, and straightened so that the largest vessels that float can with perfect safety enter the Columbia River, and whereby the entrance to the Columbia River and the harbor of Astoria have been made equal in all respects to any on the Pacific coast, and which improvement has already so stimulated the growth of commerce that greater and improved harbor facilities are required at the port of Astoria; and

Whereas it is further averred in such memorial that the construction of such jetty has also produced changes in the currents, channels, and sands inside of the mouth of the river which threaten encroachment upon and serious injury to the harbor space of Astoria if not guarded against at once; and Whereas it is further represented in such memorial that, in order to protect such harbor, sand bars should be removed, currents directed and controlled, and works and retaining walls constructed for the preservation of the channels and the anchorage area in such harbor: Therefore,

*Resolved, That the Secretary of War transmit to the Senate, at his earliest convenience, such information as is in the possession of the Department relating to the harbor at Astoria, Oreg., together with such suggestion or recommendation as may be deemed advisable.

TREASURY SETTLEMENTS.

TREASURY SETTLEMENTS.

Mr. HILL. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to reexamine the settlements reported by him in Senate Executive Document No. 178, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, and to report whether the awards are of the same character as those heretofore paid upon the steamer Peerless, reported to Congress in Executive Document No. 67, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, together with a detailed statement of the facts, and to report also whether the awards are similar to those appropriated for last session.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a similar resolution during the last session, reported that the Senate or House separately had no authority to require him to reexamine a case finally passed upon, but that he would, in response to such a resolution, report the facts as to what had been done in the matter. So, under his decision heretofore (and I think probable his resolution) it would not be recognized as the propagatory of the second necessary. bly he is correct), it would not be a reexamination and repassing upon the claim, but simply a report of the reasons for the former action.

Mr. HILL. There is no harm in the resolution, I Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no; there is no harm in it. There is no harm in the resolution, I suppose?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. GEAR. I notice by the Calendar that the unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 3656) providing for free homesteads on the public lands in Oklahoma Territory for actual and bona fide settlers, and reserving the public lands for that purpose. I ask unanimous consent that after the unfinished business is disposed of the bill (S. 3080) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to effect an adjustment between the United States and the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company in relation to certain bonds issued by the United States in aid of the construction of said railway, and the bill (S. 2894) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, "approved July 1, 1862; and also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864; and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first mentioned act; and other acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and to provide for the settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain railroads, and to secure the payment of all indebtedness to the United States of certain companies therein mentioned, be taken up as the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Iowa will not make that request now. Let us wait until we return here on the 5th of January and then determine the order of business. If the Senator insists upon his request, I shall be compelled to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the request of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to state, Mr. President, that my reason for making the request is because of the sixty millions of bonds issued in aid of the construction of these roads twenty millions will mature by January 1, and will have to be met by the Government. It seems to me the time has come when Congress should determine what shall be done in regard to these matters. The law of 1887 makes it the specific duty of the President to interfere and to demakes it the specific duty of the President to interfere and to do certain things. I hardly think that Senators wish that to be done when there is, perhaps, a chance of negotiating in some other way or enacting some legislation looking to a settlement of those debts.

I hope the Senator from Maryland will withdraw his objection.

Mr. GORMAN. It is utterly impossible, of course, to consider this great measure between now and the time of our adjournment for the holidays.

Mr. GEAR. I would state to the Senator from Maryland that I do not expect to do anything of that kind. I did not intend to ask to have the bills taken up until after the holiday recess, and probably not until the other House had acted on the subject. simply wanted to have the order adopted, so that the Senate could take up the subject after the holiday recess.

Mr. GORMAN. My suggestion to the Senator is that we defer the subject until after we reassemble on the 5th of January, and then determine the order of business

Mr. GEAR. I do not object to the subject going over, so that my request shall be made a preferential one.

Mr. GORMAN. I object to any order being made now.

Mr. GEAR. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate make

Mr. HILL. That is not in order. The Senator can move to proceed to the immediate consideration of the subject, but he can not now move that the Senate proceed to its consideration at some future time.

Mr. GEAR. I do not move immediate consideration, I will say to the Senator from New York. I simply ask that these bills may go on the Calendar as the unfinished business, not to be taken up on the Calendar as the unfinished business, not to be taken up until after the holiday recess.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator recognizes the fact that it is impossible for him to make an arrangement now after an objection has been made. The only way to proceed to the consideration of the bill is to move to take it up at present under the rule, but I object to making any arrangement with reference to the matter now. matter now of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GEAR. Then I make the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator indicate his motion? Mr. GEAR. I move that the bills for the settlement and adjust-Mr. GEAR. I move that the bills for the settlement and adjustment of the accounts between the Government and the Union and the Central Pacific Railroad companies be made the unfinished business immediately after the disposal of the bill for free homes in charge of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Pettigrew]. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator that that can be done only by unanimous consent. If the Senator's motion is to make a special order, that will be entertained. Mr. GEAR. I do not wish to make it a special order, because that can be set aside. At the last session I understand we made the immigration bill the unfinished business for this session. The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was done by unanimous consents.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was done by unanimous consent, the Chair will state.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Iowa can give notice that he will call up the bills referred to by him.

Mr. GEAR. Then I give notice that immediately after the assembling of Congress after the recess I shall call up the bills I have named for action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Notice will be entered.

APPROPRIATION BILLS REFERRED.

Two appropriation bills have come from the House of Representatives. I ask that they be laid before the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as the committee desire to hold a meeting to-day.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A bill (H. R. 9638) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898; and A bill (H. R. 9753) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

DISTRIBUTION OF APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. Some time last session I introduced an amendment of the rules which provided for the distribution of the appropriation bills among the various committees of the Senate. After some considerable debate, on the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. Allison] on February 7, 1896, the following was adopted:

That the resolution and amendments be referred to the Committee on Rules, with instructions to report the same back to the Senate on the first Monday of December, either with or without amendment.

I am aware that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is detained from the Senate by sickness, and we all wish he were here; but as he is not a member of the Committee on Rules, I hardly think his absence is a sufficient excuse for that committee not acting.

I simply rose to inquire why the Committee on Rules have not reported that amendment back in accordance with the vote of the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS. Probably the Senator will pardon me for suggesting that the chairman of the Committee on Rules, when perhaps the Senator from Idaho was absent, stated that the committee were unable to report upon that proposition and asked unanimous consent that they might have further time, which was granted by the Senate several days ago. Having indefinito time, the matter will possibly be called up on the 4th of March. Mr. DUBOIS. Very well, Mr. President. I only desired to ascertain the manner of its "taking off."

DANIEL E. LYNN.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 100) granting a life-saving medal to Daniel E. Lynn, of Port Huron, Mich.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not closed. Resolutions, concurrent and other, are in order.

RECOGNITION OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF A FOREIGN PEOPLE.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it occurs to me that a resolution declaring the powers of Congress ought to be a concurrent resolution rather than a joint resolution. I therefore offer a concurrent resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The concurrent resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the question of the recognition by this Government of any people as a free and independent nation is one exclusively for the determination of Congress in its capacity as the lawmaking power.

Resolved further, That this prerogative of sovereign power does not appertain to the executive department of the Government, except in so far as the President is, under the Constitution, by the exercise of the veto, made a part of the lawmaking power of the Government.

BONDS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas by public advertisement the Secretary of the Treasury has offered for sale certain of the first-mortgage bonds of the Union and other Pacific railroads held in the Treasury of the United States as a part of the sinking fund provided by law for the extinguishment of the paramount and first lien debt of said Pacific railroads; and
Whereas it does not appear that any legal authority exists for the sale of said bonds as proposed:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the number and amount of the bonds which he thus proposes to sell; the title under which the United States holds the same; the date of their maturity; the reasons which impelled him to advertise the same; the name of the guarantor and a copy of the guaranty bid announced by him, and the authority of law, if any, under which the proposed sale is to be made, and what disposition is to be made of the proceeds of said sale, and also to report what, if any, similar sales of such first-mortgage bonds of said Union or other Pacific railroads at any time purchased for and held in said sinking fund have been at any time heretofore made, and what disposition has been made of the proceeds thereof, if so sold.

Mr. PILATT. Mr. President Ldo not wish to chiect to a reso-

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not wish to object to a resolution of inquiry, but the preamble of this resolution states as a fact something about which as a Senator I do not know anything, and I do not like to commit myself to the statement of a fact that I know nothing about. I wish the preamble of the resolution might be again read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will modify the resolution by striking out the preamble, and will simply ask for the consideration of the resolution. Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to a resolution of inquiry. ESIDENT. The Senator modifies his resolution The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator modifies his resolution by striking out the preamble.

Mr. HILL. Now, I should like to have the resolution again read as it stands.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the number and amount of the bonds which he thus purposes to sell—

Mr. HILL. That portion of the resolution will have to be amended so as to make it intelligible, if it is desired to be so.

The Secretary continued the reading of the resolution, as follows: the title under which the United States holds the same; the date of their maturity; the reasons which impelled him to advertise the same; the name of the guarantor and a copy of the guaranty bid announced by him, and the authority of law, if any, under which the proposed sale is to be made, and what disposition is to be made of the proceeds of said sale. and also to report what, if any, similar sales of such first mortgage bonds of said Union or other Pacific railroads at any time purchased for and held in said sinking fund have been at any time heretofore made, and what disposition has been made of the proceeds thereof, if so sold.

Mr. HILL. I call the attention of the Senator to the first part of the resolution as not being complete or perfect.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I withdraw the resolution and will offer it again at some future time to-day. Bids are to be received to-day for the bonds referred to, and under the advertisement the time was exceedingly short. I will therefore ask leave to offer the resolution again later.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is withdrawn.

BRIG TALLY-HO.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 337.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 337) to refer the claim of the owners of the brig Tally-Ho to the Court of Claims.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 26, after the word "act," to insert "with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme

Mr. LODGE. The bill passed the Senate referring the claims of these persons to the Court of Claims, and the other House has added the amendment which has been read, simply giving both to the Government and the claimants the right of appeal to the to the Government and the claimants the right of appeal to the Supreme Court. In behalf of my colleague, who is particularly interested in the bill, I move to concur in the amendment, which I understand is satisfactory to all concerned. It does not give the claimants any additional privileges.

Mr. PASCO. The chairman of the Committee on Claims is not in the Chamber, but I reported the bill to the Senate, and I see no objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask what is the nature of the amendment? Mr. PASCO. It simply gives the right of appeal. Mr. LODGE. It gives both parties the right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHITE. In a case of what character?
Mr. LODGE. It is the case of a claim. The bill passed the Senate allowing the claim to be referred to the Court of Claims, and it also passed the House of Representatives. The House has added an amendment giving the parties, both the Government and the claimants, the right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHITE. That is satisfactory.

Mr. LODGE. I have asked the Senate to concur in the amendment.

Mr. HILL. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts why Mr. Hill. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts why should the parties interested in this particular claim have any different rights from those given to claimants generally? Whyshould there be special legislation?

Mr. LODGE. The addition, I suppose, was made so as to give the Government the right to appeal.

Mr. HILL. Why should the Government in this case have any different rights than it has in regard to claims generally? We have general laws governing appeals.

Mr. LODGE. The object of the House amendment, I understand, is further to protect the Government's rights. The claimants have no objection to it.

Mr. HILL. That may be.

Mr. LODGE. I see no harm in it. The amendment gives both parties the right of suppeal.

parties the right of appeal.

Mr. HILL. I see just this harm in it, that every time litigants or the Government want to reargue a particular claim they will come to Congress and have an amendment offered to a particular bill, or have a bill introduced, giving the Government or the parties the right to appeal to the Supreme Court. We have certain general laws applicable to bills in claim cases, and unless there is something unusual about this case, it strikes me that the Government as well as the claimant should be content to abide by the general law. Otherwise, we shall be flooded with legislation of this character. That is the suggestion I make.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator from New York understands that the amendment was not put in the bill at the suggestion of the claimants. The amendment was put in by the other House for the protection of the Government.

Mr. HILL. I do not think that makes any difference.
Mr. LODGE. It was inserted for the protection of the Government, and no objection is made on the part of the claimants.
Mr. HILL. What are the precise reasons why the Government should have in this particular instance—I know nothing about the merits of the claim-the right of appeal?

Mr. LODGE. I am not in the councils of the other House or of its committee. I only know that the House made the amendment. The claimants make no objection to it, and are anxious that the bill authorizing their claims to be referred shall be passed; and for that reason I have moved to concur in the House amend-

Mr. PASCO. I suggest that provisions giving the right to appeal are sometimes in bills of this character and sometimes they are not. The privilege of appeal was not in the bill when it came to the Committee on Claims of the Senate, and we reported it without any such provision. The other House, in its wisdom, has seen fit to put this provision in the bill. It is acceptable to the delivered the second of t the claimants themselves, or to those who represent them, and, I understand, to the Senators from Massachusetts, and I do not see that it is worth while to delay the progress of the matter by insisting upon any objection when all parties seem to be willing to submit to the inconvenience of the further delay of an appeal to the Supreme Court, in case one or the other party sees fit to take it there. For that reason the committee proposes to accept the amendment brought here from the other House.

Mr. HILL. I do not care anything about this particular case, because I know nothing about it, but I do not think it answers the position taken by myself in regard to this matter to say that it is agreed between the claimants and the Government in a given claim that there shall be an additional right of appeal. Where is it to stop? What is the precedent you propose to set here? We have certain general laws governing the matter. If there is some special, particular reason why the Government or the claimants should have a special right of appeal in this particular case, it is all right; but to do it as a matter of course, to do it just for the an right; but to do it as a matter of course, to do it just for the mere asking, to do it because somebody suggests it ought to be done, I do not think is good legislation. I am opposed to it. I raise no technical objection about the matter, however.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I interrupt the Senator from New York? I have served on the Committee on Claims for some seventeen years now, and we have claims of every character before that committee. Sometimes the amount involved is merely nom-inal, even in cases referred to the Court of Claims; the questions involved are unimportant, and in cases of that kind it is thought not necessary to allow either party to go farther than the Court of Claims. Again, there are cases wherein the questions are of great Claims. Again, there are cases wherein the questions are of great magnitude, the amounts involved are large, and it is thought by the committee that such cases ought to go to the Supreme Court of the United States. That is why in some cases it is provided that either party may go to the Supreme Court of the United States, while in other cases it is not so provided.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Oregon permit me to say a word? He is of course aware of the existence of several statutes regulating appeals from judgments of the Court Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States. I had occasion some time ago in an important case to reexamine those very statutes, and in a case in which I was counsel the court announced an important a case in which I was counsel the court announced an important decision in regard to the rights of appeal. There are general statutes applicable to all claim cases in which appeals are limited

I do not think that for light reasons Congress, in allowing a claim to be referred to the Court of Claims, should provide a special right of appeal either for the Government or for the claimant. I do not think that to say the Committee on Claims does it occasionally, changing the general law, is quite an answer to the proposition.

Mr. PASCO. This is not a case under the general law at all. It is a case which it is proposed to refer to the Court of Claims by a special bill, and the two Houses of Congress have a right to a special bill, and the two Houses of Congress have a right to determine the question whether or not there shall be a right of appeal in this and other similar cases. The other House has seen fit to require that the right of appeal shall be given.

Mr. HILL. May I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. PASCO. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator mean to say that if in this particular hill Congress does not say anything about the night of

Mr. PASCO. Certainly.
Mr. HILL. Does the Senator mean to say that if in this particular bill Congress does not say anything about the right of appeal, there would not exist a right of appeal under existing law?
Mr. PASCO. That is the status of the case as it comes to us from the other House. The House took that view of it, and required that there should be a right of appeal, and the Senate committee is disposed to yield to the judgment of the House upon that question, particularly when the Representatives and the Senators from Massachusetts, who know the wishes of the claimants, are willing to accept the amendment offered by the House of Representatives. Representatives.

Mr. HILL. As I recollect the law, no difference is made in regard to the right of appeal between cases which are referred to the Court of Claims by special law and those which are brought there by original claims filed. In certain instances the right of appeal is given, and in others it is not. Therefore this seems to be a special bill to give the Government or the claimants rights in addition to those which are given by the general law. I do not think it is good legislation. I make no special objection o it, however, and if the Senator desires to put it to a vote, all right.

Mr. PASCO. It is merely a matter which the two Houses of Congress have a right to control. If the Senator from New York is opposed to the amendment, of course he can vote against it when the question comes up. But I see no reason why the amendment agreed to by the House should not be adopted here.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for a vote on my motion to concur in the amendment

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon concurring in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

ELECTRIC-LIGHT SUBWAYS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate, as a part of the morning business, a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 17th instant was read, as follows:

Resolved, That until Congress shall provide by legislation for the construction of municipal subways, or otherwise provide for the extension of underground electric-light wires or conduits, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are requested not to permit excavations in the streets, avenues, or alleys of the city of Washington for the laying of any additional wires for electric lighting.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to modify the resolution by substituting the word "directed" for "requested" where it occurs in the body of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified, without objection.

Mr. HARRIS. What disposition does the Senator from New

Mr. HARRIS. What disposition does the Senator from New Hampshire propose to make of the resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. I submitted the resolution on Thursday last and asked that it should be voted upon. Of course I desire that it shall be acted upon at the present time.

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] has a substitute which he desires to substitute for the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution ought to go to the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not my purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps the Senator from Tennessee will do me the courtesy to allow the Senator from Missouri to offer his substitute first.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.
Mr. COCKRELL. I offer a substitute for the resolution.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The substitute was read, as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Whereas the Senate and House are both engaged through their respective Committees on the District of Columbia in investigating the subject of the laying of the subways in the streets, roads, avenues, and alleys of the District of Columbia, as recommended by the Commissioners of the said District in a letter of the president of the Board of District Commissioners, transmitted to the respective chairmen of the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia, under date of February 8, 1896, and as provided by Senate bill 2031 and House bill 3993, accompanying said letters; and

Whereas the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia have recently entered into a contract with the Potomac Light and Power Company of the District of Columbia for the lighting of certain public parks and streets in the District of Columbia which involves the opening of several miles of city streets for the purpose of laying conduits therein:

Now, therefore, in view of the pending investigation by Congress of the subject of the construction of said general subway system for the purpose of placing therein all telephone, electric light, and other wires and cables, Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States of America. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby requested not to permit the said Potomac Light and Power Company to open any streets, roads, avenues, or alleys in the District of Columbia for the purpose of laying conduits therein (for lighting the streets and parks as provided in said contract until some definite action is taken by Congress regarding the construction of said general subway system, and that the said Commissioners and the commissioner of public buildings and grounds, are requested, in view of the great importance of having the parks, streets, and avenues as thoroughly lighted as possible before the District becomes crowded with people to witness the inauguration

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire simply to say that the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri is agreeable to me, and I trust it may be passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the resolution and the substitute be printed, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The resolution seems to dispose of what I conceive to be a very important question, and it ought to be carefully considered before it is finally acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that if the resolution and the substitute are referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia that committee will give the matter immediate attention. It is a very important question whether we shall have three or four or a half dozen electric-light companies in Washington tearing up the streets from time to time, or whether we shall have one or more companies under the direct control of Congress and compel them to do what we desire to have done. No one desires that there shall be a monopoly here. Congress will not tolerate it. No one wants to have companies come in here, get charters, do a little work, and then compel or try to intimidate or force other companies to buy them out at enormous prices.

The substitute proposes to make the existing company furnish until June next, free of cost, exactly the lights which the District Commissioners want, and to let the other matter remain until the Committee on the District of Columbia can make some permanent arrangement for having all these subways under general control. That was the intention of what was enacted at the last session. It was to give the District Commissioners an opportunity to make one general system of subways and control them.

Mr. HARRIS. I should quite agree with the Senator from Missouri as to the policy of not allowing rival companies to construct conduits or subways for the transmission of electricity to the same parts of the city, but if we are to have underground wires, as is the policy, it does not matter to the District of Columbia or to the city whether the conduit is constructed by Jones or Smith, and it is an easy matter to determine as to the company or companies which may be permitted to occupy a given part of the territory. But that the question is one of importance is my main point now. The resolution ought to go to the committee and be there carefully considered. I quite agree with the Senator from Missouri that it ought to be considered early and reported upon early, and so far as I have power over the matter it shall be considered early and reported upon as early as we can reach satisfactory conclusions. But I certainly should feel very much opposed to having the Senate act upon a question such as is embodied in either of the resolutions submitted without the careful consideration of the propositions by the proper committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to say a single word further before the vote is taken on the motion to refer the resolution and the substitute.

Some ten or fourteen days ago I offered, and there was passed through the Senate, a resolution looking to an inquiry by the Committee on the District of Columbia of substantially this very subject. So far as I know, no movement has been made in that direction beyond that. But I observed in the newspapers of the city of Washington a few days ago a statement, apparently authentic, to the effect that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had conferred with the Committee on the District of Columbia and had received assurances from the Committee on the District of Columbia that that resolution would not meet with their approval, and that acting upon that assurance the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had proceeded to sign certain contracts which had been held up in their office for some Some ten or fourteen days ago I offered, and there was passed certain contracts which had been held up in their office for some

Now, Mr. President, I do not know with whom the Commissioners conferred. Very likely they conferred with my distinguished friend the Senator from Tennessee and the other distinguished members of the committee. They did not confer with me, and I am not in any wise responsible for the newspaper statements. I think they are accurate. Nor do I assent to doing business in that way in the Senate or on the part of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that he gives me the first information I have had of any such conference as he suggests; and if he would ascertain the facts through other channels than newspaper reports, as a rule he would be very much more accurate than he is when he bases his declarations upon such reports. I have heard of no such conference as the one referred to, and certainly did not take any part in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have sufficient information to justify the statement that the Commissioners did get certain information in the room of the District of Columbia Committee. The resolution I refer to has been before the committee for a couple of weeks. No action has been taken upon it, and yet we have assurances that if the pending resolution goes there immediate and sincere action will be taken upon it. I do not care to discuss this ques-I believe there is a scheme on foot in the District of Columbia which will not bear very close investigation. I believe that the gentlemen who came here at the last session of Congress and solemnly said they only intended to lay their wires west of Rock Creek—they said it to me, certainly; I think they said it to the committee, and I believe the Committee on Appropriations acted upon the statement—and who are getting permission to lay wires on the east side of Rock Creek are not acting in very good faith. It does seem to me, inasmuch as the Committee on Appropriations took action upon this subject during the last session of Congress, that the matter should be held up until the committee has had an opportunity to investigate it further. It is a matter of no concern to me personally.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Harris] that the resolution and the substitute be printed and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays on that

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the number and amount of the bonds of the Pacific railroads which he purposes to sell, as per the terms of the advertisement dated December 16, 1896; the title under which the United States holds said bonds; the date of their maturity; the reasons which impelled him to advertise the same; the name of the guarantor and a copy of the guaranty bid announced by him; and the authority of law, if any, under which the proposed sale is to be made, and what disposition is to be made of the proceeds of said sale, and also to report what, if any, similar sales of such first-mortgage bonds of said Union or other Pacific railroads, at any time purchased for and held in said sinking fund, have been at any time heretofore made, and what disposition has been made of the proceeds thereof, if so sold.

HERBERT H. D. PEIRCE.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3340) authorizing Herbert H. G. Pierce to accept a medal from the Russian Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are several bills of exactly the same kind on the Calendar. If one is passed, all ought to be passed.
Mr. LODGE. Certainly. I agree with that view.
Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that they all may be considered now. I think there are three or four others now on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first ask if there is objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. LODGE. There is one trifling amendment which I ask to have made. The name is spelled wrongly. It should be "Peirce" instead of "Pierce." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amend-

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood that the chairmain of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman], reported some amendments to the bill.

FORTIFICATIONS AND OTHER SEACOAST DEFENSES.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I desire to announce that at an early date I propose to ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 1159) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses. It was my intention to ask for the present consideration of the bill to-day, but upon consultation with Senators who thought we would not be able to arrive at a vote before the holiday recess which is to be taken, I concluded to postpone it until after the Senate reassembles. I believe it is such an important measure that it ought to be brought to the attention of the Senate at an early date, and that we should have a vote upon the bill, which has been reported from the Committee on Coast Defenses and has already been quite fully discussed before the Senate, and recommended by the Secretary of War.

The amount called for in the bill is $10,000,000, which is about the amount of the estimate of the Secretary of War in his annual report for the estimate of the Secretary of War in his annual report for the next fiscal year. It is an admitted fact that the condition of our seacoast defenses is at present most lamentable, and calls for redoubled energy on the part of the Government to put the national defenses in suitable condition to resist possible attack upon our seacoast cities by foreign fleets in case of hostilities between our own and any other nation. At the last session of this Congress larger appropriations were made than have ever been made for this nurpose in any previous Congress. Thus sion of this Congress larger appropriations were made than have ever been made for this purpose in any previous Congress. Thus the disposition of Congress upon this subject has already been made manifest. I am informed that the money appropriated at the last session of Congress has already been applied to the purpose by the War Department and the work is rapidly going forward upon the allotments and contracts made. The work entered upon thus vigorously must be as vigorously pursued if we would make the system of defenses effective. We can not escape from the necessities of the situation, which require a large additional and immediate appropriation which should be adequate for the purpose in the immediate future. purpose in the immediate future.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the bill be read at length.
Mr. COCKRELL. This is an important bill, and I insist that want of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. VEST. Is there a report accompanying that bill, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is.
Mr. PLATT. There is a report accompanying the bill.
Mr. VEST. I call for the reading of the report.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the

mr. PLATT. I desire to say with regard to the report, which appears as printed to be a report of the Committee on Public Lands, that that is a mistake. It is a report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as is shown by the Calendar. The action of the committee was not unanimous. I was not in favor of the bill, and I was authorized by some of the members of the committee to make a minority report, but I did not happen to be present in the Senate when the report was made, and it never was convenient to make a minority report. I do not know just how many members of the committee agreed to sign a minority report, but there were three at least.

Mr. CULLOM. From what committee does the bill come?
Mr. PLATT. It comes from the Committee on Indian Affairs.
With that explanation, I desire to have the report read. I hope that this matter will not be acted upon in a thin Senate. It is a very important matter; it relinquishes to the settlers a sum estimated all the way from seventeen to thirty million dollars. It is a pretty important bill, and ought not to be disposed of in a thin Senate. I desire, however, to have the report read, that it may go into the RECORD.

Mr. VEST. Is the amount stated by the Senator from Connecticut the amount which the bill if it becomes a law will cost the Government?

Mr. PLATT. The report says it will not be over $17,000,000. The Secretary of the Interior thinks it will be $35,000.000.

Mr. VEST. I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from South Dakota who has charge of the bill. This is a very important measure, and I suggest to the Senator that he allow it to go over until after the recess, and then fix a day for its consideration.

Mr. PLATT. It would be the unfinished business if it went

Mr. VEST. I do not want to delay the bill, but at the same time I want an opportunity to examine it and to ascertain exactly what it amounts to.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope if the bill goes over the minority of the committee will submit a report, in order that we may understand their views on the subject

Mr. VEST. I want to hear both sides of the question.
Mr. PETTIGREW. I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that after the statement he has made I do not desire to insist on a vote on the bill to-day, but I desire that the report of the Senate committee shall be read, so that it may go into the RECORD. After that I shall not object to the bill being the unfinished business when we convene after the holidays, unless some Senator wishes to speak upon it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota desire the report to be read or printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire that the report shall be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. Petti-GREW May 16, 1896, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3856) providing for free homesteads on public lands in Oklahoma Territory for actual and bona fide settlers, having had the same under consideration, report it back with the following amendments:

From the title strike out the words "in Oklahoma Territory."

From line 5, section 1, strike ont the words "in the Territory of Oklahoma."

At the end of line 15, section 1, add the words:
"Provided, however, That all sums of money so released, which if not released would belong to an Indian tribe, shall be paid to such Indian tribe by the United States."

Thus amended, your committee recommend that the bill do recommend.

From the Unice Section 1 and the words "in the Territory of Oklahoma." And the Market Section 1 and words "in the Territory of Oklahoma." Provided, however, That all sums of money so released, which if not released would belong to an Indian tribe by the Uniced States."

Thus amended, your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The effect of the first two amendments reported will be to change the act to an act covering the Indian reservation lands opened by treaty or agreement to public estilement in all States and Territories of the United States. The effect of the third amendment reported will be to secure to all Indians payment for lands surrendered under agreements with the United States Government that certain compensation was to be bestowed upon them.

The effect of the third compensation was to be bestowed upon them.

The effect of the third compensation was to be selved upon them.

The effect of the third compensation was to be selved upon them.

The effect of the compensation was to be bestowed upon them.

The measure involves no new principle of legislation, but is sustained by the properties of the compensation of the properties of revenue. It represents an exaction not before imposed upon agricultural producers who, through toil and the privations of extreme poverty upon the frontier, plant the foundation stones of wealth-teeming Commonwealths so firmly that they will endure as long as the rains fall and the sun endows life with the energy of its rays.

The report made by Mr. LACEY to the House of Representatives in relation to House bill No.3948 is hereby made a part of this report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is all of the report I desire to have

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it all be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remainder of the report will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The remainder of the report is as follows:

[House Report No. 147, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

[House Report No. 147, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report to accompany H. B. 3948:

The Committee on the Public Lands, having had under consideration House bill 3948, report the same back with a favorable recommendation, with the following amendments:

Insert in line 3, after the word "that," the words "so much of," and strike out the word "requiring" in the same line, and insert the words "as require" in lieu thereof.

Also amend by adding, after line 14, the following words:

"Provided further, That this act shall not apply to reservations where the proceeds of the sales of homestead or other entries thereof are under existing treaties required to be paid over to the Indians, or held in trust, or paid into the Treasury for their benefit."

Thus amended, your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The proposed bill does not involve any new and untried principle of legislation, but is only a return to the homestead law in its original form and purpose.

lation, but is only a return to the homestead law in its original form and purpose.

It will be proper to review briefly in this connection the history of the homestead act, which, after some years of discussion, finally became a part of the laws and marked a new epoch in the country's history when it finally became a law, May 27, 1862.

In 1852 the Free Soil Democracy, in their platform at Pittsburg, declared the public lands to be a "sacred trust," and that they "should be granted in limited quantities free of cost to landless settlers."

In 1852, and until its final passage, Hon. GALUSHA A. GROW, now again a member of this House, appeared as the champion of this great change in the land policy of the nation. A bill was lost January 20, 1859, in the House, by a vote of 91 to 95.

On February 1, 1859, a homestead bill passed the House by a vote of 120 to 76.

land policy of the nation. A bill was lost January 20, 1859, in the House, by a vote of 91 to 95.

On February 17, 1859, it was taken up in the Senate by a vote of 26 to 23.

Mr. Slidell antagonized the bill in the Senate by a vote of 26 to 23.

Mr. Slidell antagonized the bill in the Senate by a vote of 26 to 23.

Mr. Slidell antagonized the bill in the Senate and called up the bill for the purchase of Cuba in its stead.

The proposal to open free homes to the landless on the public domain gave way to a proposition to strengthen slavery by the purchase of more territory already fully occupied with slave labor. On a previous motion to postpone the consideration of the homestead bill the vote stood 28 to 28, and Vice-President Breckinridge gave the casting vote against the till.

The bill was lost, but the agitation in its favor largely influenced subsequent political events.

March 6, 1860, Mr. Lovejoy, of Illinois, reported the Grow homestead bill favorably. March 12, 1860, it passed the House by a vote of 115 to 65.

In the S-nate Mr. Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, reported a substitute requiring homestead settlers to buy their land at 25 cents an acre at the end of five years' settlement. Senator Ben Wade moved to amend by substituting the House bill. The motion was lost by a vote of 31 to 28. May 10, 1860, the Senate passed Senator Johnson's substitute by a vote of 44 to 8.

The House refused to concur and a conference was ordered, and the conference committee, after twelve meetings, accepted the Senate substitute. As expressed by Mr. Grow, it was "a half loaf."

The conference report was adopted by a vote of 115 to 51 in the House, and 36 to 2 in the Senate. Mr. Colfax stated that the proposed cost of 25 cents an acre to the homesteader was equal to the average cost of the land to the Government.

Mr. Colfax and Mr. Windom announced that this bill was only the first acre to the homesteader was equal to the average cost of the land to the Government.

Mr. Colfax and Mr. Windom announced that this bill was only the first onward step in the line of a new policy. But on June 23, 1800, James Buchanan, President of the United States, vetoed the bill and it failed to pass over his veto, the vote in the Senate being 28 yeas and 18 nays, 8 votes less than a two-thirds majority.

Mr. Buchanan declared the bill to be unconstitutional. He said that 25 cents an acre was a mere nominal price, and that it was equivalent to giving the land away. He declared that Congress had no power to grant free homes on the public domain or to grant land for use in the education of the people.

The land, he said, was like money in the Treasury, and was a sacred fund that could only be disposed of by being sold for cash or for land warrants. The Louisiana purchase was paid for out of the National Treasury, and Congress had no more power to give it away than they would have had to give the money away that had been paid to Napoleon for its purchase. The proceeds of land sales he looked upon as a source of revenue long to be enjoyed by the nation.

money away that had been paid to Napoleon for its purchase. The proceeds of land sales he looked upon as a source of revenue long to be enjoyed by the nation.

He did not recognize the benefits that might result to the people at large by the transfer of an uninhabited wilderness into a populous and prosperous Commonwealth.

The benefits to the old States by the addition of new taxpayers to the population did not seem to be appreciated by the President. The President did not realize that in this new homestead policy lay a germ of national growth of untoid value, in which the old States would share the wealth to be added by the new members of the national confederation.

The idea that an uninhabited public domain was a sacred trust which should be kept as a solitude until it could be sold for cash seems to have fully entered the mind of the Executive.

He was willing and desirous of paying $100,000,000 out of the funds in the Treasury for the purchase of Cuba, which would add new power to the cause of slavery, and he might well understand that a different result would follow the building up of new States in the West under a system of free homes.

The bill was lost, and the war of 1861 soon followed. The friends of the homestead law did not despair.

When Hannibal was besieging Rome, his camp near the city was sold at public sale in the forum, and in the darkest hours of 1861 and 1862 he homestead bill was considered almost within the sound of hostile guns.

Mr. Aldrich introduced the bill July 8, 1861, and it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

December 4, 1861, Mr. Lovejoy reported it favorably.

It was again referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On February 28, 1862, it passed the House by a vote of 107 to 16.

March 25, 1862, Senator Harlan reported it favorably in the Senate, with amendments, and it passed as amended May 5, 1862, by a vote of 33 to 7.

The two Houses agreed upon a conference, and on May 27, 1862, after the details were finally agreed upon. Mr. Lincoln added another chapter to the great history of his life by approving the bill.

From that time until the present the general policy of the homestead law has been accepted without question. Occasional amendments and modifications have been made, but the bill in its substance has been unchanged.

On June 8, 1872, the soldiers and sailors were accorded the privilege of deducting the time of their service in the Army or Navy from the five years necessary to acquire their patents.

These homes were exempt from execution against all prior debts, and the unfortunate debtor was given another opportunity to regain a home in the new lands of the far West.

Substantially all the lands embraced in the area subject to homesteads has at some time been purchased from France. Mexico, Spain, or the Indians. The only difference was that some portions cost more than others.

The purchase from France in 1803 cost 33 cents per acre. The purchase from Spain in 1819 cost 17.1 cents per acre. The purchase from Mexico in 1848 cost 4; cents per acre. The Gadsden purchase in 1853 cost 34.3 cents per acre. The purchase from Texas in 1850 cost 25.17 cents per acre. Alaska, bought in 1867, cost 1.19 cents per acre.

The state cessions from Georgia cost 10.10 cents per acre.

The entire public domain up to 1880 had cost $88,157,389.98, or 4.7 cents per acre. Up to 1880 the Government had sold or disposed of land to the amount in

The entire public domain up to 1880 and cost $80,101,802.80, or 4.7 cents per acre.

Up to 1880 the Government had sold or disposed of land to the amount in value of $200,702,849.11. This included extensive grants to the new States for school and other purposes. The average amount realized per acre, including these grants for public purposes, was 39.5 cents.

After charging up all the expenses of surveys, Indians, cost of administration, etc., the Government, on June 30, 1880, lacked $121,346,746.85 of having been fully reimbursed, its total outlays up to that time being $222,049,565.96.

The total actual cost, after adding those expenses, was 172 cents per acre. The splendid States and Territories of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louistana, Arkansas, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, California, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, New Mexico, and Arizona have thus been added to the Union at a cost of but little over $120,000,000. The census of 1890 showed these States to have wealth, real and personal, in the following amounts:

Visconsin	1, 833, 308, 523	Montana

The policy that has aided so greatly to these results should not be abandoned. But some exceptions have recently been made in this beneficent policy. The Indian title has been extinguished by treaties in some instances, and the land opened up to homestead settlement with a requirement that the settler should improve the land and reside upon it and in all respects comply with the homestead laws for the full term of five years, and then he should buy it from the Government at a fixed price.

The lands thus offered were attractive to the prospective settler. Every difficulty thrown around the entry upon a new reservation led to an increased public estimate of its value, and thousands of settlers have taken up their homes in these new purchases only to find them less desirable and less valuable than many of the tracts that had been previously taken under the homestead law free of all charge. A period of drought has supervened, bringing much loss to the old and well-settled portions of the country, and falling with especial hardship upon the pioneer who has located his right to purchase a homestead near the border line of the permanently arid belt.

There is no reason that the homestead settlers in Kansas, Nebraska, and other States should obtain their lands free of cost which does not apply with equal or greater force to those of the Dakotas and Oklahoma. The only grounds upon which the discrimination against these settlers is based is the fact that the lands cost the Government more than those previously opened to homestead settlement. But this is only a question of degree and not of principle.

The Gadsden purchase in Arizona cost 34% cents an acre, while the rich and well-watered prairies of lowa cost but 3% cents per acre.

The Government purchases and extinguishes the Indian title to the end that a new State, peopled with American citizens, may take the place of the wild inhabitants. The cost of e

SIR: I have the honor to hand you herewith the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 18th instant, on H. R. No. 292, entitled "A bill providing for free homesteads on the public lands in Oklahoma Territory."

The bill, which is quoted in full in the Commissioner's report, provides in effect that all homestead settlers within the Territory of Oklahoma, upon making final proof on the tract entered : y th m and showing the period of residence thereon required by existing law, s all acquire title to said tract by simply paying the usual and customary lees required in such cases, with out the payment of the price per acre required for said land by existing law"

For the information of Congress, I desire to submit the following:

Statement showing approximate loss to the United States if homestead settlers on Indian and abandoned military reservations are relieved from paying for said lands at rates now fixed by law upon a showing of five years' residence.

*Loss to United States if settlers are relieved from payment.

*Loss to United States if settlers are relieved from payment.

(a) It is not practicable, without an extended search of the records, to give the amount already paid by homestead settlers for these lands, as the moneys received therefor are not kept separate from the sales of other lands.

As these lands have not been open to settlement for five years, very few have been able to make final proof thereon, and it is doubtful if many of them have availed themselves of the privilege of commutation. It is certain that the amount already paid by the settlers is so small as to form a very small proportion to the amount still due.

(b) The proceeds from the sales of these lands are to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians, to recompense them for the cession of the lands. If homestead settlers are relieved from paying for them, the Government will be obliged to make appropriations to recompense the Indians, unless the treaty stipulations are to be entirely ignored.

(c) These lands are subject to disposal under other than the homestead laws. It can not be determined what amount is likely to be embraced in other than homestead entries, but the larger portion of these reservations will undoubtedly be entered under the homestead law, and therefore affected by the proposed legislation.

(d) It has been necessary to estimate the area embraced in abandoned military reservations affected by the act, as some of them and parts of others are unsurveyed, and also to estimate the appraised price to be paid per acre, as the appraisements of them have not yet been made. It is believed, however, that the figures given are a very close approximation.

(e) This amount will be reduced by just so much as is received from settlers who commute their homestead entries. It is most probable that where settlers have the option of obtaining the land free by five years' residence very few of them will pay for the land in order to obtain title three or four years earlier.

earlier.

I have, therefore, to recommend that the bill do not pass
Very respectfully,
HOKE S

HOKE SMITH, Secretary,

Hon. John F. Lacey, Chairman Committee on the Public Lands, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, Washington, D. C., January 16, 1896.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, Washington, D. C., January 16, 1896.

Sir: I have had the honor to receive by reference from the Department, under date of January 9, 1896, for report in duplicate and return of papers, H. R. bill No. 292, "Providing for free homesteads on the public lands in Oklahoma Territory," which was referred to the Department January 7, 1896, by Hon. John F. Lacey, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives, with a request that you make any suggestions you may desire to make in regard thereto to aid the committee in its consideration.

The bill provides:

"That a l settlers under the homestead laws of the United States upon the public lands acquired by treaty or agreement from the various Indian tribes in the Territory of Oklahoma, who have or who shall hereafter reside upon the tract, entered in good faith, for the period required by existing law, shall be entitled to a patent for the land so entered upon the payment to the local land officers of the usual and customary fees; and no other or further charge of any kind whatsover shall be required from such settler to entitle him to a patent for the land covered by his entry: Provided, That the right to commute any such entry and pay for said lands, in the option of any such settler and in the time and at the prices now fixed by existing laws, shall remain in full force and effect.

"Sec. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the terms and provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

I have the honor to report that it appears to be the purpose of the bill to release parties who may make what is known as final proof on homestead entries in Oklahoma from the requirement of also paying for the lands embraced in the entry.

The lands that will be affected by the provisions of the bill, if it becomes a law, are as follows:

Sac and Fox and lowalands, subject to disposal under section 7 of the act of February 13, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 759), which provides that each homestead settler him.

Absentee Shawnee, Pottawatomie, and Cheyenne and Arapahoe lands, subject to disposal under section 16 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 1026), which provides that each homestead settler shall pay $1.50 per acre for the land taken by him.

Kickapoo lands, subject to disposal under section 3 of the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L., 563), which requires each homestead settler to pay $1.50 per acre for the land settled upon.

Cherokee Outlet lands, subject to disposal under section 10 of the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L., 640), which requires each settler before receiving a patent to pay the sum of $2.50 per acre for any land east of $7\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west longitude, $1.50 per acre for any land between $7\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ and $1 per acre for any land west of $8\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west longitude, and interest upon the amount so to be paid for said land from the date of entry to the date of final payment at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

Tonkawa and Pawnee lands, subject to disposal under section 13 of the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L., 644), which provides that each settler shall pay

$2.50 per acre for the land taken by him, and interest upon the amount to be paid from the date of entry to the date of final payment at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

Wichita lands, which, when opened to settlement, will be subject to disposal under the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. L., 897), which requires each homestead entryman to pay $1.25 per acre for the land entered at the time of submitting his final proof. This act further provides that the money received from the sales of Wichita lands shall be deposited in the Treasury subject to the judgment of the Court of Claims in a suit authorized to be brought by the Wichita Indians against the United States for the purpose of determining the amount, if any, which they are entitled to receive for the relinquishment of their lands.

The lands referred to constitute the greater part of Oklahoma Territory, all of the lands in which, that are now opened to homestead entry, having been acquired by treaty with various Indian tribes, except what is known as the "Put lic Land Strip," now embraced in Beaver County.

Without endeavoring to state the exact amount paid by the United States to the Indians for the relinquishment of all their rights to said lands, it is found by reference to the acts of March 1, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 759); March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 1004); February 13, 1891 (25 Stat. L., 759); March 3, 1891 (25 Stat. L., 1004); February 13, 1891 (25 Stat. L., 759); March 3, 1891 (25 Stat. L., 1004); February 13, 1891 (25 Stat. L., 759); March 3, 1891 (25 Stat. L., 1004); February 13, 1891 (25 Stat. L., 1004); February 13, 1891 (25 Stat. L., 1004); He Indians over $18,000,000 for such cessions, and doubtless other cessions made at earlier dates were also in consideration of payments of varying sums of money.

In providing for the disposal of these lands, Congress evidently intended to reimburse the United States for the money so expended, when it departed from the usual custom and required a payment for the land con when the settler showed five years' resi case of the Sioux and Lake Traverse lands in North and South Dakota, the Crow lands in Montana, the Siletz lands in Oregon, and the Nez Perce lands in Idaho.

This course appears to be just and equitable, for it would not be proper to burden the people of the whole country in order that land might be acquired for the purpose of giving free homes to a very small proportion of them.

The settlers upon these lands understood that the law required them to pay for the land settled upon, and many parties doubtless were debarred from entering into competition with the parties who entered these lands because they were unwilling or unable to make the required payment.

The Government probably entered into its engagements with the Indians, by which the Indian title to these lands was extinguished, simply because it expected to receive again from the settlers the money paid therefor, and such payment appears to be the foundation of the whole transaction between the settlers and the Government.

It should be observed also that if the Court of Claims should decide that the Wichita Indians shall be paid for the relinquishment of their lands, it may be necessary for Congress to make an appropriation to satisfy such judgment if the bill becomes a law.

For the reasons stated, I am compelled to withhold my approval from the bill, which, with accompanying letter, is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The objection made to H. R. 292, that it would include military reservations, does not apply to H. R. 3948, the general bill. It only applies to lands obtained by purchase or treaty from the Indians.

The arguments of the Secretary and Commissioner against the bill are substantially the same as those urged by Mr. Buchanan in his veto message in 1860. The figures given, however, might prove misleading. The Secretary has computed all the lands in Oklahoma and estimated them at the maximum selling prices, thus indicating that the Government would lose the sum of $15,058,462 by the passage of a bill of this character as applied to Oklahoma alone.

alone.

This makes no allowance for lands which have already been commuted and probable commutations in the future, and also takes no account of any waste and worthless land that the Government will not be able to sell. It will be observed in the letter of the Sccretary that this land is all estimated at from $1.25 to $2.50 an acre, the maximum prices for public, agricultural, or grazing lands. But the existing law requires the purchaser to comply with all the requirements of the homestead law without any of its benefits. After living upon it and reclaiming it to cultivation, he must in the end pay for it at the full price.

The situation of these people also appeals to the generosity of the nation. Since the enactment of the laws opening these reservations to settlement a period of almost continuous drought has prevailed. In the lands bordering on the arid belt a marked falling off of population has occurred, and the settler has found it hard enough to support himself and family without making provision for the purchase of his home at the end of five years' residence.

We think these settlers should be accorded the generous and liberal provisions of the original homestead law.

The nation can well afford in times of peace to deal as liberally with its pioneers as it did in the dark days when the original law was enacted, in May, 1882.

The bill as amended by the committee would read as follows:

A bill to provide for free homes on lands purchased from the Indian tribes. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That so much of all acts or parts of acts as require payment to the United States therefor from persons who have acquired or may hereafter acquire homesteads upon the public lands included in the limits of any grant obtained by treaty or purchase from the various tribes of Indians are hereby repealed, and the settlers entitled to the benefits of the homestead laws upon such lands shall only be required to pay the usual and customary fees required from homestead settlers upon other public lands: Provided. That the right to commute any such entry and pay for said lands at the option of any such settler and in the time and at the prices now fixed by existing laws shall remain in full force and effect: Provided further, That this act shall not apply to any lands where the proceeds of the sales or homestead or other entries thereof are under existing treaties required to be paid over to the Indians or held in trust or paid into the Treasury for their benefit.

The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office have also made a special report as to H. R. 3948, which for the information of the House we set out in full, as rollows: A bill to provide for free homes on lands purchased from the Indian tribes.

The Colville lands in Washington, subject to disposal under the act of July 1, 1892 (27 Stat. L., 62), which requires each homestead settler to pay $1.50 per acre before receiving a final certificate for the land covered by his entry.

The Crow lands in Montana, subject to disposal under section 31 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 1043), which provides that each homestead settler shall, before receiving a patent, pay $1.50 per acre for the land settled upon.

The Siletz lands in Oregon, subject to disposal under section 15 of the act of August 15. 1894 (28 Stat. L., 326), which provides that each homestead settler shall pay $1.50 per acre for the land settled upon.

Without endeavoring to state the exact amount paid or agreed to be paid by the United States to the Indians for the relinquishment of all their rights to said lands, which would require an extended examination of the statutes, it is found by reference to the statutes to which I have referred as governing the disposal of said lands that, in the aggregate, over $21,000,000 has been paid or agreed to be paid.

This amount should be increased by the moneys agreed to be paid for earlier cessions, especially for lands in Oklahoma Territory, where cessions were required from more than one tribe of Indians for the same lands, as, for instance, in the case of the Muscogee or Creek and Seminole cessions, obtained at an expense of over $4.000,000 (see acts of March 1 and 2, 1889, 25 Stat. L., 759 and 1004), where subsequently the Cheyenne and Arapahoe, Pottawatomie, Absentee Shawnee, Sac and Fox, Iowa, and Kickapoo tribes of Indians received valuable considerations amounting to over $2,000,000 for portions of the same lands so ceded. This amount of $21,000,000 does not embrace any compensation for the Great Sioux lands in North and South Dakota and Nebraska, for the Chippewa lands in Oklahoma, as the Government has not agreed to pay the Indians any fixed amount for these lands.

As regards the two former, the Indians are to receive the proceeds from the disposal of the lands, estimated to amount in the two reservations to nearly $9,000,000, and as to the two latter, the proceeds are to be deposited in the United States Treasury subject to future determination as to whether the Indians shall receive the whole or any part thereof. If the bill under consideration becomes a law, it will be necessary for Congress to make other provision for the Sioux and Chippewa Indians, and possibly for the Colville and Wichita Indian a It is not practicable, without an extended search of the records, to give the amount already paid by homestead settlers for these lands, as the moneys received therefor are not kept separate from the sales of other lands. As these lands have not been open to settlement for five years, very few have been able to make final proof thereon, and it is doubtful if many have availed themselves of the privilege of commutation. It is certain that the amount already paid by the settlers is so small as to form a very small proportion to the amount still due.

b The proceeds from the sales of these lands are to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians to recompense them for the cession of the lands. If homestead settlers are released from paying for them, the Government will be obliged to make appropriations to recompense the Indians, unless the treaty stipulations are to be entirely ignored.

c These lands are subject to disposal under other laws as well as the homestead laws. It can not be determined what amount is likely to be embraced in other than homestead entries, but the larger portion of these reservations will undoubtedly be entered under the homestead law and therefore affected by the proposed legislation.

d This amount will be reduced by just so much as is received from settlers who commute their homestead entries. It is most probable that where settlers have the option of obtaining the land free by five years' residence, very few of them will pay for the land a reasonable that the law required them to pay for the land satisfal reasonable that the law required them to pay for the land satisfal reasonable that the law required them to pay for the land satisfal reasonable that the law required them to pay for the land satisfal reasonable that the law required them to pay for the land satisfal reasonable.

The settlers upon these lands understood that the law required them to pay for the land settled upon, and many parties doubtless were debarred from entering into competition with the parties who entered these lands because they were unwilling or unable to make the required payment.

The Government probably entered into its engagements with the Indians by which the Indian title to these lands was extinguished simply because it expected to receive again from the settlers the money paid therefor, and such payment appears to be the foundation of the whole transaction between the settlers and the Government.

For the reasons given, I am of the opinion that the proposed legislation is inadvisable and therefore that the bill should not become a law.

I deem it proper to state that reports have been made to the Department by this office on bills of a purport similar to that under consideration, as follows:

follows:

H. R. bill No. 8334, upon which report was made January 28, 1895.

H. R. bill No. 2945, upon which report was made January 16, 1896.

H. R. bill No. 292, upon which report was made January 16, 1896.

The bill and accompanying letter are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The Secretary of the Interior.

An amendment, it will be observed, is proposed by the committee to H. R. 3948 so that the bill will not apply to lands where the Government practically acts as a trustee for the sale of the lands for the Indians.

M. DETTICOPEW. Now, M. Progradent I sell that the bill go

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over until after the holidays, and be made the unfinished business immediately after Congress reconvenes.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] intends to present some tables in connection with the report. He is not in the Chamber at this moment, but I suppose he can present them hereafter and have them printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill under consideration go over until after the holidays, remaining the unfinished business of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and such is the order of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT subsequently said: I was called out of the Chamber a moment ago, when the Secretary commenced to read the report on the bill which was then under consideration, which is called the free-home bill, and supposed that the reading would take some little time. I learn that during my absence authority was given that the report might be printed in the RECORD. I desire to have also printed in the RECORD a table which has been furished. nished me from the office of the General Land Commissioner, which gives very full statistics—much fuller than those furnished in the report—in relation to this matter, and I ask that this table may be printed in the RECORD with the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that the report may be reprinted with the table submitted by the Senator from Connecticut as a separate Senate document, that is, that the same number of the report be reprinted with the table, so that we may have the whole subject together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make that motion?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do.

Mr. VEST. I beg to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut

Mr. VEST. 1 beg to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether he proposes to make a minority report?

Mr. PLATT. I had expected to make a statement of my views and those of the members of the committee who agree with me when we proceeded to the consideration of the bill, but I can put those views in the form of a written report if it be desired.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be in the form of a minority report attached to the report of the majority of the committee.

Mr. VEST. I should like to see the minority report of the Senator if it suits his convenience to make one.

Mr. VEST. I should like to see the minority report of the Senator, if it suits his convenience to make one.

Mr. PLATT. I can put my views in writing, and will do so between now and the reassembling of Congress after the holidays.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let permission be granted that the views of the minority may be filed with the Secretary and sent to the Public Printer so soon as the Senator from Connecticut shall have prepared them. I see no objection to that being done and that the views of the Senator be attached to the report of the committhe views of the Senator be attached to the report of the commit-the as a minority report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know to what the table refers which the Senator from Connecticut wishes to have printed.

Mr. PLATT. The table is very much such a table as is found.

on page 13 of the report of the committee, and contains some addiional facts and figures in relation to the matter.

Mr. PETTIGREW. As I understand, the table simply shows the number of acres of land which are purchased, the cost of the lands to the Government, and some other facts in connection therewith.

Mr. PLATT. That is all; and it shows the amount which has already been paid by the settlers, the price per acre to be paid, and the amount which has been received by the Government.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection to the table being printed in the RECORD in connection with the report of the committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to say that whatever revenue there might be would be distributed over the next twenty or fifty years which would elapse before all the lands would be taken if this bill did not pass. The sum, in my opinion, which will come out of the Treasury by the passage of this bill will not amount to $13,500,000, and that sum will be distributed over several years of time. The revenue to the Government last year from the sale of these reservations was only $240,000. So that the anticipation of much revenue from that source is a vain hope.

SPECIAL EXAMINER OF DRUGS AT PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2397) to amend section 2743 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the examination of drugs.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two thousand five" and insert "one thousand eight;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2743 of the Revised Statutes be, and it hereby is, so amended that the special examiner of drugs, medicines, chemicals, chemical preparations, dyes, dyestuffs, paints, oils, varmishes, and other similar articles, at Philadelphia, Pa., shall receive a salary of $1,800 per annum, and shall be paid each year quarterly.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the salary of that officer now?
Mr. QUAY. The salary is $1,500, which is much lower than the salary of the similar officer heretofore at the port of Boston and the port of New York.

I will say further, in relation to the amendment of the committee, that the intention of the bill when introduced was to fix the salary of the officer at Philadelphia at the same amount paid similar officers in some of the other large ports. The Committee on lar officers in some of the other large ports. The Committee on Finance in their wisdom have seen fit to reduce by $700 the original proposition.

Mr. PLATT. How much is the salary they fix?

Mr. QUAY. The salary appears in the bill at $1,800, instead of $2,500. My own opinion is that the amendment of the committee ought to be voted down.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that after a committee of the Senate has investigated the subject and reported such an amendment. Let the bill go through in the way it is reported and get it out of the way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. R. WILLIAM GREBE.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3139) for the relief of M. R. William

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to revoke the order by which M. R. William Grebe was dismissed from the military service of the United States as a captain of the Fourth Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and to honorably discharge him, to date from the 12th of December, 1864; but he shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances to which he might have been entitled but for such action.

CATHOLIC CHURCH AT MACON CITY, MO

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S.-71) for the relief of the Catholic church at Macon City, Mo., which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Claims and has been passed by this body three times heretofore

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster's Department of the Army the circumstances, character, and extent of the alleged use and occupation by the United States military authorities for Government purposes, during the late war, of the Catholic church at Macon City, in Macon County, Mo., the actual value of such use and occupation, and to find, award, and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what amount, if any, is equitably due from the United States to said Catholic church as the reasonable value of such use and occupation; and to pay to the person or per-sons authorized to receive and receipt for the same the amount, if any, so found to be due from the United States; and provides that the acceptance of any sum paid under the provisions of this act shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of every kind and nature for such use and occupation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE JOHNSON.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4281) granting a pension to George Johnson, of Lenox, Iowa

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "Infantry," to insert "in lieu of that he is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the peusion roll, at the rate of $72 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of George Johnson, late a private in Company C, Ninetenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to George Johnson, of Lenox, Iowa.'

HENRY A. F. WORTH.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5787) for the relief of Henry A. F. Worth.

Worth.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Henry A. F. Worth, late captain Company K, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $72 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOAN OF FLAGS FOR INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

The bill (H. R. 9700) authorizing the issuing and loaning of the ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., of the United States for the purpose of decorating the streets of the city of Washington on the occasion of the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th of March, 1897, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the committee having in charge the arrangements for the inauguration to ask the immediate passage of the bill which has just been read. It is necessary to have it done now rather than later; it will take but a moment, and there is no objection to it. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF SOLDIERS' HOME AT LEAVENWORTH, KANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the special committee to investigate the Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth, Kans., be, and are hereby, authorized to procure the printing of the testimony taken by said committee, together with such exhibits used in said investigation as said committee shall deem necessary.

ESTHER BROWN.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Senator from Tennessee withdraw the motion for a moment to allow me to call up a very modest pension bill?

Mr. HARRIS. I should be glad to do so if I were not afraid that the precedent would tempt other Senators to ask me to do the same thing. But I will risk it, Mr. President. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Cullon in the chair). The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3252) to increase the pension of Esther

It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Esther Brown, widow of James Brown, late a captain in Company C, Mormon Battalion Volunteers, Mexican war, at the rate of $12 per month, in lieu of the pension she now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. EXECUTIVE SESSION.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 21, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

JOHN C. HOWE.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a private bill. It is a case in which great injustice has been done; and I have been waiting during two Congresses to get it up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Walker] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which will be read.

The bill (H. R. 753) for the relief of John C. Howe was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased, $96,907, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being compensation in full for the use by the United States, to wit, in 66,907,313 cup-anyli cartridges, of the invention secured to John C. Howe and his assigns by letters patent of the United States, issued to him August 16, 1864, and No. 43851, during the entire term of said letters patent, as appears in the findings of law and of fact made by the United States circuit court for the district of Connecticut, in the case of Forehand et al. vs. Porter, reported in volume 15 of the Federal Reporter, at page 256, and as further appears in the findings of fact made by the Court of Claims, after full testimony and full hearing in Congressional case No. 1, entitled Forehand et al. vs. The United States, heard on reference of the matter to said Court of Claims by the Committee on Claims of the Senate, under and pursuant to the act of March 3, 1885, commonly known as the Bowman Act, said indings of fact having been certified to the Committee on Claims of the Senate by said court on the 25th day of April, 1889.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, Iask unanimous consent to occupy a moment in stating the facts of this case. This consent to occupy a moment in stating the facts of this case. This invention was made in 1864. In 1868, long after the war, the Government took possession of it and manufactured the quantity of cartridges mentioned in the bill (66,907,313). The parties who are interested in this claim spent very much more than $10,000 in prosecuting their case through all the United States courts. They obtained decisions of the United States courts in their favor. They then presented the matter to the Senate, where it was referred to the Committee on Claims. Favorable findings have been rendered by that committee; the bill has three times—in the Fifty-second, the Fifty-third, and the Fifty-fourth Congresses—received a unanimous report in its favor from the Senate committee; and it has passed the Senate twice. It was no our desk awaiting action in the Fifty-second and the Fifty-third Congresses; but it has never in the Fifty-second and the Fifty-third Congresses; but it has never been brought up.

This is a case of very great hardship. Not only did Mr. Howe suffer the loss of his property, which was taken possession of by the Government, but these claimants have been compelled to spend between ten and twenty thousand dollars in establishing their rights; they are out of pocket that much money. If the House will indulge me a moment, I will read an extract from a letter which I have received from Mr. Causten Browne, of Boston, the counsel for these parties. Mr. Browne says:

I have a letter this morning from Perry, who is the principal party in interest, next to Howe's daughter, and who has spent over $10,000 on the case ont of his own pocket. He says: "Sickness and misfortune have ruined me to the last dollar, and you can hardly imagine the anxious feeling I have about this claim, which is my last hope for the old age of myself and my wife." Howe's daughter, as I think you already know, has never been able to pay her father's funeral expenses.

These parties have been waiting for years in the hope of receiving justice from the Congress of the United States. They have ng justice from the Congress of the United States. They have neglected other matters in which they might have earned support to give their attention to the prosecution of this claim. In this, as I think, they acted foolishly. If I had been their counsel, I would have told them to throw away this case before ever taking it to the courts. But they have expended their money in prosecuting a just claim and now, in their old age, are in a condition of suffering and want.

As I have said, the bill has been unanimously reported by three committees of the Senate; and it has also been unanimously reported by three committees of this House. It has twice passed the Senate, but up to this time we have been unable to have it brought before the House for action. I do ask that the bill be considered now. Either let it be defeated, if the claim is not a good one, or let it go through.

Mr. COX. As I understand, this is a Senate bill?
Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I desire to move to substitute for this the Senate bill, which has been again passed in this Senate.

Mr. COX. Has the bill been referred in this House to any comported by the Committee on Claims, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, but it has not been reached in the Committee of the Whole. Let me say to my friend that the House bill is identical, word for word, with the Senate bill. The bill has been reported unanimously in three Congresses. I hope the gentleman will at any rate allow the bill to be considered now.

The SPEAKER, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COLSON. I should like to hear the report of the committee on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Colson] reserves the right to object, and calls for the reading of the report.
The report (by Mr. Denny) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 753) for the relief of the legal representatives of John C. Howe, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

In 1804 John C. Howe, of Worcester, Mass., invented and patented a new metallic center-fire cartridge, and on August 16, 1864, a patent, No. 43851, was granted to him therefor. (A copy of the specification is annex-d hereto.)

In 1808 the United States adopted, without permission of Howe, and began to manufacture for its own use, and also in some instances for sale, a metallic cartridge then and since known in the service as the "cup-anvil" cartridge. Between 1808 and the date of expiration of the Howe patent, August 16, 1881, the United States manufactured 66,907,313 of these "cup-anvil" cartridges.

Between 1898 and the date of expiration of the Howe patent, Angust 16, 1881, the United States manufactured 66,907,313 of these "cup-anvil" cartridges.

This total product was valued by the United States at $1,635,928.35.

Of this total product, the United States sold 5,721,818 and received in cash for same about $199,375.96, which is at the average rate of nearly $35 a thousand; the balance, or 61,185,495, were used by the United States.

Howe claimed that the "cup-anvil" cartridge infringed his patent, and this the ordnance officers of the United States denied.

Howe was a mechanic and a poor man, residing in Worcester, Mass., and had no money to prosecute his claim.

His employers, Forehand & Wadsworth, firearms manufacturers, of Worcester, Mass., took up his cause and agreed to prosecute it.

To that end he vested them with the legal title to the patent and to his claim against the United States for the infringement, and they brought suit in the United States circuit court for the district of Connecticut against the master armorer at Springfield, Mass., Samuel W. Porter (who had made a part of the cup-anvil cartridges for the United States), to have the validity of the patent and the fact of infringement decided by a competent tribunal. This suit was begun May 29, 1881.

The United States defended the suit by its district attorney for the district of Connecticut, Hon. Daniel Chadwick, the United States paying all the expenses of the defense. The testimony was begun on April 11, 1882, and concluded on October 30, 1882. The proofs in defense fill a volume of 99 printed pages.

The case was argued or ally and on printed briefs before Judge Nathaniel.

concluded on October of, 1862. The proofs in december his volume of 185 printed pages.

The case was argued orally and on printed briefs before Judge Nathaniel Shipman.

On February 10, 1883, the opinion of the court was rendered construing the patent, and finding that it was valid and had been infringed by the making of the "cup-anvil" cartridges.

This opinion is reported in 15 Federal Reporter, page 256, under the name Forehand et al. vs. Porter.

In or about December, 1883, Forehand & Wadsworth presented to the Senate a memorial to Congress, setting forth the facts and praying for suitable compensation for the infringement.

This memorial was, on December 4, 1883, referred to the Committee on Claims of the Senate, and was by that committee, on January 9, 1884, referred under the Bowman Act of March 3, 1883, to the Court of Claims for findings of fact.

In or about February, 1884, a petition was filed in the Court of Claims by Forehand & Wadsworth in pursuance of the reference to that court. The Attorney-General of the United States filed a general traverse and conducted an even more elaborate defense on all the issues than had been made in the circuit court. The testimony in the case began on May 3, 1884, and ended on January 41, 1888. All the testimony in the case in the circuit court was stipulated into the case in the Court of Claims. In addition thereto other testimony was taken, making a volume of 88 printed pages, and including the depositions of Marcellus Hartley, of New York, president of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, and William A. Hullert, of New York, on behalf of claimants; and, on behalf of the United States, the depositions of Col. A. R. Buffington, commandant at the Springfield Armory; S. W. Porter, master armorer at Springfield; Benj. F. Butler, of Lowell, Mass.; John E. Earle, expert, of New Haven, Conn.; John C. Howe, subposnaed; Col. J. M. has been prosecuted through all the courts. It is not a case that has simply been before the Court of Claims only, as is the fact has simply been before the Court of Claims only, as is the lact with many cases brought in; but these parties began suit in the United States court in Connecticut. and they obtained decisions in their favor all the way through. The various committees which have considered the case have unanimously reported in favor of the claim. If this claim is not to be paid, then there can never be a claim which ought to be paid. I want the case considered now. If it is to be defeated, let it be done, so that an end may be put to these people's long suspense.

these people's long suspense.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What is the amount involved?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. A little less than $67,000.

Eu it ought to be paid just as much as though it were only $6.07.

Mr. COX. Let me ask the gentleman one question before consent is given for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Let us have consent for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first put the question. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COX. I object.
Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I certainly did not want to interrupt the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, and hope he will be given an opportunity to make his suggestion. I did not mean to compare the control of the present consideration of an opportunity to make his suggestion. I did not mean to cut him off, and hope he will be heard. Let him withdraw his objection and ask such questions as he thinks necessary to a full and fair understanding of this matter. That is all I ask. I think he must have misunderstood me, and hope he will go on now.

Mr. COX. The very point that I wanted to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts was this: This claim passed through the committee, and now the man is making an application—the man Howe, or his heirs, the inventor—for this allowance; but, as I understand it he has sold or transferred a very large interest in the stand it, he has sold or transferred a very large interest in the invention, and the Court of Claims so finds.

Now, I wanted to ask my friend from Massachusetts this question: If he was not in the employ of the Government of the United States at the time that he made that invention?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. He was in the employ of the manufacturing firm of Forehand & Wadsworth, in the town where I live. I knew him, knew his wife and children. Further-more, the money that has been put into this claim for the purmore, the money that has been put into this claim for the purpose of prosecuting it by the man who claims here and by the firm of Forehand & Wadsworth is more than the amount that will be refunded to them if this allowance is raade. That is to say, if the $67,000 is paid, taking the money already expended in prosecuting the claim before the various courts and tribunals from 1881 to the present time, it will no more than refund the from 1881 to the present time, it will no more than refund the money and the interest these parties have actually paid out. The money is to be paid, if we award the claim, directly to Mr. Howe's heirs, and, as I have said, it will not be a great deal more for these people, aside from his daughter, than the amount they have already put in to prosecute the claim through the different tribunals up to the present time.

Mr. COX. This claim involves something like $67,000, I believe?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Sixty-seventhousand nearly, or within a few dollars of it.

or within a few dollars of it.

Mr. COX. The claim has been in some way, or by some means, transferred to some one else. Now, what that party paid for the claim is a matter that I think should enter materially into the consideration of the equities of the case. The amount so paid does not appear anywhere in the report.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I can assure the gentle-

Mr. COX (continuing). Now, Mr. Speaker, I would take the word of the gentleman from Massachusetts as quick as that of any other man in the world. But in voting the public money out of the Treasury I would like to know who is getting the benefit of the claim on which we are passing, for he knows and I know that men are buying these claims against the Government and sending them here for appropriation, when often the amount of the claim is two or three hundred per cent more than what they paid for it. Now, while I would do anything for my friend from Massachusetts in the world that was within my power to do, I shall be compelled to interpose objection to the consideration of These men who furnished the claimant the money to prosecute his claim did it from sympathy and a kindly feeling for him, and not for the purpose of making a speculation out of it. Their sympathies were excited in Mr. Howe's behalf, and especially when it was ascertained that Mr. Howe's daughter did not have money enough to pay the funeral expenses of her father, which are still due.

I beg the gentleman not to object.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 209) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1896, on the 18th day of said month.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. 2889) to aid and encourage the holding of the Tennessee Centennial Exposition at Nashville, Tenn., in the year 1897, and making an appropriation therefore; when the Speaker signed the same.

CAROLINE S. BAKER.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2989) to increase the pension of Caroline S. Baker

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at $30 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline S. Baker, widow of John Howard Baker, late assistant engineer, United States Navy, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. BAILEY. I can make a statement which I think will satisfy the gentleman. The husband of this widow was ordered by the Government, while in the line of his duty, into a Chinese port where cholera prevailed. Under these orders he went into the infected port, took the cholera, and died. Since her husband's death the widow has been drawing, under the law, $15 for herself and $2 for her child, making $17 for the widow and the child. During this time she has resided with her father, who recently died, and she is left with absolutely nothing except the $17 per month for herself and her child.

If this woman's husband had been in the employ of a private corporation and had lost his life under such circumstances, there is not a gentleman on this floor who, sitting as a juror, would not award her as damages a sum sufficient to yield more than this bill

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until I can inquire whether this bill has been reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BAILEY. This bill for which I ask unanimous consent is a Senate bill. It passed the Senate unanimously, and a similar bill was reported unanimously by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BAILEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN BRIDGES.

Mr. OGDEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1723) to approve and ratify the construction of a bridge over and across Caddo Lake, at Mooringsport, La., by the Kansas City, Shreveport and Gulf Railway Company

The bill was read. Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1724) authorizing the Kansas City, Watkins and Gulf Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Black River, in Louisiana.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, is this a bill presented by the same member who presented the other?

The SPEAKER. This is another bridge bill, presented by the same gentleman who presented the other.

The bill was read. It provides that the Kansas City, Watkins and Gulf Railway Company, a corporation created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Louisiana, be, and is, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge across Black River, in the State of Louisiana, at such point suitable to the interests of navigation as may hereafter be selected by said railway company for crossing said river with its railroad line.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present considera-

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 1725.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I call for the regular order.

IMMIGRATION BILL.

The Clerk will present the following business The SPEAKER. on the Speaker's table.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7864) amending the immigration laws of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, in amendment of the immigration and contract-labor acts, be, and hereby is, amended by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following: All male persons between 16 and 60 years of age who can not both read and write the English language or some other language. But no parent of a person now living in, or hereafter admitted to, this country shall be excluded because of his inability to read and write.

Sec. 2. That the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, to facilitate the enforcement of the immigration and contract-labor laws, shall apply to the persons mentioned in section 1 of this act.

Sec. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country to enter the United States for the purpose of engaging in any mechanical trade or manual labor within the borders thereof while residing or retaining his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may permit aliens to come into and enter this country for the purpose of teaching new arts or industries, under such rules and regulations as he may provide.

Sec. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, company, or corporation knowingly to employ in any mechanical trade or manual labor in the United States any alien who resides or retains his home in a foreign country: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the employment of sailors, deck hands, or other employees of vessels of the United States, or rallroad train hands, such as conductors, engineers, brakemen, firemen, or baggagemen, whose duties require them to pass over the frontier to reach the termini of their runs.

Sec. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any alien to enter the United States, except subjects of the Dominion of Canada and other American countries, except at the places where the United States maintain an immigrant inspection board.

Sec. 6. That any

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out all after "following:" down to and including line 7, page 3, and insert: "All persons over 16 years of age who can not read and write the language of their native country or some other language; but an admissible immigrant over such age of 16 years may bring in with him or send for his wife or parent or grandparent or minor child or grandchild notwithstanding the inability of such relative to read and write as aforesaid.

"Second. For the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read and write, as required by the foregoing section, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on numbered uniform pasteboard slips, each containing five lines of said Constitution printed in the various languages of the immigrants in double small pica type. These slips shall be kept in boxes made for that purpose and so constructed as to conceal the slips from view, each box to contain slips of but one language, and the immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made. Each immigrant shall be required to draw one of said slips from the box and read, and afterwards write out, in full view of the immigration officers, the five lines printed thereon. Each slip shall be returned to the box immediately after the test is finished, and the contents of the box shall be shaken up by an inspection officer before another drawing is made. No immigrant falling to read and write out the slip thus drawn by him shall be admitted, but he shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him, as now provided by law. The inspection officers shall keep in each box at all times a full number of said printed pasteboard slips, and in the case of each excluded immigrant shall keep a certified memorandum of the number of the slip which the said immigrant failed to read or copy out in writing."

Page 3, after line 7, insert:

"SEC. 2. This act shall not apply to persons arriving in the United States from any port or place in the Island of Cuba during the continuance of the present disorder there: Provided, That such persons have heretofore been inhabitants of that island."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I make this motion with the consent and at the request of some members of the committee; and I desire to say that if it should precipitate debate I would like to be heard in support of the motion.

Mr. DANFORD. A parliamentary inquiry. Will a motion to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked be in order, either as an amendment to or as a substi-tute for the motion of the gentleman from Missouri? The SPEAKER. The motion is in order; but the vote will have to be taken on the motion to refer to the committee.

Mr. DANFORD. I make that motion-to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, there is no previous question ordered, and I should like to be heard for a moment on this motion

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard now?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is immaterial to me, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let the gentleman first be heard, and then I desire to be heard.

and then I desire to be heard.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. How much time have I?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. We are not limited.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has an hour.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, this bill is what is commonly known as the immigration bill. It passed the House last summer in a shape which seemed satisfactory all around. It was a compromise measure, and it was framed upon the principle of the Golden Rule. The extremists for restriction upon the one side were told that if they refused to accept this compromise measure it might result in no legislation at all upon the subject, and they it might result in no legislation at all upon the subject, and they acquiesced in the action of the House. On the other hand, there were those who claimed that restriction is not liberty—who held were those who claimed that restriction is not liberty—who held and now hold that the right of asylum on American soil should not be denied to anyone except those already barred by existing laws. The majority of our adopted citizens belong to the class who hold these views. And who will deny that their sentiments in this respect are thoroughly and uprightly American and in accord with those of the founders of the Republic? But they were told—and I was one of those who imparted the information to the characteristic of the restriction of the second that the restriction is not liberty—who held and it was one of those who imparted the information to the second that the restriction is not liberty—who held and it was one of those who imparted the information. to them—that they had to choose between the House bill and some harsher or more stringent measure; and so these people, a very large class, also acquiesced in the House bill; and I stood here upon this floor advocating the passage of that bill for the purpose of preventing more stringent and more harsh legislation on the subject.

All this, Mr. Speaker, was before the election which resulted in such a glorious victory for sound money and Republican principles. There is not one on this side of the Chamber, and perhaps no one within the sound of my voice, who can justly deny that that great victory was largely due to the loyalty, the sound sense, and the conservatism of our adopted citizens, who, almost sense, and the conservatism of our adopted citizens, who, almost irrespective of party, voted for sound money, protection, and McKinley, thereby turning the scales in more than half a dozen States—in Ohio, in Illinois, in Wisconsin, in Michigan, in Iowa, in Minnesota, and even in old Kentucky.

I should not refer to this fact now, Mr. Speaker, if it had not a direct bearing upon this question of immigration. The advocates of heavely measures of restriction of immigration never fail to direct bearing upon this question of immigration. The advocates of harsh measures of restriction of immigration never fail to point to the ignorant foreign vote as a justification of their position. It was said in the Senate, and it was repeated in the House last summer, that immigration was a growing danger to the institutions of our country, and the great centers of population were pointed out as an especial source of peril. But the result of the last election, Mr. Speaker, was a refutation of these assertions as complete as any patriot could wish for. All the large cities, all the counties, all the States in which the foreign vote forms a considerable element of strength voted against repudiation and for the nation's honor, and instead of endangering the life of the the nation's honor, and instead of endangering the life of the Republic, the presence of these foreign-born citizens helped materially, if not decisively, to save it.

With the permission of the House, I wish in this connection to print some editorials of leading American newspapers which readily concede this fact. One of them, from the New York Evening Post, I ask time for the Clerk to read. It bears directly on the connection between immigration and election results.

The Clerk read as follows:

[The New York Evening Post, November 9, 1896.]

It is already clear that the demand for severe restrictions upon foreign immigration made by some uneasy people in the East will receive less support hereafter than before from the West, which has never manifested much sympathy with it. The next Congress will be controlled by sound-money Republicans, and such Congressmen from the West will have a keen sense of their indebtedness to the foreign element, without the support of which many of them would have lost their districts. Take the State of Iowa, for example. More than two-fifths of the people are of foreign parentage; of this foreign element two-fifths are Germans, over one-fifth Scandinavians, and more than one-tenth English, Scotch, and Welsh, nearly all of which races voted solidly for sound money. Those people who fear that the nation is being ruined by "the ignorant foreign vote" should read with attention this tribute to that vote on the morning of election day by the Iowa State Register, the leading Republican newspaper of its State:

"The question has often come to us, What would become of the cause of sound money, which we consider absolutely vital to honesty and honor and the country, if it were not for the Germans, the Scandinavians, the Scotch-Irish, and the Irish who follow in the footsteps of leaders like Archishop Ireland, the Welsh, the French, the Hebrews, nearly all of whom have come to this country in years more or less recent? Every man who has observed the trend of politics must concede that these elements are nine-tenths, or seven-tenths, for sound money—against debased currency, against repudiated debts, and for national integrity. We can not let this campaign come to a close without acknowledging the debt America this year owes to those of foreign birth."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I have a vast number of editorials of similar tenor from the New York Sun, from the St. Louis • Globe-Democrat, the leading Republican newspaper of the West, and other reputable journals, which I shall print in the Record, with the permission of the House. They are as follows:

[St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat, Friday morning, November 13, 1896.] THE FOREIGN VOTE.

THE FOREIGN VOTE.

A feature of the recent election that merits general attention is the fact that the foreign-born citizens generally voted in favor of the gold standard and against the various follies and wickednesses of Bryanism. The States in which this element is strongest gave the largest majorities for McKinley, while those in which it counts for least gave majorities the other way. There is little or no foreign population in the South, where the preponderance was heaviest for Bryan, and the percentages in the Western States that he carried are among the smallest in the country. The Germans and the Scandinavians were practically solid for sound money, casting more than 500,000 votes on that side, which would have reversed the result in several States if they had been cast for free silver. In a relative way, the same is to be said of other nationalities. The fallacy of cheap money did not lead them astray; the proposition to make debts easier to pay by adopting the process of repudiation did not capture them. They did not take kindly to the idea of promoting prosperity by reducing wages and destroying values; and so, without regard to former partisan affiliations, they went to the polls and helped to overthrow the Chicago platform and ticket.

The lesson of this manifestation is obvious and important. We give ourselves a good deal of trouble from time to time about the foreign vote, and the probabilities of mischief that it involves; but we have here a striking proof that such apprehensions are not well founded. It is not true, as the result of the late election plainly shows, that the foreign-born voters constitute a force that can readily be used by demagogues and fanatics for the accomplishment of wild and evil purposes. These people bring with them from their native countries certain traits of integrity and morality and certain sentiments of respect for established principles and institutions which make them good citizens and careful voters. There are socialists and anarchists among them, to be sure,

[The New York Evening Post, November 6, 1896.]

[The New York Evening Post, November 6, 1896.]

NATIVE AND FOREIGN BORN.

Nine of the forty-five States of the Union lie within the region pierced by the Rocky Mountain range or west of those mountains. They are for the most part thinly settled, having in 1890 a total population of only 2.814.400, or less than 5 per cent of the £2,116,811 in the whole forty-five, although they have an abnormal proportion of the electoral votes—36 out of 447, or about one-twelfth. These 36 votes are so divided between the two candidates as to give Bryan a majority of 10 or of 4, according as Wyoming shall prove to be for or against him.

This side of the eastern foothills of the Rockies lie 36 States, of which 22 are north of the Potomac and Ohio rivers, and 14 below that line—counting Missouri with the South, as it has always been in political affiliations, and the adjoining State of Kansas with the North, as it has been since the slavery issue was raised until that issue was supplanted by Populism. The Northern States have 38,235,523 people, and 233 electoral votes; the Southern, 21,008,885 people, and 148 electoral votes. These Northern States are solid for McKinley, with the exception of Kansas, Nebraska, and possibly South Dakota; the Southern ones solid for Bryan, except West Virginia and Kenteky.

Among the various points of difference between these two groups of States is one which is seldom thought of, but which is brought into bold relief by the results of the recent election. The South is essentially a native section, the white population of many States being almost exclusively the descendants of the early settlers. The North is nearly half of foreign birth, with many States in which that element constitutes a large majority of the people. The last census gives the number of persons whose parents, one or both, were foreign born, which is a much fairer test than that of native or foreign birth. For the South the whites alone are now to be considered, as the negro vote has nowhere turned the scales except in Kentucky. F

North Carolina; between 3 and 4 in South Carolina, Georgia, and Tennessee, and between 4 and 5 in Virginia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Arkansas. In Florida there is a large element of Cubans; in Louisiana, New Orleans, the one large city in the South, has drawn many foreign immigrants; and in Texas many Mexicans have drifted across the Rio Grande, and there is a considerable German population, carrying the ratio in these three States up to about 15 per cent in Florida, 19 in Texas, and 28 in Louisiana. In the section, as a whole, the foreign vote is very small, and in no one of these last three States has it ever been a controlling element.

On the other hand, in the North we have in New England persons of foreign parentage constituting from about 23 per cent of the population in Maine to 56 in Massachusetts and 59 in Rhode Island: in New York about 57, New Jersey 50, and Pennsylvania 37; while west of the Alleghanies the only States with a relatively small proportion are Indiana, with about 21, Missourf 28, and Kansas 28. Every where else the ratio is large, and in some States very great, about 35 per cent in Ohio, 43 in Nebraska, 44 in Iowa, 50 in Illinois, 55 in Michigan, 61 in South Dakota, 74 in Wisconsin, 76 in Minnesota, and 79 in North Dakota.

The salient fact about the recent election from this point of view is that the almost entirely native South went overwhelmingly wrong on the burning issue, while the largely foreign-born North went even more overwhelmingly right. From the Atlantic to the Missouri River there was not a break in the McKinley column. New York, more than half foreign, gave McKinley about 25,000 more votes than Bryan; Illinois, half foreign, late 1000 majority for McKinley in a vote two-thirds as large as New York's; Wisconsin, nearly three-fourths foreign, about 100,000 majority in a total vote only about a quarter as large as New York's.

Moreover, the State which makes the poorest showing of all the great States east of the Missouri River is the one which has the smallest foreign el way.

We have had a school of writers and speakers in this country who for years have lamented the threatened destruction of our institutions by "the ignorant foreign vote." We trust that these people will have their eyes opened to the true state of things by the revelations as to native ignorance and foreign good sense made by the returns of the recent election.

The "ALIEN" AND THE FLAG'S HONOR.

To a correspondent who seems to share Speaker REED's singular notion that Bryanism and repudiation found their strongest support among American citizens of foreign birth, or, as the Speaker states it, "that we have tried to assimilate those from abroad too rapidly, and that, in offering them so generous an asylum against oppression, we have run some risk of oppression by alien ideas ourselves," we have only this to say:

The proportion of foreign-born to native population in the whole country is about 15 to 85; exactly, the percentages by the last census are 14.77 and 85.23.

This answers in the negative those who maintain that the communities wherein the old American stock has been least affected by immigration were the safeguard of the cause of honesty; while the communities with a large infusion of "alien" population and "alien ideas" were the centers of danger.

[Westliche Post (Rep.), St. Louis, Mo., December 19, 1896.]

The worst kind of a Christmas present for the adopted citizen would be an illiberal immigration law.

While the Anglo-American press has thus dissuaded Congress from passing any more stringent measures than passed by the House last summer, the German newspapers of the country, especially the Republican papers, now claim immunity from such legislation as a well-earned right, and threaten to make their future support of Republican principles depend upon our action on this matter. Am I right, then, in asking my colleagues to go slow, be fair, and act conservatively on this question? In view of their loyalty, again so nobly demonstrated, our adopted citizens justly expected a moderation of even the House bill; instead of that, it is now proposed to make its provisions more stringent and more sweeping. This means that we announce to the country and more sweeping. This means that we announce to the country and say to these people that for their loyalty they shall be not rewarded, but punished.

It may be urged that even with some of the amendments adopted by the Senate to which I and several other members of the committee are opposed, the bill will not affect German and Scandinavian immigration. This may be physically true, Mr. Speaker; but I desire to say to the House that I do not stand here in defense of the Germans. They need no defense at my hands. I am an American Representative of an American constituency. I am an American Representative of an American constituency. I am for America against Spain, against the German Empire, against the world. I am for America, right or wrong, always for America. [Applause.] This is not a question of European nationality, it is a question of American principle and American interests. The fact that Germans and Scandinavians are not materially affected by this bill, and yet oppose it, is a proof that their opposition is inspired not by self-interest, but by principle, and therefore deserves more consideration at our hands.

Now, what are these amendments? In the first place, the House bill exempted all females from the educational test. The Senate bill subjects to it every Irish and German and Swedish servant girl. The first result will be a large decrease in the immigration of female domestics, and a later consequence will be that we shall have a famine of domestic servants in this country, there being have a famine of domestic servants in this country, there being from seven to ten applications for each new arrival. I for one can not see why the educational test should be applied to a servant girl coming into this country, while on the other hand I do know that there is a great lack of domestic servants in all the large cities, for the reason that our American girls prefer to go into factories and workshops and stores rather than into the kitchen. We are absolutely dependent upon the supply of domestic servants coming from abroad, and therefore I think the House bill was wise in exempting female immigrants from the educational test.

Another Senate amendment provides that-

Another Senate amendment provides that—
All persons over 16 years of age who can not read and write the language of their native country or some other language shall be excluded, except that the wife or parent or child of an admissible immigrant, not so able to read and write, may accompany or be sent for by such immigrant.

Now, what does that mean? We know what an admissible immigrant is, but do we not wish to give the same right accorded to an admissible immigrant to a resident immigrant or to a citizen of this country? This amendment says nothing about such cases so that in many instances a citizen of this country who cases, so that in many instances a citizen of this country who desires to bring overhis relatives from abroad will be unable to do so because, if they are unable to read and write, they will not be allowed to land here.

Mr. Speaker, does not this alone show that the bill is imperfect? Does it not show that it requires amendment? I claim, further, that we do not know what the effect of such a provision as this will be. The House bill as passed was a complete and perfect measure. We were absolutely certain as to the effect of each one of its features and lines, but here is an amendment the effect of which even those who are thoroughly conversant with the subject are unable to predict.

My idea is that this amendment ought to be referred to the Bureau of Immigration, with a request for a report upon its probable effect. This matter can not be settled in conference, my able effect. friends. There is no time in conference to settle such questions. Provisions of this kind are not like those merely providing for an expenditure of money. They cut deeply into the most delicate relations of family, of society, and of life, and therefore I think we should act very conservatively in considering such legislation.

Another amendment provides the test that is to be applied and says that every immigrant shall be required to read and write five says that every immigrant shall be required to read and write hie lines of the Constitution of the United States. Just think of an Irish or a German servant girl standing upon Ellis Island and reading and writing the Constitution of the United States! In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, this ought to be left to the executive officers of the Government to regulate, and should not be included in this bill. Everyone knows that the Constitution contains words that that even we do not fully understand. Take a foreigner, an immigrant-how can he be expected to read and write those difficult words which perhaps he has never seen in his life before? If anything else were taken as the test—the Bible, a good novel, any standard work—there would be less objection to it, but the Constitution is the most difficult document for an immigrant to read and write and understand. Again, Mr. Speaker, imagine an immigrant reading these lines contained in the Declaration of Independence:

He has prevented the population of these States and has failed to encourage neasures for the immigration of foreigners.

Imagine, I say, a foreigner reading these lines. What must he think? Will he not be forced to the conclusion that we, in this think? Will he not be forced to the conclusion that we, in this day, are deviating from the ideas that inspired the fathers and that inspired their Declaration of Independence? Almost anything else would be better than such a test as this bill proposes. Another amendment of the Senate provides that Cuban refugees shall be exempted from the provisions of the law. In other words, an ignorant negro can come from Cuba to our shores and, upon the plea that he is a refugee, he will be admitted, and thereby raised to a higher level than the sturdy laboring man coming from Ireland, or the honest immigrant from Germany.

Mr. Speaker, I protest against such a discrimination. These matters can not be patched up in conference, and this is the reason, Mr. Speaker, that I move a recommittal of this bill to the Committee on Immigration. Since the Senate has requested this conference, the bill will retain its privileged character, and consequently can come up at any time. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, there is no danger that a satisfactory bill will not be passed. The committee, after considering this measure, can report it back to committee, after considering this measure, can report it back to committee, after considering this measure, can report it back to the House, and the House can pass it within three weeks—soon after our reassembling in January.

Just one remark more I desire to make. By referring this matter to the conference we put the responsibility upon the shoulders of our honored Speaker, who must appoint the conference committee. This is a very ticklish question—a very knotty problem. I would rather see the House assume the responsibility of this matter. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I have made my motion. I reserve the remainder of my time for the purpose of answering any questions which may be put.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I want the House to understand thoroughly the exact status of this proposition. The bill which passed the House with amendments went over to the Senate and was there amended in several particulars. It comes back from the Senate very much changed, with a request upon the back from the Senate very much changed, with a request upon the part of the Senate that a committee of conference shall be appointed by the House, the Senate having appointed its conferees. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] is to refer this bill to the House Committee on Immigration. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Danford], who is also a member of the Committee on Immigration, is to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference.

All discussion on the merits of this bill as it left the Senate or the House is wholly immaterial now, for the reason that any objectionable features in the measure may be changed in the committee of conference. The simple reason why the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Danford] makes the motion to nonconcur at once and consent to the conference is to save time and get the bill before the conference committee immediately, so that we may have some possible hope of passing an immigration bill during this Congress. During the last Congress the House passed an immigration bill. It went over to the Senate, where it was changed as radically as that body has changed the present bill. It was delayed from time to time, with the result that that Congress passed no immigration bill at all.

Now, both political parties have declared for further restriction Now, both political parties have declared for further restriction of immigration, and have declared that the test should be what is known as the educational or intelligence test. This is not a political measure at all. It is neither Republican nor Democratic. It is a measure aimed wholly at the general good of the whole country. Both parties have declared in favor of such a measure. What I want is that an immigration bill shall be passed during this Contract. If this bill contract the Invariant test of the state of the gress. If this bill goes to the Immigration Committee of the House, and the Commissioner-General of Immigration is sent for to give his views on the subject, it may be necessary for that gentleman to take another trip to Europe before he can submit his views. We reconvene here on the 5th day of January. There will then be left only two months for the work of this Congress, and during that time there will come up many measures of great moment. In my judgment, it will be the death knell of any immigration bill at this Congress to refer it to the House com-

I do not question the good intentions of the House committee. I do not question the good intentions of the chairman of that committee. Nor have I any idea that the committee would purposely delay the measure. But according to the gentleman's own statement we shall gain three weeks by at once referring the bill to a conference committee.

Now, what is the purpose in referring it to the House Committee on Immigration? Under the rules, the Speaker will in all probability pursue the same course in the appointment of the conference committee on this matter that he usually pursues in reference to all these matters. He will appoint two members of the majority side of the House, and one of the minority side. The Senate has already appointed its conferees—Senators Looge, CHANDLER, and FAULKNER. These six conferees can get together to-morrow, if they will, and do the work they have to do. They can reconcile the objections to the bill as amended by the Senate, if there are any, and can bring us a bill which we can pass. And when we have done that, we have done what both the great political parties have promised the people of this country to do.

I am not here making objections to the amendments of the Senate; nor am I here advocating them. They are not at all in issue at this time. Ably as the gentleman from Missouri has discussed them, their merits and demerits are wholly irrelevant to the present question. The simple question is whether we shall pursue the most direct road to the result which we all profess to want, or whether we shall open up the possibility of not taking any action on this subject and not passing any bill at all during this Congress. For these reasons, I most earnestly hope that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri (although he is chairman of this committee) may be voted down, and that the motion of the this committee) may be voted down, and that the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Danford], who is next in rank on the committee to the chairman, may be adopted, so that the bill shall be sent at once to a conference committee.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir.
Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Will the gentleman inform the House whether the sections in the original bill are substantially the same as the existing law relative to immigration?
Mr. WILIAM A. STONE. No, sir; they are not.
Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Then these sections are to be abandoned by this amendment of the Senate, are they?
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There are no sections in the original law which fix an educational test.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. No, sir; but in sections 2, 3, and 4 of the bill which passed the House there are certain provisions—
Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is the gentleman referring to the House

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Yes, sir.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman is speaking of the bill as it originally passed the House?
Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Yes, sir.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I supposed he was referring to

Mr. WILSIAM A. STONE. I supposed he was referring to the existing law.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. The sections to which I have just referred contain several provisions other than those with regard to the educational test. Are those to be abandoned and the educational test alone substituted for the House bill?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That I can not say.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. If the Senate amendment is adopted, is not that the effect?

not that the effect?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, that is the effect. It strips the bill, as I understand it—and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] can correct me if I misstate the matter—it will strip the bill, as I understand it, of all its restrictive features save and except the educational test.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me a moment, I do not find this bill in print, but I take the copy of the bill as I find it on the Speaker's table, and I desire to ask him a question with reference to it.

I notice the House bill has this language:

That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, in amendment of the immigration and contract-labor acts, be, and hereby is, amended by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following: All male persons between 16 and 60 years of age who can not both read and write the English language or some other language. But no parent of a person now living in, or hereafter admitted to, this country shall be excluded because of his inability to read and write.

The Senate provision strikes that out and provides that-

All persons over 16 years of age who can not read and write the language of their native country, or some other language, shall be excluded; but an admissible immigrant over 16 years may bring in with him or send for his wife or parent or grandparent or minor child or grandchild, notwithstanding the inability of such relative to read and write as aforesaid.

Now, as I understand the Senate amendment, a foreigner might have been naturalized here, and yet he can not send for his parent, or grandparent, or wife, or minor child, provided such person so sent for is unable to comply with that provision of the law.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Under the Senate amendment, that is

Mr. CANNON. If that is correct, I am clearly against this prop sition; and I think the House bill in that respect is decidedly preferable.

But, Mr. Speaker, if legislation be desirable on the subject at all, I can not see any objection to sending it to a committee of conference. Because it is quite competent for the House, in that event, first to instruct the House conferees. It is also quite competent for the House to vote down or refuse to adopt the report of the conference committee, and thereby defeat legislation. is quite competent for the conferees to report back a disagree-enough, it seems to me, that this should go to a conference committee

I make these remarks for the reason that I can not believe that the House conferees will assent to the Senate amendment; at least without very serious modification.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. They will not, I am satisfied. The House conferees can not agree to it.

I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAN-Forp].

Mr. DANFORD. Mr. Speaker, the proposition to send this question back to the House Committee on Immigration simply means that we are to have no legislation by this Congress on the subject.

Already the Committee on Rules have provided business for at least two weeks after the recess. The appropriation bills have the right of way in the House at all times, and unless this bill is sent to a vote by the nearest road—that is, sent to a committee of conference, where these questions at issue can be fairly discussed and dealt with, and where the differences between the House and Senate can be adjusted—in my opinion there is no hope for legislation dealt with, and where the differences between the House and Senate can be adjusted—in my opinion there is no hope for legislation by the Congress upon the question at all.

The House committee spent nearly three months on this subject, investigating the immigration question and maturing a bill. The bill was satisfactory to the committee; they so reported to the House—I believe unanimously—and has been amended, and amended materially, in the Senate. It seems to me that the usual way, and the proper way, to settle the differences between the two Houses is by a conference. The Senate bill passed that body with but 10 dissenting votes. The House bill passed the House by a very large majority. It seems to me that this bill ought to go to a conference committee, and that we ought to reach something in the way of legislation in this Congress on the subject, and not defer the way of legislation in this Congress on the subject, and not defer it to another Congress and a future time.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I yield now to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCall].

Mr. McCall of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for the House to consider for a minute the situation of this measure. In the first place, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] moves to have this whole matter recommitted to the Committee on Immigration. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Danford] then moved that we nonconcur in the Senate amendment and assent to the Senate request for a conference on the disagreeing votes on the bill.

It is entirely immaterial to consider whether we will agree with the Senate amendments or not. If the House shall vote to non-concur in the amendments for the time being and agree to the conference, it has precisely the same effect as if the bill were referred to the Committee on Immigration and the committee should report to the House the recommendation to nonconcur in the amendments. The great advantage of having this bill go immediately to conference and having it decided over referring it to the Committee on Immigration is most apparent. The reports of the Committee on Immigration are not privileged. If we refer this matter to that committee, and that committee, after one week or three weeks, or immediately, report it back to the House, their report has no privilege whatever.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him

Mr. BARTHOLDT.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I desire, for the information of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] and the House, to read the rule which has reference to this matter:

When a bill comes back with Senate amendments requiring consideration in Committee of the Whole, the bill and amendments thereupon are referred to the committee having jurisdiction of the subject. If the Senate accompany their amendments with a request for a conference, this endows the bill with privilege in all its subsequent stages.

Consequently, if you refer this bill to the Committee on Immigration, it retains its privileged character, according to this rule, in my judgment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he ought to say that he has had that rule under consideration subsequently, and is not satisfied with its soundness. The matter having been mentioned he feels obliged to say so, such being the fact. That is the way the matter stands.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I desire to call attention to the fact that Mr. BARTHOLDT. I desire to call attention to the fact that that ruling was made in the Fifty-first Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is quite well aware of that. That is another misfortune connected with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the statement of the Chair disposes of the position of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt]. If this matter is referred to the Committee on Immigration, it certainly is problematical whether it retains any privilege; and this thing is certain, that if ment and take the sense of the House upon the question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. So that, if legislation be desired at all, it is well this House votes to nonconcur and assents to the request of the Senate for a conference, and conferees are appointed on the part of the House by the Speaker, then the report of that conference committee is privileged, and whenever they bring the report before the House the House can immediately act upon it.

So the situation is clear. If this matter is referred to the Comso the stuation is clear. If this matter is referred to the Committee on Immigration, we can not have from that committee, even from the standpoint of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt], anything else than a recommendation to nonconcur. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Danford] proposes that at this very moment the House nonconcur, that we take the short cut to solve the matter, and dispense with a superfluous reference, by having a committee of conference appointed, and then the report, when it shall be made, will be privileged.

So that, if there is any member who is a friend of the House bill, who believes in legislation and is opposed to the Senate amendments—as the gentleman from Missouri appears to be—the only way that he can accomplish his desire effectually is to vote for the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this matter has been voted upon by both Houses of Congress. One House voted before the election and another since the election, and an overwhelming majority of both bodies was in favor of some measure restricting immigration. would say, sir, that there is no division between the two great parties on this question. The Republican national convention and the Democratic national convention united in demanding some measure of restriction, and if we desire to have restriction we should vote down first the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt], to shelve the whole thing and practically de-IMT. BARTHOLDT], to shelve the whole thing and practically destroy it by referring it to a nonprivileged committee, and then we should vote for the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Danford], which sends it immediately to conference, out of which legislation will spring.

We can rely upon it that our House conferees will insist upon any position of the House which is the wiser position. I have no doubt that they will represent the rights of the House fully, but after they have done that, after the committees of the two Houses have agreed upon a measure, then we can vote upon that measure immediately, and it can go to the President.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty-one minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Immigration, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt]. While they are in gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt]. While they are in thorough consonance with his record during the first session of this Congress, being in favor of very liberal rules and laws for the admission of immigrants, I have listened in vain to hear from him some good reason why his motion should prevail.

The matter presented to us is of a very simple nature. The Senate has seen fit to amend the bill as it left this House, and in doing the left out come of our provisions and invergenced at hear ate has seen it to amend the bill as it left this house, and in doing so has left out some of our provisions and incorporated others. The only way by which the two Houses can ever come to an agreement is through a committee of conference. The rules so prescribe. Now, the only possible effect that the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] can have will be that the question will be referred to the Committee on Immigration to determine whether or not the House shall agree to the Senate amendments or disagree and agree to the request for a committee of conference.

a committee of conference.

Now, is there any necessity for the House, which is capable of deciding the matter now, to submit to that committee the decision of that simple question, whether or not we will agree or disagree to the Senate amendments. Why, my friend from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] who is making this motion never would consent to the Senate amendments as they came here, and in committee he surely would not vote for the adoption of a report recommending surely would not vote for the adoption of a report recommending that this House accept the Senate amendments. Therefore he would be compelled to report to this House, so far as his vote could do so, that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the committee of conference.

That being the case, why then resist the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, in order that we may now do what he admits we would than have to do to wit disagree to the Senate amendments.

man from Ohio, in order that we may now do what he admits we would then have to do, to wit, disagree to the Senate amendments and insist on the House bill. Now, when the matter gets before that conference committee it will be thoroughly in the hands and in the power of that committee to accept so much of the Senate amendments as shall be acceptable to it and to insist on so much of the House bill as it should wish. Nothing else but the conference committee can ever determine the issue, and the one sole issue As to the imperative necessity of legislation on immigration, here. As to the imperative necessity of legislation on immigration, that was decided in this House by an overwhelming vote, as I recollect only twenty-six antagonizing it by their votes. It has been declared to be the policy of both great parties in this country, and I believe also the third party, that undesirable immigration should be kept beyond the borders of this country, and that an educational test should be the test applied.

Now, I do not like the tendency of the remarks of the gentle-man to draw the political line here. It is not a matter for the application of the party lash. All parties are agreed upon it.

There is no difference between them. Here is an opportunity presented for making a post-election performance agree with a pre-election promise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the difference between the two bills is simply this: In the House bill the excluded class, the undesirable lass, added to the undesirable classes already existing under our law, is that of male immigrants from 16 years of age who can not read or write their own language or the language of this country. read or write their own language or the language of this country. The Senate amendment, so far as males are concerned, makes it apply to all males, even those above 65 years of age. As to females, the House allowed all females to come in. The Senate amendment allows only those females who are the wives or minor children of the males who shall come in. The House allowed only the parents of admissible immigrants who were incapable of reading or writing. The Senate bill allows grandparents as well. So you see there are some differences as to classes, and some differences as to age. The House bill also had the Corling amendment, which applied to immigrants coming in from Canada along. ment, which applied to immigrants coming in from Canada along the Canadian border. The Senate bill makes no reference to that. The Senate amendment allows Cuban refugees during the currency of the pending disorder there to come into this country. The House said nothing about that. Now, it will be fully in the power of the conference committee to reconcile these differences of the two Houses and to report to the House a bill which they can adopt, and which will be the law of this land and will meet the demands of the people.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the people of this country are in earnest about this matter. They do not intend to be trifled with. They have the promise of two of the political parties of this country to rely upon, and I believe they will have the action of this Congress

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then I will yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. Johnson] three minutes, or five minutes. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I only wish to say this. I think the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Wilson] has covered the ground; and I am ready to vote. I think we are all ready to vote in favor of your motion. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FOOTE]. Do you wish to occupy any time?

Mr. FOOTE. I see the House is ready to vote, and I am ready to vote.

to vote

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Very well.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to unnecessarily occupy the time of the House except to say that it is unfortunate that those members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization who have requested me to make this motion are not now present in the House, having left for their homes; so that, so far as the committee is concerned, I am the only one to defend my position. That I made the motion in good faith I trust the House will concede. I do not desire to endanger the bill, but the subject-matter is of so vast importance and, as I bill, but the subject-matter is of so vast importance and, as I stated before, these Senate amendments cut so deeply into the most delicate relations of family, of society, and of life, that I thought I was justified in making the motion to recommit this bill to the House committee for the purpose of getting some new light, some additional information upon the amendments added to it by the Senate, which, Mr. Speaker, are being opposed, very bitterly opposed, by all the German newspapers of the country, and opposed by many reputable American journals. I ask the House to go slow, and in doing so we will do justice to people whose sentiments might easily be offended by a different course.

Mr. Speaker, there seems to be an impression among some of our friends who have spoken here that the bill, if it is recommitted.

friends who have spoken here that the bill, if it is recommitted, will be buried. Why, sir, it can be brought back from the comwill be buried. Why, sir, it can be brought back from the committee at any time by special rule, and I stated at the outset of my remarks, and I repeat it here and now, that immediately after the reassembling of the House I shall call the committee together, and probably on the very first day of our meeting we can modify the bill satisfactorily and report it back to the House, and it can then be taken up by a special rule and disposed of in such a way as we desire to dispose of it.

Mr. Speaker, in urging my motion I am actuated by an undefinable fear that this bill will ultimately pass in a form that will not be acceptable to many people who I know are deeply interested in the subject. The character of the conferees on the part of the Senate is already known. The personality of the House conferees is not yet known, but I fear that if I do not insist on the motion to refer the bill back, it will be finally passed in such shape that I shall be unable to defend it, and our party will probably suffer by it. That is all I have to say.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS].

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to call the attention of the House to the fact that if this bill is sent back to the comittee of the committee of the state of the committee of the state mittee, it will lose its present position and privilege, and even if mittee, it will lose its present position and privilege, and even if the committee wanted to bring it up for consideration here, the chances are very much against it in this short session, with a very large amount of other important legislation pending. The vote to-day, therefore, is practically a vote on the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, every man knows that the vast majority of the people of the United States demand further restriction of immigration. We are their representatives, and if we do not do something in that line, we fail in our duty as such representatives. For my own State of California. I can say that nine out of ten of all the people are in favor of further restriction of immigration. in the people are in favor of further restriction of immigration, in favor of a far more stringent bill than this, and if this bill fails to remind gentlemen upon this side of the House that this is not a new question, that it has been discussed for years, and you know, gentlemen, that the people demand some legislation of this kind at your hands and will hold you responsible if you do not accord it

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote to send this bill to a committee of conference, for the reason that I want an early opportunity to vote in favor of a bill of this kind. I think that the House bill is a good measure, and there are some things in the amendments of the Senate that are good. I can say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] that I think he need not be apprehensive of any radical action on the part of this House with reference to this bill. He need not fear but that both he and his countrymen have the profoundest respect of the American Congress and of the American people, as do all who come here from other nations and demean themselves as the great bulk of that people do. Daniel Webster once said, in that memorable speech of his on the "American Union:"

This Union we reached by the discipline of our virtues in the severe school of adversity, and although our territory has stretched out wider and wider and our population spread farther and farther, yet they have not outrun its protection or its benefits. It has been to us all a copious fountain of national, personal, and social happiness.

Mr. Speaker, these were grand words, breathing a magnificent sentiment. We indorse that sentiment to-day; but the words themselves indicated that there was a line beyond which the nation might go and incur peril. The great influx of immigration, the conflict of diverse conditions, have seemed to throw a shadow over this country during the last ten or twenty years, and now we call upon such citizens as the gentleman from Missouri and those from his own honored fatherland who have influence in the American community—we call upon them to join us in sustaining the dignity and the purity of the temple which our fathers built. We call upon them to join with us in guarding it against uncircumcised hands, so that it may be preserved through generations to come for such as may see fit to immigrate here from other lands and help to sustain and promote the highest and grandest and supurbest form of human civilization that the world has ever

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FOOTE].

Mr. FOOTE. And then I shall ask to be recognized—
Mr. RAY. While the gentleman is on his feet, let me ask him a question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. RAY. Supposing this matter is referred to a committee of conference, when the conference report comes in, it will be open to debate, will it not?
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. RAY. And even if the conferees agree upon a report which the House does not like, it will be perfectly competent for the House to set it aside.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Oh, certainly. Sending it to a conference will simply give us an opportunity to settle the ques-

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of sending this bill to a conference, for the reason that it does not go far enough. Our people have asked for bread and this gives them a stone. Our people are asking for protection at our hands. My people are asking it. And I feel that I can not vote for a bill in so incomplete a form as this now is.

We should pass such a bill—and I believe the people of this country demand its passage—that our American workmen should have protection from the competition of immigrant labor first; and then, if there is anything left over—if we need development in this country, if our lands need population, after our American citizens have been satisfied and taken care of—pass such a bill that immigrants can come he e if they show proper qualifications. But so long as one of our citizens looks for work in vain-so long as his place is filled by a foreigner, just so long our citizen work-men have a right to say that they are misgoverned and that our Republican party have a pledge unfulfilled. I am in favor of sending this bill to the conference committee and getting from them a protective immigration bill that will protect our workmen to the fullest extent.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I now demand the previous question, unless the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bar-

THOLDT] will do so.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If there is nobody else desiring to be heard,

I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Bartholdt to refer the bill and amendments to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Danford] to nonconcur in the amendment of the Senate and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.
On motion of Mr. DANFORD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONFEREES ON IMMIGRATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following conferees on the part of the House on the bill H. R. 7864, the immigration bill: Mr. Bartholdt, Mr. Danford, and Mr. Wilson of South Carolina.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HEPBURN in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. m the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9643) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. BINGHAM rose.

Mr. QUIGG. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] whether he will not yield to me a moment while I give notice of an amendment that I shall offer at the conclusion of the general debata in order to perfect the substitute. I should like to general debate in order to perfect the substitute. I should like to have the amendment read now by the Clerk.

The gentleman proposes simply to give notice Mr. BINGHAM.

of the amendment?

Mr. QUIGG. Yes, sir. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly, for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed amendment will be read for the information of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. QUIGG. The object of the amendment will be apparent

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the organization of the force to be employed in the new Library building having been completed under the provisions of this act, removals shall thereafter occur only for cause and after full inquiry.

Mr. BINGHAM. That the gentleman desires to offer as an amendment to his substitute?

Mr. QUIGG. Yes, sir. I think, Mr. Chairman, I would have the right to incorporate that in the substitute at any rate. I want the amendment to go in that paragraph of the substitute which deals with appointments and removals, after the words "Library deals with appointments and the constant of Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask now that this be considered a part of his substitute?

Mr. QUIGG. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman offers his amendment, as I understand, simply for the information of the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment heretofore offered by him so as to include what has just been read.

Mr. QUIGG. I ask unanimous consent to make that modification.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUMM. I object.
Mr. BRUMM. I object.
Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, in my remarks on this proposed legislation I shall detain the House, I trust, but a very limited time. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg] who has offered the substitute, which has doubtless been read and fully understood by members of the House, has had fair and reasonable time for debate.

In reference to the Library of Congress—the possibility of its great usefulness in the future; its limited usefulness in the past, by reason of circumscribed quarters—it is unnecessary forme to either describe or enter upon any details. The House knows that by statutory provision in the future it can make the Library of Congress the great research as well as the great reference library of this country. The gentleman from New York has told us that the Library comprises 740,000 volumes. In addition to that it is well to submit that its field of usefulness is far greater than would be indicated by the sum total of its volumes. That Library embraces 40,000 maps, some of them not to be duplicated and most valuable and rare; 250,000 musical compositions; 200,000 speciments of graphic art including line angravings magneting whether mens of graphic art, including line engravings, mezzotints, photographs, photograves, and every line of artistic work usually covered by the term "graphic art." With this vast aggregation of volumes, numbering hundreds of thousands, it is the fifth great library of the world, and is the substantial growth, as such, of the years since 1851.

Prior to 1813, when the Library was burned by the British with the Capitol in this city, it contained but 3,000 volumes. Again, in 1851, it was demolished by fire, and but 20,000 volumes remained of the whole collection after that disaster. In 1870 the copyright law was established, and the copyright law, Mr. Chairman, has law was established, and the copyright law, Mr. Chairman, has been the basis of the accretions and additions to that Library. Copyright law has also been the basis of the several great libraries of the world. It has been specially beneficial to our own Library. The volumes added have averaged from about sixty thousand to seventy thousand dollars in value each year. That is how our Library has grown to its present magnitude—fifth among the great libraries of the world. Save and except the allowance of a few thousand dollars annually for the purchase of rare and valuable books from abroad, the additions to the Library have mainly come from the copyright law, added to such donations as have from time to time been made.

Here in this connection I desire to pay briefly a tribute to the present Librarian, Mr. Spofford. It was through his force, persistency, and comprehensive knowledge of the conduct of the libraries of the world and the operation of the copyright law abroad that Congress in 1870 adopted the law which has virtually, in effect, built up our Library to its present enormous proportions and gives to that establishment two volumes of every American publication that comes under the limitations and privileges of the copyright law.

Without going into the question of the usefulness of the Library, which is wholly under control of Congress, and without stating that its usefulness to-day, under the statutes, is most limited, I propose to proceed to explain the bill as reported by the Committee of the co on Appropriations prior to entering upon a general discussion of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quiga]. The first paragraph provided in the bill is for a Librarian at $6,000 per annum. In that appropriation we follow the word-ing of the law from 1870, when the copyright law was added to the duties of the Librarian, and his compensation was then fixed at $4,000.

The wording in this bill is the wording of legislation since 1870, with this exception, that we increase compensation of the Librarian $2,000. This increase is justified, first, as a recognition by Congress of the great responsibility, great obligations, and the larger duties that will devolve upon him in the new building where the Library will be transferred during the next three months; and secondly, because of the increased bonded obligation which we have required. We believe that under these circumstances the we have required. We believe that under these circumstances the Librarian is justly entitled, as an official with great labor and trained experience, to a larger compensation than heretofore received. We increase that compensation under what we call the existing law. We do not change the title or name of Librarian. We do not infringe upon his duties, but as we increase his force and as we increase the compensation of certain subordinates in the details of work in the new Library building, impossible to be the details of work in the new Library building, impossible to be done in the old one, we have felt it proper to increase his compensation, because increased work will be demanded of him in the new quarters. We in no wise in the paragraph change existing law. Existing law, made in 1802, declares that the Librarian shall be appointed solely by the President for the Library of Congress. That law remains unchanged, and President Cleveland to-day can have a constant of the president clevel and to-day can be appointed to the president clevel and to-day can be appointed to the president clevel and to-day can be appointed to the president clevel and to-day can be appointed to the president clevel and to-day can be appointed to the president clevel and to-day can be appointed to the president clevel and to-day can be appointed to the president clevel and to-day can be appointed to the president clevel and to-day can be appointed to the president clevel and to-day can be appointed to the president clevel and the president cle

That law remains unchanged, and President Cleveland to-day can by a mere stroke of his pen change or remove the Librarian of Congress for any cause or reason good to himself, or for a more efficient administration of the Library.

The Librarians of Congress up to the present time have occupied virtually a life position, or so long as fitness and usefulness continued. We make no change whatever, either as to the President's power of appointment solely or in the manner suggested by the substitute of the gentleman from New York, by and with the confirmation of the Senate.

The Librarian holding virtually a life position, to emphasize my

The Librarian holding virtually a life position, to emphasize my statement let me invite the attention of the committee to the fact that under the act of 1802 the Clerk of the House for the time being was appointed to act as Librarian of Congress. Gentlemen will understand that the Librarian then had comparatively few duties to perform, as the volumes embraced in the Library amounted to only a few thousand volumes—not exceeding 3,000

From 1802 to 1807 John Beckley was Clerk of the House and acted in that capacity. From 1807 to 1814 Patrick Magruder was Clerk of the House and was named to take charge of the Library under the then law. The first commissioned Librarian—commissioned by President Madison—was George Watterston, appointed in 1815 and served until 1829. He was removed, having been the editor of a paper in antegorism to Jackson, consuring Jackson, criticism. of a paper in antagonism to Jackson, censuring Jackson, criticising his family relations, and was removed largely, perhaps, on personal grounds or because personally offensive. He had been in office from 1815 to 1829. John F. Meehan was appointed by Jackson, and remained in office from 1829 to 1861. President Lincoln appointed Mr. John G. Stephenson, who served from 1861 to 1864, when Mr. Stephenson resigned, being ambitious for other honors and distinctions under the Administration. The present Librarian, Mr. Spofford, entered the Library in 1861 as assistant librarian. His appointment as Librarian was made by Mr. Lincoln in 1864, and he is to-day in possession of the office.

Your committee's bill changes no law. We leave it as it has been executed since 1815, the only change being an increase of the compensation of the Librarian of Congress, $2,000. The question as to the individual who is to receive that increased compensation will not be settled, under the provisions of the bill, until the 1st day of July, 1897.

Ist day of July, 1897.

The first change in connection with existing law is in recognition of the increased force that will be necessarily employed under the provisions of the House Appropriations Committee bill now before us. Up to this date there have been but 43 in the subordinate force employed in the Library. Up to 1893 there were only 30 subordinate employees, all of whom, however, had been appointed by the Librarian. We make this proposed increase in view of the necessity of a larger force for the conduct of the work in the new Library building, qualified by the following words:

To be selected by the Librarian of Congress by reason of special aptitude for the work of the Library, including the copyright work and the custody and care of the new Library building, and only under such rules as the Librarian of Congress may prescribe.

Following these words we give the detailed force. I need not emphasize the statement of the wisdom of the incorporation of what might technically be called new legislation—but which is new legislation only in the line of good government, and remains in this bill fairly to be considered, the point of order having been overruled-as part and parcel of the paragraph, to be voted upon by this committee.

I again emphasize that every appointment from 1815 up to to-day has been made by the Librarian, and has been largely and almost wholly made under specific acts of Congress directing the Librarian to make the appointments, his subordinates being increased from time to time.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman point me to any law of that kind?

Mr. BINGHAM. It was my purpose to refer to that subject when I reached it in the subsequent paragraphs of the bill.

Mr. QUIGG. Well, I do not want to interfere with the gentle-

Mr. BINGHAM. I will submit that I have simply searched from 1867 up to and including the first session of this Congress. I have a number of statutes wherein specific authority is given to the Librarian to employ a subordinate force; but I will advert to this when I come to the gentleman's paragraph as to the power of removal and appointment.

Mr. Chairman, under the paragraph relating to the detailed force for the Library, there is an appropriation in all of $93,030. We have taken the recommendation of Mr. Spofford, which is a part of the Book of Estimates submitted by the Treasury Department for the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations and the House, which is also, with some nine additional force, the recommendation of the Committee on the Library, whom we heard before the Subcommittee on Appropriations.

In other words, in the sum total of the force, in its subordinate divisions, and in its numbers, there is no contention between the recommendation of the Committee on the Library to the Appropriations Committee and the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to this House, as included in this bill, with the one qualification that we require the Librarian of Congress to make certain rules and regulations for the appointment of his subordinate force.

The gentleman in charge of the substitute [Mr. Quigg] doubtless received the same information as to the necessity for this subordinate force of the Library, and received it from Mr. Spofford, as we did. It only increases the force, as recommended by Mr. Spofford to the committee, by nine. We accepted the gentleman's recommendation because that additional force of nine goes to the cataloguing of the Library, and he stated in his testimony that he thought with this increase of nine, specially detailed to make a catalogue of the Library, it could be done in about three years. We give the nine additional men recommended as a part of the necessary force for the conduct of the Library; and we go as far as we think wise by appropriating for the first year. Therefore, as to the first paragraph of the bill, with reference to the subor-dinate force, there is no contention, save that which would allow dinate force, there is no contention, save that which would allow the Committee on the Library to appoint and remove.

Mr. RAY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he has made provision here for cataloguing the Library?

Mr. BINGHAM. All that has been asked for by the Librarian and all that has been asked for by the Committee on the Library.

Mr. RAY. Does that include the law library?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is the entire Library of Congress, and the Library of Congress is divided into two parts—the library proper and the law library.

and the law library.

Mr. QUIGG. I will say to my colleague from New York Mr.

Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. BINGHAM] yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. For an inquiry, of course.

Mr. QUIGG. I want to make a statement in answer to my colleague from New York [Mr. RAY] that it is believed that the force of cataloguers carried in this bill can, in the course of three ears, make a fair catalogue of the Library, including the law ibrary, but not a subject catalogue.

Mr. BINGHAM. I was going to refer to that matter.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, of course I do not want to interfere with the gentleman.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is no interference.

Mr. RAY. But my attention has been called for so many years to the want of a good catalogue of this Congressional Library, and especially the law library, that I do hope that in some way, at this time, the committee will set on foot measures to properly catalogue this Library, so that we may know what there is in it, so that the officers of this Library may know what books they have, and so that we can obtain them when we desire them for use.

Mr. BINGHAM. I submit to the gentleman we have given every subordinate in connection with that work asked for by Mr. Spofford and an addition of nine, as requested by the Committee on the Library.

Permit me to state in that connection, as something was said in connection with the card catalogue now used by the Library—the only means of knowing the contents of the Library—that there are 740,000 cards. Mr. Spofford recognizes, as I think all do, that the most modern convenience, so far as the handling of a library is concerned is by what is called a "card catalogue." There are is concerned, is by what is called a "card catalogue." There are 740,000 of these cards in connection with our Library. Mr. Spofford as to whether there was any possibility of loss of cards, and he said he thought not, that it would be very great exception if there was a loss, as whenever a card is taken out a colored slip of paper is inserted in its place to indicate that that volume and that card were out. While 740,000 might seem a large number, they are absolutely under the control and care of the Librarian, and therefore not open to loss. To exhibit to you fully the extent to which cards are used in great libraries and records for reference, I telegraphed this morning to Colonel Ainsworth, who has charge, as gentlemen know, of all that portion of the records which contain the muster rolls in connection with the Record and Pension Office, as to the number of cards he had in his "card catalogue," as it may be called. He telegraphed:

Index record cards made by this office from muster rolls, hospital registers, and other records number 45,821,500 on December 19, 1896.

This shows you how valuable is a card catalogue.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman understands, of course, in that case there is an original record given, but in the Library there exists nothing except this card catalogue. There is no original. We have no record of books as they come into the Library, and there is no shelf list which would give any indication of what is taken from the Library.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not discussing that point, because I am giving the gentleman all he desires in subordinate force. I am simply showing to what extent the card catalogue to which he refers is used.

Mr. QUIGG. Precisely; but the point I make is that under the present government of the Library, there is nothing but this card catalogue to show what the contents of the Library are.

Mr. BINGHAM. You have nothing but the present form, but

Mr. BINGHAM. You have nothing out the present form, but we have given all the force you have asked.

Mr. QUIGG. I am quite satisfied with the appropriation.

Mr. BINGHAM. With reference to the catalogue, we have increased Mr. Spofford's estimate, and given the nine additional that your committee asked.

So much as to the first paragraph of the bill, it being for the appointment of the Librarian and also the work in connection with the Library business. Now to the next paragraph of the bill. The library?

Again your Appropriations Committee bill follows the existing law word for word.

We use the words that have been used, I may say, ever since the copyright law became a part of the duty, under the act, of the Librarian of Congress. We give him the necessary force. There is no disagreement on the part of the Committee on the Library and the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations. We give the same total of dollars and cents. We give the same total of subordinate force that the gentleman gives in his substitute.

In his bill the gentleman has an officer not heretofore called forregister of copyrights. We felt that we had no discretion in that matter, in view of the fact that it is indicated by the law who should have charge of and who should act as copyright register; and we thought that touching upon that proposition we would leave the law about the register's work just as it stands to-day and increase the subordinate force, and let the responsibility rest on the Librarian. Now, here are the words of the statute:

That all records and other things relating to copyrights and required by law to be preserved shall be under the control of the Librarian of Congress and kept and preserved in the Library of Congress, and the Librarian of Congress shall have the immediate care and supervision thereof, and, under the supervision of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Library, shall perform all acts and duties required by law touching copyrights.

The Joint Committee on the Library of Congress have two powers by law—one to make regulations consistent with law, under the law, not contrary to law; and under the copyright law it is provided that, under the supervision of the Joint Committee on the Library, he (the Librarian) shall perform all acts and duties required by law touching copyrights. That has been on the statute book since 1870. We therefore make no change in the law in that respect. We continue it just as it was in the appropriation bill under which we are now working, and for which gentlemen voted at the last session of this Congress, and we increase the force just as the Librarian asks for it. And the gentlemen of the Joint Committee on the Library, governed. The Joint Committee on the Library of Congress have two gentlemen of the Joint Committee on the Library, governed, doubtless, by Mr. Spofford's recommendation, asked for the same doubtless, by Mr. Spofford's recommendation, asked for the same thing, and therefore on that proposition there is no contention between the gentleman's substitute and the bill before us.

The next paragraph is as to the custody, care, and maintenance of the new Library building. Of necessity, Congress must take care of that building. It takes care of all the public buildings by appropriations for "custody, care, and maintenance," which has been the mode of appropriation in all the appropriation bills. The maintenance, care, and custody of the new Library building up to this time has been paid for out of the appropriations made for the construction of that building, and it has never been disputed by the Computabler in the adjustment of the accounts.

the Comptroller in the adjustment of the accounts.

What do we do? We give everything that has been asked for by Mr. Green, who has charge of the building, finishing the construction and completing it for occupation; we give every man and every dollar asked for by Mr. Spofford. The matter has been gone over by the Joint Committee on the Library, and they recommend every subordinate we ask for in our bill, the only difference height the matter has been gone being the subordinate we ask for in our bill, the only difference height the matter has been gone over by the subordinate we ask for in our bill, the only difference height the matter has been gone over by the subordinate we ask for in our bill, the only difference height the subordinate we have the subordinate we h ference being that we have incorporated an increase of one messenger at the request of the Committee on the Library. Therefore, on this part of the bill there is no contention between us; we give all that is asked for. Next comes the purchase of books for the Library, etc. The only difference between the substitute of the gentleman from New York and our bill here is that he proposes an increase from four thousand to eight thousand dollars for the purchase of books. We had that question before us on the day before yesterday, when the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] moved an increase of $25,000, and the committee determined to let it remain as it stood in the bill, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations. That has been the appropriation for several years past, so that in this particular we have made no change.

no change.

"Contingent expenses of the Library, $500." That is what has been given for this purpose heretofore. "Expenses of copyright, $500." The gentleman's bill increases that to a thousand dollars. We thought that what had been heretofore given was ample.

The next paragraph relates to the furniture for the Library reading rooms, etc. For that we give $50,000, and we give $6,000 for the removal of the books from the old building to the new. Upon the examination of Mr. Green, we ascertained—what was simply a corroboration of the statement of General Casey a year ago—that the building would be ready for occupation in February of this year, or certainly by the 1st of March. Mr. Green has stated that the building will be ready for the new Library on the 1st of March. He further states that of the appropriations heretofore made for the new Library building there will be an unexpended balance of between fifty thousand and seventy thousand dollars; that is my recollection.

my recollection.

Mr. RAY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that we are to appropriate $6,000 to carry the books over from this building

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir; that is the best estimate we could

I will take them over for $600. [Laughter.] Mr. BINGHAM. I am afraid the gentleman would have to give a bonus of some of the most valuable books. [Laughter.]

a bonus of some of the most valuable books. [Laughter.]
Mr. RAY. Not at all.
Mr. BINGHAM. Well, I regret, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman did not come before the committee when they were considering that subject, because he might have obtained the contract.
Mr. RAY. I will take it now.
Mr. BINGHAM. On that point, I submit that we availed ourselves of what we considered the best judgment that could be obtained—namely, that of Mr. Spofford—and it was also the opinion of the Joint Committee on the Library that $6,000 would be required. quired

Mr. QUIGG. I beg pardon.
Mr. BINGHAM. Did you not say $8,000?
Mr. QUIGG. No, sir; we made no such statement or recommendation. We did not go into that question.
Mr. BINGHAM. Well, that is the amount we recommend, and if it is not found necessary to use it all the balance will be unexpended. My recollection, however, is that the inquiry was put to the gentleman from New York, and that the Committee on the to the gentleman from New York, and that the Committee on the Library were willing to supervise the work, but said that when they got the power to do it they would simply send for Mr. Spofford or Mr. Green and have the books carted over. Perhaps the gentleman's idea of "carting" over the books was like that of his colleague from New York [Mr. RAY], that it could be done for a few hundred dollars. We recommend an appropriation of $6,000 for that purpose, which will be expended under the supervision of the Librarian, and expended, as all other public money is expended, subject to supervision in settlements by the Comptroller.

Mr. RAY. I suppose that amount includes the cost of selecting the books and carrying them over?

Mr. BINGHAM. It includes all that pertains to the transfer of the books from one building to the other. This money we do not appropriate in our bill, but we make it available from moneys already appropriated for the building.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman allow me a question right

Mr. BINGHAM. With pleasure.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman has indicated to the committee that his bill appropriates a certain sum of money for the removal of the collections and a certain sum of money for furnishing the of the collections and a certain sum of money for turnishing the Library. Now, who, under his bill, is authorized to remove the collection, and who to furnish the Library?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Librarian of Congress, who has always had within his jurisdiction the purchase of all furniture for the present Library, and who has also handled the books, and charged the expense to miscellaneous items. Who better than the Library rian (whoever he may be) can make that selection of furniture and provide for the transfer of the books?

Mr. QUIGG. Why, an engineer, of course.

Mr. BINGHAM. An engineer would not know anything

Mr. QUIGG. There is a very large and serious problem of engineering involved in the transfer of those books.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the gentleman's amendment gives that power to the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. QUIGG. "The gentleman's amendment" gives it to somebody, and your bill gives it to nobody.

Mr. BINGHAM. Our bill gives it to a man to whom properly belongs the supervision of such matters; we give it to the Librarian who is himself to take charge of that line of work rian, who is himself to take charge of that line of work.

Mr. QUIGG. Not in your bill.
Mr. BINGHAM. We give it to the Librarian; that is the whole purpose of the provision.
Mr. QUIGG. Under your bill, he will commit a felony if he takes one of those books out of the Library.
Mr. BINGHAM. Well, I think we will stand the risk of the felow.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have shown how closely we have adhered to the law of 1802—how we have not infringed and impinged upon the statute conferring power upon the Joint Committee on the Library. We have only in our bill changed the qualifications necessary for a subordinate force to be employed by the Librarian of Congress upon examination and subject to certain rules. have also made available for the transfer of books and for the furniture certain moneys heretofore appropriated for the construc-tion of the building and not expended. That is our bill. We have observed Mr. Spofford's recommendations; we have observed Mr. Green's recommendations; we have observed the recommendations of the Joint Committee on the Library, except in the new legislation which gentlemen desire to have passed by this House in order that the Joint Committee on the Library shall not only have charge of the Library, but shall control it in every particular.

I will now take up the provisions of the gentleman's substitute. It proposes (and this is new legislation):

Upon notice by the Joint Committee on the Library to the President of the United States that the new building for the use of the Library of Congress is ready to be occupied, the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a director of the Library, who shall receive an annual compensation of $7.500, and who shall have charge of the Library of Congress, under such rules and regulations as may be lawfully established from time to time. The director of the Library shall give bond, payable to the United States, in the sum of $50,000.

So far as the bond is concerned, the House has already determined, by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dockery], that bond shall be given in the sum of $50,000 in lieu of the bond now given. The gentleman's propositions in the first paragraph of his amendment change existing law as it has been on the statute books since 1802 and as it has been observed by the various Administrations which have been in observed by the various Administrations which have been in power. From 1815 up to the present time there have been (including Mr. Spofford's commission, which began in 1864) four Librarians of Congress. President Cleveland, in his first Administration, continued Mr. Spofford; President Cleveland, in the present Administration, has continued Mr. Spofford. Who may be the Librarian in the future I do not know. The new Administration will come in on the 4th of March next, and from that time until this legislation goes into effect it will have ample opportunity for the consideration of everything that may be necessary to the reaching of a clear, proper, and wise conclusion as to who should be the Librarian of Congress under these new provisions

In this connection, let me read from the gentleman's testimony before the committee.

Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a Mr. McMILLIN. question?

Mr. BINGHAM. With pleasure. Mr. McMILLIN. I see that in the bill of the committee, and I believe in the amendment of the gentleman from New York, provision is made for a Librarian at $6,000 a year. What is the salary of the Librarian at present?

of the Librarian at present?

Mr. BINGHAM. It has been $4,000 since 1870.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was my recollection; so that this is an increase of $2,000. Now, in view of the fact that this is an office in which the incumbent is generally continued for a very long term, and the duties of which are to be discharged in but one place, I ask my friend whether he does not think $4,000 an ample

Mr. BINGHAM. The Committee on Appropriations went over that ground very thoroughly. We listened with great patience as well as great instruction to the representatives of the Joint Committe on the Library with reference to certain provisions covered by their recommendations. We heard also, as stated by Mr. Quieg, the recommendations of the leading librarians of the country with the recommendations of the leading florarians of the country with reference to the great obligations and responsibilities imposed upon such an officer as the Librarian of Congress, in view of which those leading librarians asked that the salary be fixed at $7,500. But your committee thought that such a proposition might meet with opposition. We concluded that $6,000 was a fair compensation for a trained, experienced, and scientific man to administer this great work. The bill was brought into the committee from the subcommittee with $6,000 recommended as the salary; we have brought the bill into the House from the general committee with that recommendation, believing that $6,000 will be a fair compensation.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me one further remark? The members of Congress, who are asked to fix this salary at $6,000, receive for their service during a limited term only $5,000 a year. In addition to that, a majority of all the governors of the various States receive less than $5,000 a year. The judges of many of the courts, both State judges and, as I remember, most of the Federal judges, receive less than $6,000. I confess, therefore, very candidly, that I am wholly unable to see why there should be given to the Librarian of Congress by this bill a salary higher than $5,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, the gentleman of course knows all of his privileges, so that when we come to that paragraph in the bill he will be at liberty to exercise them. I have stated why we did it, and largely on the basis of the argument of the gentleman from New York himself.

Mr. Quigg, in speaking of Mr. Spofford, submitted-

That he had shown by his conduct of the Library, and I think the fact is entirely familiar to the committee, that he has been unable to deal with all of the work committed to him by Congress. I do not know that anybody could have dealt with it more satisfactorily than Mr. Spofford.

That condition of affairs is no fault of the present Librarian, but is largely due to the limited quarters and the inroading upon him of the Library work, increased, as it was increased, by the copyright law. He was helpless.

We recognized that fact as one argument in connection with the necessity for enlarging the compensation of the Librarian. And again he states:

That the libraries of the world of to-day are conducted on a very different principle or basis from this one. Librarians are now professional. They are men who are educated to the business of conducting libraries. It is a course of a few years' study and is maintained in the schools of the State of New York. A gentleman familiar with library business, being engaged in the principal school there, teaches a class this profession. He was president of a college that trained librarians; he is now teaching that science in Columbia College, and it has become a distinct profession in itself.

In recognizing the valuable statements of the gentleman from

In recognizing the valuable statements of the gentleman from New York, who had made an examination of the leading libraries of the country and the great libraries of the world, we thought that $4,000 was too small a salary for the incumbent of this great office and that $7,500 would perhaps be in excess, and we compromised on what we thought a reasonable sum, $6,000.

The President "shall solely appoint" is the language of the law. Since 1802 this statute has been on the books, that the President shall appoint solely, without confirmation by the Senate, a Librarian of Congress. I have told you the limit of that act when it was placed upon the statute books and what its administration has been. We leave the law just as it is in that regard. The gentleman from New York proposes, however, that when the The gentleman from New York proposes, however, that when the next Administration comes in the President "shall appoint;" that he shall not only appoint, but immediately, and he takes the power of selection "solely" from him and makes it subject to confirmation by the Senate—a four years' tenure.

Mr. QUIGG. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is nothing

mr. Wolder. The gentleman's parton. There is nothing in my amendment which provides a term of that sort.

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly, not directly; but I submit to the gentleman that when such questions come before the Senate for confirmation, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, they are treated as a four-year tenure.

they are treated as a four-year tenure.

Mr. QUIGG. They are not, unless the statute so provides. I would suggest to the gentleman that special care—that, in fact, too much care can not be exercised in the selection of a Librarian.

Mr. BINGHAM. I agree with the gentleman most heartily.

Mr. QUIGG. And I want to remind him that by my substitute the conduct of the Library is imposed upon a joint committee of Congress. The joint committee then would be in control, substantially, of the Library. We hold that, the control being retained in Congress, no harm would result, but very great good might result, from an appointment in the usual way, so that the qualifications of the Librarian would be thoroughly discussed.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have clearly answered the gentleman with reference to that point. I have referred to the effect of the law, and the appointments under existing statutes which have been and the appointments under existing statutes which have been in existence for many years. I may say to him by way of repeti-tion that during all of these years there have been but four appointments made.

pointments made.

But the gentleman suggests now that the Library Committee have custody of the Library in the bill. I am coming to the very next line in his bipl. I have already passed the paragraph in relation to the direct control of the Library by the simple statement that we continue the law, that we do not change it, and say to the incoming Administration you shall do so and so, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. We leave that just as it is.

I come right at once to the gentleman's paragraph, that this director of the Library shall have charge. What does the gentleman mean by the direction being in the Joint Committee on the Library? This director shall have charge of the Library—

Under such rules and regulations as may be lawfully established from time.

Under such rules and regulations as may be lawfully established from time

Of course he is governed by the law of Congress. He is governed Of course he is governed by the law of Congress. He is governed by the regulations in the statutes which we now allow to exist; but the gentleman, further on in the bill, instead of leaving the Librarian, or director, as he calls him, "in charge," continues the power "under such rules and regulations as may be lawfully established from time to time," takes from him the right to appoint and remove subordinates, takes from him every right; and a little further on, I will show you that when they come to remove the Library, the Library Committee want to fix the places in the Library where history shall be, where biology shall be, where the sciences shall be, where fiction shall be. They take absolute control. control.

Therefore, I say to the gentleman that in this bill and its sub-sequent paragraphs he has taken from the director of the Library sequent paragraphs he has taken from the director of the Library every possible control of the force, every possible adjustment of the great volume of music and prints and books. He takes from him every power that he possesses and vests it in the Committee on the Library.

The Librarian shall give bond. We have covered that.

Now he abolishes the Librarian and makes him a director in

The Joint Committee on the Library

Here the gentleman comes in for power-

The Joint Committee on the Library is hereby empowered in behalf of Congress to assume the charge and custody of the new building for the Library of Congress.

The committee takes charge of the building absolutely-

To make rules and regulations for its occupancy and use

We give him "regulations" under the old law which we allow to stand. The gentleman adds to it "rules"—

For the accommodation and display in the said new building of the Library collections

Again repeating myself, they take all control from the director of the Library—this gentleman who, as it appears from the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations, "is a trained, experienced man," which I grant, this being a technical line of work for which he is trained. It is proposed to take that capable man, at $6,000 a year, and tell him by an act of Congress "there is nothing you can do, but the Joint Committee on the Library can do it." I say to the gentleman, we could get a man perhaps to carry out the gentleman's provisions at almost the reasonable sum that the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] mentioned in connection with the removal of the Library—$100. Again repeating myself, they take all control from the director

Mr. RAY. I said $600.
Mr. BINGHAM. The Joint Committee on the Library propose to take absolute control. Now, what do they do next? They say to Mr. Bernard R. Green:

And upon satisfactory proof that the duties heretofore conferred by law upon Bernard R. Green in relation to the construction and completion of the said new building have been fully performed, the Joint Committee on the Library is authorized to discharge the said Bernard R. Green of all duties and responsibilities in connection with the said building.

They start right away on the removals. But let us see whether that is necessary. I make the statement to this committee that every public building constructed by the Government, supervised and controlled in construction by its officers, has need of no transand controlled in construction by its officers, has need of no transfer whatever. Why, although the city post-office in Washington is not yet completed, its occupancy has already been apportioned by the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Green is not a contractor to deliver anything to us. He is an officer of the Government, empowered by Congress to do a certain act. So was his predecessor empowered to do such an act. He has officially informed us that the Library will be ready in March, or at the end of February. We take official cognizance of that. We put in our bill an appropriation of $6,000 for the removal of the old Library, and $50,000 for furniture, and Mr. Spofford, or whoever may be in charge, will commence to move just as soon as this is available.

Why, the State, War, and Navy building, almost as large as the Library building, was never formally transferred. Permit me to state, in connection with Mr. Green, the committee propose to summarily dispose of him. Mr. Green is disposed of by law, and of necessity. He turns the building over, and his work is completed.

is completed.

General Casey built the State, War, and Navy Department building. General Casey built the Washington Monument. General Casey had the construction of this great building from its inception. He died one year ago. There was never any formal transfer of any one of these great Government structures. This building is in possession of the Government to-day as fully as if it had been formally transferred. Mr. Green was with General Casey for thirty years, was his leading man in the construction of the State, War, and Navy building, his leading subordinate with reference to the Washington Monument, and his leading, valuable subordinate in the construction of the Library of Congress, To-day, by special act of Congress, he is continued as General Casey's successor. We need no transfer.

This bill appropriates for the removal of the books, and we have it officially that the Library will be ready by the end of February. Why do you want Mr. Green to notify the joint committee of Congress, and the joint committee of Congress to notify the President, that the building is ready, and that he shall appoint a Libra rian, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and that the joint committee shall immediately turn out Mr. Green by act of Congress? It is not necessary.

We shall have possession of that Library in February. The books will be removed, and we provide for their removal; but the joint committee want to do that. They want to handle that $6,000 which is to be expended for the removal that the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] says can be made for a few hundred dellars. dred dollars.

Mr. RAY. I did not say one hundred; I said six hundred.
Mr. BINGHAM. The Committee on the Library want to buy the furniture. That is wholly unnecessary.
Now I come to the next point:

We concede a balance of between $50,000 and $70,000-

That any balance now existing of the appropriations heretofore made for the construction and completion of the said building is hereby rendered available not only for that purpose, but also to furnish and equip the said building for its use as the Library of Congress, and also for the removal of the Library collections from the Capitol building to the said new building—

We reach now what, vulgarly speaking, may be called the milk in the cocoanut. They tell you how this appropriation shall be and the Joint Committee on the Library is hereby directed, through such agencies as it may select, to effect the removal of the said Library collections and their arrangement in the new building, and to purchase the necessary furniture for the furnishing and equipment of the said new building; and all expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

The Joint Committee on the Library are going to be purchasing agents, and purchase the necessary furniture for the furnishing agents, and purchase the necessary furniture for the farmshing and equipping of the new building. They want to move the Library. They want to determine where each division and character and line of work shall go in the building. Then they want to buy the new furniture through such agencies as they may select. And in the matter of the appointment and removal of employees they want absolute charge.

I desire to know where this director of the Library is to come in; this gentleman whom they recommended to the committee at $7,500, but for whom they now accept $6,000 as a fair compensation. I wish to know what he is to have charge of when he goes into the new building,

into the new building,
Mr. RAY. I suppose he is to look on, and smile, and approve. I want to ask the gentleman, right there, who is to purchase the

Mr. BINGHAM. The Librarian has always purchased all the furniture for the Library. He will purchase it here, and his accounts will go through the accounting officers for verification.

Mr. RAY. That leaves it simply to the discretion of the Libra-

Mr. BINGHAM. He enters into a bond of $50,000. It is not a great responsibility. It consists in the purchase of desks, chairs, and racks. It is not the draperies and things beautiful that you see in your house. It is practically the furniture for the Library, and it is more wisely left to him than it would be to leave it to the gentleman himself or to myself, however much we might think gentleman nimself or to myself, however much we might think ourselves capable of buying such goods.

Mr. RAY. I fully agree with the gentleman on that. I simply desired to know who has the control of that.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. With pleasure.
Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that General Casey was entitled to any credit for the architectural features of the new Library?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I did not say a word about the architecture. General Casey had plans and specifications. Mr. BENNETT. The plans and specifications were prepared by Mr. Smithmeyer.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not taking from or detracting from what any trained or disciplined architect did. I am merely speaking of the great responsibility that the Government had placed on General Casey. Of the State, War, and Navy building the archi-tect was Mr. Mullett, the designer of the Washington Monument I do not remember, and Mr. Smithmeyer was the architect of the Library. That is all on record.

That the Librarian shall have power to establish rules and regulations for the conduct and use of the Library of Congress and to employ and remove all persons, with the exception of the director of the Library, for whose compensation as employees of the Library provision is made in any act of Congress.

Congress.

Gentlemen, that is evidently the whole purpose of this added legislation. There has been no criticism as to the administration of the Library of this subordinate force that I have heard of, save that which I heard of a few days ago—that this subordinate force was the result of the pressure of a few men on the Librarian, and that he had yielded to that pressure; and they even went so far as to say that my friend from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, had some 14 or 18 of these appointments. When we come to consider—

Mr. RAY. Well, I presume that accounts for the bad condition of the Library—the disorderly condition.

Mr. BINGHAM. When we come to consider that up to 1890 there were but 30 of this subordinate force, there could not have been very much pressure so far as change was concerned. The been very much pressure so far as change was concerned. The force now numbers 42 or 43; that comprises additions that have been made by Congress since 1890. Who have received those appointments I do not know, and I do not care; but I do know that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has had no such number, if any number at all, to justify that remark around the Capital

Capitol.
Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me,
Mr. BINGHAM. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. As long as the gentleman has mentioned it and it has floated around, I suppose I may do what I did not intend otherwise to have done. I do not know anybody on that force except two. One is the Librarian, Mr. Spofford, and I am not acquainted with any others except one, who is an individual appointed on my recommendation. So far as I have any recollection, I never recommended anybody except this man who was appointed upon my recommendation, but even that not until I had the blessing and recommendation of the House chairman of the Committee on the Library, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER], whom I thanked at the time and now thank. That is all there is of that. The fourteen seems to fade to one, and I am under many obligations to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER], obligations to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER], because it was a very worthy appointment to be made.

Mr. HARMER. That is correct.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, let me say, as the gentleman has concluded that point of my argument, we propose to increase this force to 187 subordinates. That includes the subordinates to the Library, subordinates under the copyright law, and the subordinates for the care, custody, and maintenance of the Library building. The force is now 43. We increase the force to 187—144 new appointments. The gentleman, in my earlier remarks, asked me to refer to any act of Congress wherein power had been given the Librarian to appoint. I make this first preliminary given the Librarian to appoint. I make this first preliminary statement: There never has been since 1815 an appointment made on the force of the Library of Congress that has not been made by the Librarian, and very often by the direction of Congress that the Librarian shall make the appointment. The act of 1867 says:

To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ two additional assistants tc., $2,400.

In 1871, in relation to adjusting and fixing the salaries of the employees in the Library, then fourteen in number besides the Librarian, the act gave him full power to adjust and fix the salaries of his subordinates.

To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ two assistants in connection with the work of the copyright department.

To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ enough clerical force to complete the alphabetical index.

For three additional assistants, at $1,200 each, to be employed in the Library.

£79. That the Librarian of Congress be authorized to employ three assistants, at a yearly compensation of $1,200 each.

1894. Whereas by the passage of the copyright law additional labor was placed upon the Librarian of Congress: Therefore.

Be it resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $6,500 for the employment of additional clerical force, under the direction of the Librarian of Congress.

rian of Congress. 1895. For the employment of eight clerks, at $900 each, under the direction of the Librarian of Congress, necessary for the execution of the copyright law. February 26, 1896—

Our own act-to enable the Librarian-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania in charge of the bill be permitted to continue his remarks without limit.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, there are several other acts that I might cite, but I have looked back only as far as 1874. In fact, however, all the acts of Congress since then, and certainly all the acts before then, have contained similar provisions, although the force was then quite limited, being 20 in 1890 and 43 now, in 1896-97. Every one of those acts, I say, gives the Librarian the power, either directly or by implication, and under those acts he has appointed every one of his subordinates, and I have never heard any criticism upon the subordinates.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The gentleman has just stated, as I understand him, that the number of employees in the Library at present is 43, and in the pending bill his committee recommends that the number he increased to 187 that the number be increased to 187.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir; an increase of 144.
Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the committee has looked carefully into the necessity for such a large increase

Mr. BINGHAM. Probably the gentleman was not present when I went over that matter very thoroughly. The committee took Mr. Spofford's judgment as to the force required in connection with the Library and the carrying out of the copyright law, and it took also the judgment of Mr. Green in regard to the custody of the new building. He has been with the building since its inception and is very competent to judge upon that question. The subject has been gone into very carefully and critically by the Joint Committee on the Library, who have had the advice of the leading librarians of the country who have examined the new building. The Committee on the Library did not think that we gave enough force, but we follow the estimate of the Treasury Department, as recommended by Mr. Spofford and Mr. Green, and add nine additional men recommended by the Committee on the Library for the special purpose of commencing a catalogue of the Library, the idea being that they, with the other increased force, will probably be able to make a catalogue within the next three years. gone into the question as thoroughly as we could, and the joint committee have gone into it as thoroughly as they could, and upon this point there is no controversy between the two committees. Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I asked the question only for information and not to indicate any antagonism on my part to the committee's proposition. On the contrary, I am with them in their proposition, but I wanted to bring out some information on that point.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the Library ask to employ and remove all persons. The House heard the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dockery] in the close of the debate on Friday last, when he stated that under the bill of the joint committee, from the assistant librarian, at $4,000 a year, running on through this force of 187 subordinates down to the charwomen, the "director," as the committee would have him in their bill, the Librarian, as we call him, could not remove a single one of the subordinates. Understand, that "director" or Librarian. one of the subordinates. Understand, that "director" or Librarian is to be the trained, experienced, college-bred man that the gentleman from New York speaks of, yet the gentleman, by his bill, will not allow him to remove any one of his assistants from the humblest to the highest. What kind of administration will you have under such a proposition? What kind can you have when the allegiance of the subordinate is due to the gentleman from New York or to the gentleman from Pennsylvania rather from New York or to the gentleman from Pennsylvania rather than to his immediate superior? I say to you that such a plan would be destructive of the discipline of any organization whatever, from the administration of the Library of Congress to (as the gentleman from Missouri said) even that of a peanut stand.

In that connection, I want to ask to whom does the gentleman from New York want to give this authority? The gentleman does not propose to give control to his own director. Let us examine the history of this House with reference to the incumbency of the wise men to whom the gentleman proposes to give bency of the wise men to whom the gentleman proposes to give the control of the appointment and removal of the subordinate the control of the appointment and removal of the subordinate force. I go back to the Forty-seventh Congress and succeeding Congresses up to the present one, and what do I find? I find that Mr. McCook, of New York, served on the Library Committee for one Congress; Governor Lindsay for one Congress; Mr. Geddes for one Congress; Governor Singleton for two Congresses; Mr. Woodward for one Congress; Mr. Nutting for one Congress; Mr. Stahlnecker for two Congresses; Mr. O'Neill of Pennsylvania—a rare man recognized by the House as such a dearly nia—a rare man, recognized by the House as such, a dearly beloved friend of mine—the House and the Speakers appreci-ated his services so highly that they kept him on the Library Committee during four Congresses—the only man, according to the records, who has been in that position for se many Congresses. Mr. Davidson served for two Congresses; Mr. Sanford for one; Mr. Davidson served for two Congresses; Mr. Sanford for one; Mr. Cummings for two. In time the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cummings] will have served as my friend O'Neill did, for four Congresses. Mr. O'Ferrall served for one Congress; Mr. Compton for one; Mr. Bartlett for one; Mr. Robert Adams, Jr., for one; Mr. Harmer for one, and Mr. Quigg for one. I will say nothing as to the future of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg].

That record illustrates the changing character of the committee to whom the gentleman proposes to commit the absolute control of this Library. Now, let me refer a moment to the hearing of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg] before the Committee on Appropriations. I asked him this question: How are the subor-

Your testimony not being printed, I ask this question: How are the subordinate forces of the other great libraries selected?

Here is his answer:

The library in Boston employs its force through a board of regents lawfully, but practically by the librarian. The State library at Albany employs its force through the civil service commission of the State. All the other libraries employ their force through their boards of regents or boards of control, or by the librarians themselves.

Then I asked:

The boards of regents, however, in these several libraries are largely continuing boards?

Answer:

They are largely permanent boards—yes, sir. The board of regents, for instance, of the State of New York is a life body.

The Library Committee of Congress, with the record of membership such as I have read, has a life of two years.

Then I asked this further question:

The Library Committee of the two Houses is always partisan, is it not; in other words, it has a majority that represents the dominant party of the respective Houses?

To that question the gentleman from New York answers:

I suppose that is so.

Now, gentlemen of the House—
Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman yield a moment?
Mr. BINGHAM. With pleasure.
Mr. QUIGG. Of course, the gentleman's remarks should be interpreted in the light of the amendment that I have proposed, which is to the effect that, the force of the Library having been constituted, it shall remain practically a permanent force, or permanent during good behavior.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is that in the gentleman's bill?

Mr. QUIGG. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the amendment the gentleman proposes to offer?

Mr. QUIGG. Ye Mr. BINGHAM. Ir. QUIGG. Yes, sir.
Ir. BINGHAM. Well, we will discuss that when we come to
I am discussing the gentleman's substitute as he presented it. Mr. QUIGG. I am meeting the gentleman's objection with an amendment which will perfect my substitute in that respect, and which of course the gentleman must be in favor of.

Mr. BINGHAM. That I will consider when we reach it.

Now, gentlemen, the House is rather careful as to how it proposes to distribute patronage. I am not going to refer invidiously or unkindly to the gentleman from New York or the other gentleor unkindly to the gentleman from New York or the other gentlemen of the joint committee, who under a resolution of the House have made an investigation as to the Library. Throughout the gentleman's testimony—and I repeat I do not wish to be understood invidiously—we find him telling us what this committee is going to do. I have shown by referring to the record of the committee the transitory tenure of the power which is exercised by members of that committee. The gentleman is now in his first Congress as a member of the committee. What may be the future the gentleman knows nothing of. What may be the administration of the Joint Committee on the Library if his substitute should be enacted into law he knows nothing of. He can speak only for himself, and for himself as a member of that committee only up to the 4th of March. And while I would with great pleasure see to the 4th of March. And while I would with great pleasure see large power intrusted to the gentleman, because I recognize his ability and his wisdom, yet the House has always been somewhat critical as to where it shall place the disposition of its patronage. In this Congress the House selected my old colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. McDowell, as Clerk of the House; the gentleman from New York and his friends were able to select as Doorkeeper Mr. Glenn. Those two gentlemen control the great subordinate force of this House, subject, of course, to recommendations by members. But when you come to the next Congress, the Commit-tee on the Library, whoever may be Speaker—and I trust it will be the distinguished gentleman who now presides over this House— will be appointed with reference to the fact that Mr. McDowell, will be appointed with reference to the fact that Mr. McDowell, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Glenn, of New York (who, I presume, will be continued in their positions), are, respectively, the Clerk and the Doorkeeper of the House. The present Committee on the Library on the part of the House embraces, as members are aware, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigo], the other gentleman from New York [Mr. Cummings], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Harmer]; but in the next Congress the House and the Speaker might meet with some criticism or suggestion as to the wisdom of continuing all those gentlemen as members of the Committee on the Library, and we may have one more illustra-Committee on the Library, and we may have one more illustra-tion, in addition to those I have already read, as to the changing personnel of the Committee on the Library.

Mr. RAY. Do I understand the gentleman to intimate that in the Fifty-fifth Congress this House is to turn out Mr. McDowell and Mr. Glenn?

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no. I rather intimated by my proposition the probability of those gentlemen being continued.

Mr. QUIGG. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania that his objection to this bill arises from the fact that the members of the Committee on the Library come from New York, instead of from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BINGHAM. Not at all. I admitted how far I would be willing to intrust this work to the gentleman.

Mr. QUIGG. Is that the motive of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his collectors?

sylvania and his colleagues?

Mr. BINGHAM. Not at all. As I have said, I have stated how far I would intrust the matter to the joint committee.

Mr. QUIGG. I was very sure that it was not.

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly not.

Now I come to the other paragraph in the bill proposed by the gentleman from New York. He provides further that—

The Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fourth Congress shall, before the expiration of his term of service, appoint from among the Representatives-elect to the Fifty-fifth Congress a temporary Committee on the Library of three members, which said Committee on the Library shall have the same powers and perform the same duties in relation to the Library of Congress as are authorized by law and the rales of the House of Representatives; and which said temporary Committee on the Library shall begin to exercise its powers immediately upon the termination of this Congress, and shall continue to exercise and discharge such duties until after the meeting and organization of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fifth Congress and until the appointment of the regular Committee on the Library. And hereafter the Speaker of each subsequent House of Representatives shall, before the termination of the last session of each Congress, appoint, from the Representatives-elect, a temporary Committee on the Library, with similar powers and for the same purposes.

I submit to the gentleman that perhaps that section, section 5 of his substitute, had been drafted and made a part of it by the gentleman from the general testimony and the questions put to him before the Subcommittee on Appropriations in the hearings. But we are confronted with the fact that this proposition, while of course it stands on no law and asks to be permitted to stand on law, is an incursion upon the history of Congress since its commencement. There has been but one act or resolution in this Congress of a similar action. I refer to the provision made under what is known as the Dockery law, with reference to the auditing of the accounts in the Departments in the first session of this Con-gress, where permission was given to the Committee on Accounts to exercise the power of approval in connection with the auditing of accounts of the officers of the House. That referred to the of accounts of the officers of the House. That referred to the contingent fund. The committee, of course, could not be empowered to act in that manner except by authority of Congress.

The committee died with the Congress. The operations of the law were to go into immediate effect, and Congress determined to give to this committee an independent power of approval with reference to these accounts; and for that reason enacted the provision of law to which I have just referred. It provided, using the language of the law itself, "that the Committee on Accounts may pass judgment upon the legality and propriety of expenditures from the contingent fund of the House by its Clerk" in the absence of such certificates of payment of such contingent expenses, such as washing towels, etc., between the two Congresses. But that is the only case in the history of Congress where such a committee has been appointed ad interim and assigned to such duties.

the only case in the history of Congress where such a committee has been appointed ad interim and assigned to such duties.

Now, gentlemen, I have stated fully all that I have desired with reference to the pending measure. The bill we bring you equips the Library, gives it the subordinate force asked for by the Joint Committee on the Library, as submitted in the Book of Estimates, as well as by Mr. Spofford and Mr. Green, for the new Library of Congress. We give all that is required for the purpose contemplated. We give now no rewrited the purpose contemplated. as well as by Mr. Spofford and Mr. Green, for the new Library of Congress. We give all that is required for the purpose contemplated. We give you no new legislation save that which makes the qualification of the subordinates in the new Library dependent upon their fitness according to the rules of the Librarian. We give you a clear, clean bill, protected by every legal method, asking nothing excepting what the law provides. We change no law from 1802, covering the appointing power in connection with the Library. We take from the Committee on the Library no responsibilities as to copyright or the regulation of the Library. We take the law which has been well carried out since 1802, and ask the House to stand by the bill submitted by the Committee on Appropriations. Appropriations.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, as the minority member on

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, as the minority member on the Joint Committee on the Library, I submit a few observations to the House without prejudice to either the subcommittee on Appropriations or to the Joint Committee on the Library.

In the last Congress a joint resolution came from the Senate asking the appointment of a special committee to investigate the Congressional Library, and to propose some plan for the removal of the books, and for the government of the new Library building. This was amended so as to provide that the Joint Committee on the Library should sit as such special committee during the recess, ascertain the condition of the Congressional Library, and propose some plan for the removal of the books and for the work in the new Library building.

new Library building.

As a member of the committee, I was here one month before the opening of this session. This committee held its sessions and listened to all that Mr. Spofford, the Librarian, had to say. It summoned before it the most expert librarians of this country, listened to their statements, and asked their advice. Before the investigation was ended we found that a subcommittee on Appropriations was at work on the same line, without regard to the action of the was at work on the same line, without regard to the action of the House or of the joint committee.

The Committee on Appropriations did some surprising work. It brought before this House a legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill a week ahead of the holidays, something unprecedented, I believe, in the history of this country. Before the testimony taken by the joint committee was all in, this Committee on Appropriations was prodding the joint committee to hurry up with its investigation, "or we will make our report and leave you out."

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement?

statement?

statement?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yielded to every gentleman who asked me to during my remarks.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I did not interrupt you.

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely desire to state to the gentleman that it has been the custom of the Committee on Appropriations to bring in the District appropriation bill before the holidays. The chairman of the committee communicated to me that the gentlemen in connection with the District appropriation bill—

Mr. CUMMINGS. Well, now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BINGHAM. I want to give the reason why they did not want to bring the bill in.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The fact that they did not is enough.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then the gentleman does not want to know the reason why we did not bring the bill in.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am not impugning your action.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the gentleman is.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The fact itself is enough.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman stated that we brought it in before his committee reported.

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is correct. I say you brought it in before the testimony taken before the Joint Committee on the Library was even revised. You brought it in before the Joint Committee on the Library had any opportunity to make a report. No report has been made to this day.

Mr. BINGHAM. I know that the joint committee can run on as long as they want to, but that is no reason why we should stop the supply bills of the Government.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We were acting at the instance of the House, and the Committee on Appropriations practically took House, and the Committee on Appropriations practically took from us our privilege and our right of action.

Mr. BINGHAM. You were to report to the House, but you.

Mr. BINGHAM. You were to report to the House, but you have not made your report.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We have not had an opportunity.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman representing you came in with your proposed legislation.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Why did you come in with your legislation here, ahead of our report, and without waiting for the printing of the testimony taken by the joint committee?

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will allow me to explain, I will tell him. Will the gentleman allow—

Mr. CUMMINGS. Not if you please. I did not interrupt you, although you probably unwittingly made misstatement after misstatement.

statement

Mr. BINGHAM. What about?
Mr. CUMMINGS. No matter. It makes little difference. do not desire to be interrupted, and I do not mean to make any misstatements misstatements.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well; I shall not interrupt the gentleman. I refrain, however, through pure courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the meaning of this action of the Committee on Appropriations? Why is it that this bill is brought in here before the holidays? Why was not the District of Columbia appropriation bill put in here? Why was not the sundry civil bill put in?

Mr. BINGHAM. Why does not the gentleman allow me to state the reason?

state the reason?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Why is it that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was brought in here before the holidays? Why is it that the Committee on Appropriations is so anxious to run the Library in the same way that it has been run in years past?

I noticed that when the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigd] was making his masterly argument the other day on behalf of the bill reported from the joint committee, all the members of what you gentlemen on the other side call the "hog combine" were on their feet, deviling him and asking him questions. [Laughter.] The combine was there in full feather. One big chief said that if the proposition of the joint committee was passed by the House he wanted to be put on the Committee on the Library immediately. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, I did not vote in committee to sustain the substitute which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg] has proposed here. That substitute was not his substitute; it was the substitute of the committee.

The gentleman [Mr. Quigg] and myself supported an entirely different proposition. It was a proposition that these appointments should be made by the Joint Committee on the Library, upon the recommendation of the Librarian or director. Of course, as a Democrat, I can not be interested in patronage at this time. [Laughter.] Some other time, possibly, but not now. Politics cut no figure with me in the investigation. I love books. I read books. I can not go past a secondhand bookstore without stopping to look at the books, and usually I buy one.

My work on the committee was conscientious work and a work of love. I was personally interested in the condition of the Govor love. I was personally interested in the condition of the Government Library. The confusion there is something almost indescribable, but it is not the fault of the Librarian. No better man ever had charge of a library; but Mr. Spofford, like the Joint Committee on the Library, is subject to pressure that the Committee on Appropriations places upon them.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I challenge the truth of that statement, Mr. CUMMINGS. Read Mr. Spofford's testimony and you will not challenge it not challenge it.

Mr. CANNON. You read it.
Mr. CUMMINGS. And you should have read it before you brought this bill into the House.

Mr. CANNON. You read it. I challenge the truth of that statement, and call upon you to read it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have not the testimony. You have not given us a chance to get it printed. Why do you not call on me to read President McKinley's inaugural message? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. It is your committee that took the testimony.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The Librarian has been hampered by an insufficiency of appropriations, and that insufficiency, and not the Librarian, is responsible for the condition of the Congressional Library. Spefford has done magnificently hampered as he has Librarian, is responsible for the condition of the Congressional Library. Spofford has done magnificently, hampered as he has been. I can go to him to-day and get any book or document in a surprisingly short time. Five years ago there was a discussion on the floor of this House over the sinking of the Tallapoosa. A statement made by me was challenged. In seven minutes I had sent here by Mr. Spofford the files of three New York papers bearing date of the accident and confirming my statement. But, gentlemen, Mr. Spofford is not going to live forever. He says he has no shelf catalogue, because he never could get an appropriation for a shelf catalogue. He has a card catalogue, and that is all he can produce with scant appropriations.

all he can produce, with scant appropriations.

Now, I call the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bingham] in charge of this bill to a matter under discussion.

His bill reads:

Copyright department: For the following under the direction of the Libra rian of Congress, necessary for the execution of the copyright law, namely

Mr. Spofford told the joint committee that he had repeatedly asked to be relieved from the control of this copyright business. It interfered with his duties as Librarian. He urged the joint committee in drawing up its bill to see to it that the Librarian was relieved from all copyright duties. You gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee examined him. He could not tell you anything different from what he told us; and yet we find here that you have again burdened him with the copyright load.

you have again burdened him with the copyright load.

Now, more than that; Mr. Spofford—

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman allow me there?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes.

Mr. QUIGG. That, as I understand it, constitutes the reason for the difference which was pointed out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his own bill and our substitute. We had provided a clerk whom we called a register of copyrights.

Mr. BINGHAM. And we provide an assistant.

Mr. QUIGG. Our bill places the responsibility for copyright work on a single individual, on that individual clerk, at the same time placing the entire Library—the copyright department, the library department, and the custodian's office—under a director as the administrative officer of all.

the administrative officer of all.

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is right; and a proper designation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we find that the Committee on Appropriations not only put the copyright department in Mr. Spofford's hands against his protest, but they go further. They give him charge of the custodian of the building, of the police, of the engineers of the electricians of the elevator conductors and the means of the electricians. charge of the custodian of the building, of the police, of the engineers, of the electricians, of the elevator conductors, and the mechanics, and the charwomen, and hold him responsible for their appointment. Great duties for the Librarian of Congress!

Mr. BINGHAM. Who do you give it to?

Mr. CUMMINGS. We give it—I say "we," I mean the committee. I do not support the proposition.

Mr. BINGHAM. You are speaking for the committee.

Mr. CUMMINGS. No; I am not, I am speaking for myself.

Mr. BINGHAM. You are the only one who had access to all the evidence.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have not access to the evidence. It is not

Mr. BINGHAM. I know you have to some. To whom do you

Mr. CUMMINGS. The committee gives it to the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is right.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Now, the Joint Committee on the Library are not overburdened with duties, as is the Librarian of Congress. Now, Mr. Chairman, after a special committee appointed by the House has summoned witnesses thousands of miles, has taken their testimony, and has spent not only days but nights in the investigation and has formulated just exactly what the House asked it to do, I submit the question to the House whether it is right for another committee to "hog" the whole business before the report is even begun and before the testimony has all been acceived from the storographer.

received from the stenographer.

Mr. BINGHAM. This law takes effect the 1st of next July.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Then why such haste? The appointments will take effect after the inauguration of the next President.

[Laughter.]
Mr. BINGHAM. Our bill will not.
Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman says that his bill will not take effect until the 1st of July. His bill appropriates $7,000 to be immediately available.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, for furniture, and $6,000 for the transfer of the books to the new building; but the gentleman [Mr. Cummings] is talking about the plan.

Mr. QUIGG. The $6,000 will go a very little way.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, in this connection,
I want to say that I understand New York has two members on the Joint Committee on the Library, while Pennsylvania has but one. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. One point more, Mr. Chairman. The reason why I supported the proposition to have the appointments made why I supported the proposition to have the appointments made by the joint committee on the recommendation of the director of the Library was because of the testimony of Mr. Putnam, librarian of the Boston Library. That library is one of the most complete in the United States in its appointments, in its service, in its cataloguing, and Mr. Putnam is not only a good librarian, but a practical business man. Over that library there is a board of trustees. These trustees make the appointments upon the recommendation of the librarian.

Now, in my judgment, a library as large as the Library of Congress certainly ought to have some head besides the Librarian and the Committee on Appropriations. If there is a more proper head, if there is a more suitable body, than the Joint Committee on the Library to act as board of trustees for that institution, I would like to see them. What is the Joint Committee on the Library? Why is it that the Committee on Appropriations, after absorbing at one time the duties of nearly every other committee in this House, now come forward with a proposition which practically makes that committee the Committee on the Library? For, if the Librarian makes the appointments, the Committee on Appropriations make the appropriations, and don't you forget it! [Laughter.]

Mr. BINGHAM. They always do.
Mr. CUMMINGS. Of course they do, and to-day one Senator—a member of the Committee on Appropriations—has, it is said, a hemoer of the Committee on Appropriations—nas, it is said, seventeen appointments in the Library.

Mr. BINGHAM. I suppose he has been here thirty years.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], as he tells us, has one. I am glad of it. That is more than I have, although I have been on the Committee on the Library for six

Mr. CANNON. It has been stated that I had fourteen, but I do not think the gentleman's committee circulated that report.

[Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to give notice that I shall offer as an amendment to the bill the proposition to have the employees apamendment to the oil the proposition to have the employees appointed by the Joint Committee on the Library, upon the recommendation of the director of the Library. If I fail in that, I shall move to strike out from line 3 down to line 7, leaving the Library practically (aside from the appropriations made in this bill) under the same supervision as it is to-day; for I believe that to-day the Joint Committee on the Library have some supervision over it, and I do not believe that after the passage of this bill the joint committee will have anything whatever to do with the Library. My proposition to make the joint committee responsible for the appointments upon the recommendation of the Librarian seems to me to be concise and practical, and I hope it may be carefully con-

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but a very few moments, and I ask the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg]. I have read to-day the substitute which he proposes. Of course I am familiar with the legislative bill, and I make this statement, that so far as the personnel of the force provided for in the legislative bill, and the personnel of the force provided for in the legislative bill, and the personnel of the force provided for in the gentleman's substitute are concerned, they are the same. The point of divergence is this, that under the legislative bill the Librarian of Congress, to be appointed after the 1st of July next like that in his bill.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the increase of salary takes effect after rate. He is now undertaking to state what his bill contains, and I do not want him to state anything that it does not contain.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, the President has power to remove the Librarian at any time.

Mr. QUIGG. At any time; and he has had for ninety years; and the present Librarian has been there for thirty years.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, as to the personnel of the force in the new Library under the legislative bill, it is substantially the same as the personnel under the gentleman's amendment. tleman's amendment.

Mr. QUIGG. It is precisely the same, with the single distinction that you propose to appoint an assistant to the Librarian, whom you intend to act as a copyright clerk, while we appoint a

Mr. CANNON. That is a difference of name.
Mr. QUIGG. Precisely. We are not divided of clerks or their compensation. We are not divided on the number

Mr. CANNON. Not at all. Now, the only difference is in the method of the appointment of the force. Under the legislative bill, which I hold in my hand, the law is left just as it is now, so that the President alone, without any confirmation by the Senate, appoints the Librarian. That is as it has always been.

Mr. LACEY. Under the substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg] the Joint Committee on the Library may remove these employees from time to time.

Mr. QUIGG. Oh, no. Under the amendment I have submitted to day these employees are not to be removed except for cause to-day those employees are not to be removed except for cause and after investigation.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. I will come to that point in a moment. Under the gentleman's substitute the Librarian of Congress is to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It is for the House to determine whether in that respect the gentleman's substitute is better than the law as it now stands, under which the Librarian is appointed by the President solely—without reference to the advice and consent of the Senate. In my judgment, the best way is to let the law in that respect stand as it is.

Under the scheme embraced in the legislative bill the officers appropriated for in this new Library are to be appointed by the Librarian of Congress, with due regard to their capacity for the work. I believe that is right. Under the scheme of the gentleman from New York—or rather under the scheme reported by his committee, because the gentleman disavows this as his own scheme, as does his colleague on the committee, the other gentleman from New York—under the report of the committee, as embodied in the substitute offered by the gentleman, all these employees, except the Librarian of Congress, are to be appointed by the Joint Committee on the Library, and that committee will have the sole power of removal.

The gentleman says that he has modified his substitute so as to provide that these officers shall not be removed except "for cause." Well, "cause" means anything that is displeasing to the party who has the appointing power, because as there is no appeal from the action of the appointing power, anything is "cause" which in their discretion they may make "cause." So that, after all, the gentleman's amendment does not help the original proposition.

Now, I believe the provisions embraced in this legislative bill on this subject are right. This Library is practically a great department, embracing not only the national Library, but covering the copyright business and the care of that great building. I believe that, as a general proposition, appointments must, under the Conthat, as a general proposition, appointments must, under the Conthat, as a general proposition, appointments must, under the Constitution, be made by the President, by the courts, or by the heads of Departments. That is in substance the language of the Constitution. I do not think that Congress has any right to devolve this duty upon the House and the Senate; and I think that when our fathers adopted such a provision as a part of the Constitution they acted wisely, because it is not best—it never has been found best in the history of governments—to invest in the legislative power the administrative function. Hence, any such mingling of authority has been expressly prohibited by the Constitution. I know there was an eminent gentleman who once served in this House who said he did not know what the Constitution had to do "between friends." But, after all, there is the provision of the Constitution by which we are governed. Constitution by which we are governed.

I think I can demonstrate to the House in a few moments that we ought not to attempt to violate the Constitution in this respect. From necessity, the House must appoint its own employees; and from necessity the Senate must appoint its own employees. Now, what is the fact? I speak from investigation when I say that in my judgment this House has one-third more when I say that in my judgment this House has one-third more employees than it needs, and one-third more than it would have if it were a department of the Government, we making the legislation and appropriation for that department, and the department itself making the appointments. And I will add that the Senate, per capita, has four times as many employees as the House. Now, the wisdom of the fathers in constitutionally divorcing the legislative from the administrative newer is appropriate property. lative from the administrative power is apparent upon the bare statement. We must, of course, retain the appointment of our own officials.

Mr. DRAPER. Does the gentleman think there is any one Department of the Government that has not one-third more employees than it would need if it were carried on upon business principles?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. CANNON. Oh, I think if we would let the business out by contract—which the gentleman understands it is not compe-tent for us to do—we could get along without so many employees in almost all the Departments.

Mr. BENNETT. Even in Congress.

Mr. CANNON. But, I repeat, for the work that is to be done
I think the House has one-third more employees than any Department of the Government with corresponding work has; and the Senate has four times as many employees, proportionately to the number of members, as the House has.

Now, I do not propose, so far as I am concerned, to start out by violating the Constitution—by throwing upon the House or the Senate or upon both the administrative function. That is what the gentleman's bill does. In express words, it devolves the the gentleman's bill does. In express words, it devolves the appointment of these one hundred and eighty-odd officers—upon whom? Upon the Joint Committee on the Library of the House and the Senate. Who makes the appropriations? Who would make the appointments in this department, including such force performing the copyright service and controlling the national Library? Why, the House and the Senate.

Mr. QUIGG. Right in that line, let me ask the gentleman this question: Does he think that Congress would have the right to elect the Librarian if it wished to do so?

Mr. CANNON. To elect the Librarian of the national Library?
Mr. QUIGG. Yes; the Librarian of the Congressional Library.
Mr. CANNON. Clearly not.
Mr. QUIGG. You think that Congress would not have the right to do that?

Mr. CANNON. No more right than it would have to elect the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. No more right than it would have to elect the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman, I believe, brought in an appropriation bill some little while ago, which Congress voted on, electing General Casey to carry on the construction of that building, did he not?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.
Mr. QUIGG. I think the gentleman did. And he brought in a bill electing General Casey's successor in the construction of that building.

Several Members. Oh, no. Mr. QUIGG. Now, if Congress can elect a man to spend $6,000,-

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman will allow me to reply. His committee, if I recollect aright, brought in a joint resolution naming first General Casey, and, upon his death, naming Mr.

Green to be in charge—
Mr. Quigg rose,
Mr. CANNON. Let me answer the gentleman's question. I do not want to wrangle. The gentleman's committee brought in do not want to wrangle. The gentleman's committee brought in a joint resolution naming those parties, officers of the Government, to have charge of the construction of the Library. The House passed the resolution; the Senate passed it; the President approved it. That was an accomplishment of that object by law. Now, whether it was constitutional or otherwise it is not necessary for me to discuss at this time. Why, if our constitutional duty is to be determined by propositions that I have made, or my eminent friend from New York might make, or has made heretofore, or will hereafter make, why then God save the Constitution! [Laughter.]

toole, or will hereafter make, why then God save the Constitution! [Laughter.] Mr. QUIGG. Now, I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the original act.
Mr. CANNON. Oh, I know about that.
Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman ought to allow me to interrupt him. He says he does not want to wrangle. Neither do I wish to wrangle with him any more than L did the other day.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman wish?

Mr. QUIGG. I allowed myself to be interrupted during the discussion of this matter as often as the gentleman, or all of the members of his committee, wanted.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman want?

Mr. QUIGG. I have told you. I rose for the purpose of calling the gentleman's attention to the original act, as he was speaking the gentleman's attention to the original act, as he was speaking the gentleman's attention to the original act, as he was speaking the gentleman's attention to the original act, as he was speaking the gentleman's attention to the original act, as he was speaking the gentleman wanter as the gentleman, or all of the members of his committee, wanted as the gentleman, or all of the members of his committee, wanted. ing upon that subject.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; I do not care anything about the origi-

Mr. QUIGG. I suspected you did not.
Mr. CANNON. The original act has long since passed out.
Other legislation has taken its place, and it does not add anything to the argument to call up a mistake that was made a hundred years ago. Our fathers made mistakes, just as we are liable to make mistakes, and when you come and want to bless a proposimake mistakes, and when you come and want to bless a proposition by a bad precedent, the precedent goes for nothing.

Now, I say, practically, that Congress has the power to legislate. It has the power to appropriate. It has in harmony with its powers legislated and appropriated heretofore. Under that legislation we have various Departments of the Government. The President and the heads of these Departments make appointments of subordinates. Their action is reported to Congress. We haul them up, "drag them over the coals," if they fail to perform their duty. We have the powers of impeachment; we criticise and investigate. And that is as it ought to be. Therefore I have no patience with the contention embodied in the substitute of the gentleman from New York, when he proposes to practically of the gentleman from New York, when he proposes to practically take that power from Congress by creating a committee of the two Houses—a committee of the House and the Senate—and call it a joint committee of the House and the Senate—and can it a joint committee, to conduct this department.

Now, a word as to the criticism of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cummings]. It is the business of the Committee on Appropriations to report this bill. This is a short session of Congress.

We have reported it as promptly as possible. We could not report the bill that we usually reported, because the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Grout] was absent. We therefore saw proper to report this bill. This joint committee came to us, as I am informed. We did not go to them. They were authorized to investigate and report. They were authorized to report to the House. They did not report to the House. They have not yet done so. But they came to our committee and stated what they had done, and sought to have their scheme incorporated upon this bill. When we got their scheme the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], of the subcommittee, did not deem it a wise one. Therefore we took the working force that the Committee on the Library eliminated and recommended it, and turned down, so far as we could by recommendation, this conferring of power on the joint committee here of the Senate and House to run a department. Then the gentleman from New York begins to kick; begins to complain and to scold about the Committee on Appropriations wanting to "ride over them." The trouble is that we took the wanting to "ride over them." The trouble is that we took the employees—they having investigated the matter—and when we refused to let them ride over our bill with unconstitutional and unwise legislation, they come and kick and scold, I was going to say just as an old woman would, but I will not; it would not be respectful.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Before the gentleman from Illi-

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Before the gentleman from Illinois takes his seat I wish to ask a question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understood the gentleman from New York to suggest that this was a mere controversy between the two committees—I refer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS]. He suggested that it was a controversy, as I understand it, between the joint committee and the Library Committee as to who should control the patronage?

Mr. CUMMINGS. You misunderstood me.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am very glad to be informed. In this connection, I wish to state that the Committee on Appropriations have nothing whatever to do with the appointments priations have nothing whatever to do with the appointments under the bill which they brought in.

Mr. QUIGG. Would not permit themselves to have anything Mr. QUIGG. to do with it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Most certainly not.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman from Pennsylvania would not have anything to do with it!

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] is quite able to take care of what is his due in matters of appointment.

of appointment.

Mr. QUIGG. I should hope so.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Another thing; these appointments are all vested, by the bill reported by my colleague [Mr. BINGHAM], in the Librarian, and the President has the power to appoint the Librarian without the advice and consent of the Senate. Now, the authority must be lodged somewhere. Where else can you better lodge it?

And then another suggestion, which is in the form of a question. This is called the Congressional Library. By what authority and by what right is it so called? It is a national library. Everybody has access to it. Why should a committee of Congress, a joint committee or any other kind of a committee, control that Library in matters of appointment any more than they should control the Pension Office appointments?

Mr. QUIGG. That is the question.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, Mr. Speaker, as to the gentleman's first question, as to this being a contest between the Committee on the Library and the Committee on Appropriations, I simply want to say, if anybody supposes that to be the case, they are misled. Mr. RAY.

Mr. RAY. Well, may I ask—
Mr. CANNON. In a moment. There is no such contest. The substitute absolutely lodges the power to appoint, to bind and loose, as to every one of these employees, save one, with the Joint Committee on the Library, to employ, to turn off, to reemploy. The Committee on Appropriations antagonizes the conferring of that power, because it is unwise, and against the Constitution, and against good government.

Now, what do we propose in lieu thereof in our scheme? I will ate it again. We propose to authorize the head of this departstate it again. ment to make these appointments, and that is the way the appropriations are made, substantially, for the public service. The Committee on Appropriations have no more to do with the controlling of those appointments than any other committee in the

Mr. RAY. Now may I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. CANNON. Certainly.
Mr. RAY. Is not that virtually placing these appointments in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations? It seems to me that it is, because, if you will permit me, you can not run the Congressional Library without these appointees, and they can not get their pay without the consent of the Committee on Appropriations. If they do not do just exactly as the Committee on Appropriations want them to do, why then you may refuse to appropriate the money, and out they go.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman, eminent lawyer as he is, would not have made such a statement—

Mr. RAY. I do not say that as a matter of fact, understand me, but is not that the ground work? Here is the suggestion I want to make.

Mr. CANNON. I understand the suggestion.
Mr. RAY. Now, let me explain. You seem to think that I made that statement as a reflection on the Committee on Appropriations

Mr. CANNON. Not at all.
Mr. RAY. I did not so intend it, because I want to say that I am in favor of your scheme and shall so vote: but I was simply suggesting that as the ground work of the fear that some gentlemen seem to have. That is all.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if the gentleman will allow me a minute, I will disabuse his mind.

Mr. RAY. You do not have to disabuse my mind.

Mr. CANNON. Very well, then. I will disabuse the mind of anybody who may have been misled.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That may have been abused.

[Laughter.]
Mr. CANNON. That may have been misled upon that proposition. Just a word, now, and I will get through. This House is composed of 357 members, appointed upon committees by the Speaker. The jurisdiction of those committees is determined by

There is not a committee of this House that can appropriate anything. Legislation, whether it be by appropriation or otherwise, is formulated by the committees to be reported to the House. The House passes upon it, amends it, lays it upon the table, or does what it chooses, the committee being the servant of the House. Therefore, the question is answered when I say the Committee or Appropriations has no power to lossen or hind. It is a mittee on Appropriations has no power to loosen or bind. It is a mere convenience of the House to perform its directions.

This bill, I will say to the gentleman, reported by the Committee on Appropriations to this House, carries appropriations for over 10,000 of subordinate force and the pay of over 10,000 people; yet this Committee of the Whole, this afternoon, can lay the whole of it on the table, strike out the enacting clause, strike out any portion of it that they choose or increase anywhere along the any portion of it that they choose or increase anywhere along the any portion of it that they choose or increase anywhere along the lines that the law will permit.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to offer an amendment to the substitute of my distinguished colleague from New York; but before sending it to the desk I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am opposed to the substitute and in favor of the bill as reported from the committee.

The Congressional Library is destined to become the greatest.

of the bill as reported from the committee.

The Congressional Library is destined to become the greatest library in the world. To call it a Congressional Library is a misnomer. It should rather be called the "National Library." In it every citizen should feel a patriotic pride. It should be divorced entirely from politics. The tenure of office of the Library employees should be permanent, with far more reasons than applies to any other Department of the Government. To subject the Library to a change of employees with every new Congress would. to any other Department of the Government. To subject the Library to a change of employees with every new Congress would be disastrous to its efficiency. Almost as well dump its vast numbers of books into the bottom of the Potomac. The proposed substitute of my colleague is therefore a backward step, the adoption of which would be deplorable. But if there is any danger that the substitute is to be adopted by this House, it is in the interest of correct legislation that it should be perfected. The argument of my colleague from New York, as I understand it, is that because all resolutions and rules and bills relating to the Library are referred to the Committee on the Library, therefore the Committee on the Library should have charge of all the appointments, which number about 187. Following the same line of argument, I would call the attention of my distinguished colleague from would call the attention of my distinguished colleague from

I would call the attended.

New York to the fact.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, there was nothing of that kind in anything I have ever said. The gentleman is absolutely in error about what I have said.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I so understood the remarks of my colerror about what I have said.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I so understood the remarks of my colleague from New York, to which I listened with great attention on Saturday; and certainly the substitute which he offers so says. I wish to call his attention to the fact that that substitute also refers to one part of the Library called the "copyright department," and to the further fact that all bills introduced into this House relating to copyrights are properly referred to the Committee on Patents. Therefore, following the same line of argument, all appointments for that department ought to be made by the Committee on Patents. I therefore offer this amendment to his Committee on Patents. I therefore offer this amendment to his substitute with the statement that my only argument in its favor is that I am a member of the Committee on Patents, [Laughter and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That in the copyright department, the appointments for which provision is herein made—to wit, register of copyright, $3,000; twenty-nine clerks, two at $1,800, two at $1,000 each, three at $1,400 each, ten at $1,200 each, ten at $900 each, and two at $720 each—shall be made by the Committee on Patents.

[Laughter.]
Mr. CANNON. That is an amendment to the substitute?
Mr. BINGHAM. As I understand, that is an amendment to the substitute. Now. Mr. Chairman, I ask that we proceed to a vote.
Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move the amendment that I gave notice of. I have offered an amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that.

Mr. QUIGG. And I desire to say, further, that my colleague moves to amend that amendment, and I shall be very glad to accept it on behalf of the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I send up an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York sends up an amendment to the text, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "persons," in the fourth line in the clause relating to appointments and removals, insert as follows:
"On the recommendation of the director of the Library."

Mr. BINGHAM. Is that an amendment to the substitute?
Mr. CUMMINGS. It is.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands this to be an amendment to the text

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is right; and it is accepted, I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, by my colleague [Mr.

Quige]

Mr. BINGHAM. Amendments have been offered to the bill, a substitute has been offered, and certain amendments have been offered to the substitute. I hope the gentleman will indicate what paragraph the amendment is to, so that we can go on, under the rule, under the limitations of amendments to the bill and to the substitute.

Mr. QUIGG. The only difficulty as to that is that the substi-tute has not been printed with numbered lines; so that it is difficult to indicate where the amendment comes in.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman can indicate the connection. Mr. QUIGG. It is to be inserted, if the Chair will permit me, at the end of the fourth clause of the substitute.

The Joint Committee on the Library shall have power to establish rules and regulations for the conduct and use of the Library of Congress, and, with the exception of the director of the Library, to employ or remove all persons on the recommendation of the director of the Library.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I understand that my colleague [Mr. Quigg] accepts that amendment?

Mr. QUIGG. I accept the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I understand the purpose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] to be this: That it virtually takes this business out of the hands of the Joint Committee on the Library and requires them to appoint upon the recommendation of the director of the Library?

Mr. QUIGG. Precisely.
Mr. WILLIAMS. So that the man who will appoint is the man who will have the responsibility for the conduct of the appointees?

who will have the responsibility for the conduct of the appointees?

Mr. QUIGG. Precisely.

Mr. BINGHAM. In other words, the appointments are subject to confirmation by the joint committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The parliamentary situation is this: The gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] offered a substitute, and subsequently offered an amendment to that substitute—

Mr. QUIGG (interposing). Mr. Chairman, I think I have a right to incorporate my amendment in the proposition, as there has been no action taken on my substitute. It is my proposition.

Mr. BINGHAM. No, it is the committee's proposition.

Mr. QUIGG. I think that until action has been taken on it I have a right to modify it.

Mr. QUIGG. I think that until action has been taken on it I have a right to modify it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to state the parliamentary situation, if the committee will indulge him. The gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] offered a substitute, to which he subsequently offered an amendment. Another amendment was offered to that substitute by another gentleman from New York, and now the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] offers an amendment to the text of the bill—that is to say, to the paragraphs of the bill that were passed over by consent.

Mr. QUIGG. If the Chair will permit me, the amendment of my colleague is not to the text of the bill; it is to the text of the substitute. My colleague offers an amendment to the substitute that I have proposed, namely, after the word "persons." in the that I have proposed, namely, after the word "persons," in the clause relating to appointment and removal, he proposes to insert "on the recommendation of the director of the Library;" so that that clause will read: "That the Joint Committee on the Library shall make the appointments and removals on the recommendation of the director of the Library."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] assents to the statement of his colleague [Mr. QUIGG] that the amendment is an amendment to the substitute?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, if it is in order at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order. The gentleman will send up his amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let the gentleman indicate the line and paragraph.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The line and paragraph are indicated.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 2, page 19, after the word "Librarian," the following: "six thousand dollars," and insert in lieu thereof the words "five thousand dollars."

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I sent up an amendment some time ago, and I should like to know what has become of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman after this amendment is disposed of. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on the amendment. The object of it is to reduce the salary of this officer from six thousand to five thousand dollars a year. The Librarian is receiving at the present time $4,000 a year, and it seems to me that in view of the depressed times and of the fact seems to me that in view of the depressed times and of the fact that a $5,000 salary is a great salary, this amendment ought to prevail. It is true that gentlemen who reside in the large cities are used to hearing of people who get large salaries, but the great mass of the people of the United States regard a salary of $5,000 a year as an enormons one. I do not believe that this Government ought to be small in the compensation it pays to its officers, but a salary of $5,000 is very large, and in view of its increased purchas-$8,000 twenty years ago.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of these considerations and in view of the fact that there are very few salaries in this Government that over the consideration of the fact that there are very few salaries in this Government that overed $2,000 it after the consideration.

ment that exceed $5,000, it seems to me that it would be wise to "call a halt" on salaries in excess of $5,000 unless they are attached to offices of an extraordinary nature. It is true that the Librarian at the present time works in cramped quarters, but he can not have any more duties to perform in the new building than he has now. In fact, he will have more subordinates; the number of his assistants is more than doubled by this bill, and when these additional conveniences are given to him it would seem that instead of increasing his salary we ought rather to let it stand at the present figure of $4,000 a year.

We must bear in mind that some of the greatest officers of the United States receive very little more than this bill gives to the Librarian. The members of the Cabinet, with all their responsibilities and with great social duties to perform, receive only $2,000 a year more than this bill provides for the Librarian. There can be no comparison between those officers and the Librarian of Congress. When we take into consideration the condition of the people, the condition of the Treasury of the United States, knowing that each day there is a deficiency there, it seems to me we ought not to increase this salary at the present time; at least, ought not to let it exceed $5,000 a year. In view of the fact that the Librarian remains here in Washington, is put to no expense of travel, that he can have his home here year after year, and that in addition the appointment when made will no doubt be a life position, the salary proposed in this amendment is a fair and a remunerative salary. In a Republic of this kind we ought to have no office that is profitable. With us public kind we ought to have no office that is profitable. With us public office ought to be simply remunerative—not profitable. Whenever you exceed a salary of $5,000 for a position of this kind you are giving something in the nature of a profit to the officeholder. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. SHAFROTH)—aves 49, noes 50.

Mr. SHAFROTH)—ayes 49, noes 50.
Mr. SHAFROTH. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Shafroth and Mr. Bingham were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71,

noes 61.

So the amendment of Mr. Shafroth was agreed to. Mr. RICHARDSON. I send to the desk an amendment to the text of the bill, to come in immediately after the first item.

The Clerk read as follows:

The President shall nominate, and by and with the advice of the Senate shall appoint, the Librarian.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that an efficer of this importance, with a salary of $6,000, or, according to the amendment just adopted, $5,000, ought to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. I see no reason why an exception should be made in this case, when there is, if I remember correctly, no other exception—no other case in which an officer of similar importance is appointed without the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. BINGHAM. Only a word in response to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. The bill as before the Committee of the Whole does not propose to change in this respect the law as it has existed since 1802. And the wisdom of that law is exemplified in the fact that since 1815, when the first Librarian was commissioned by President Madison, there have been but four Librarians of Congress. In this historical fact we have a remarkable record of permanence of tenure. This office carries with it none of the idea connected with appointments that run merely for four years. The appointment has been made solely by the President of the idea of the ide dent. The appointment has been made solely by the President. The Committee on Appropriations were of the opinion that there was nothing which would justify them in even suggesting a change of the law in this respect, for the reason that the law as it is upon the statute book has in the past worked so well, and has secured in the position of Librarian trained, experienced men. This is the consideration which governed the committee in framing the bill.

Mr. QUIGG. I rise to a point of order. If I remember correctly, we have already perfected the text of the bill. It was read through under the five-minute rule, amendments to various clauses were offered and were disposed of. The text of the bill having been completed, it was agreed by unanimous consent that my substitute might be offered and might pass through the same process of perfection. But I make the point of order that this amendment is not in order, because we have perfected the text of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point of order raised by the gentle-man from New York [Mr. Quige] would at any rate come too late after two speeches had been made upon the amendment. But I desire to submit that the point of order, even if it had been made in time, would not have been good, because under our rules the text of the bill must be first perfected before the substitute of the gentleman from New York could be voted upon, and inasmuch as we have not passed from the consideration of the text of the bill, additional amendments are in order. As long as amendments are offered to the text, they must first be voted upon before the question can come up on the gentleman's substitute. But at any rate it is too late to make the point of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsyl-

Will not the gentleman allow the Chair to decide Mr. QUIGG. the point of order?
The CHAIRMAN.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. Mr. RICHARDSON. I knew what the Chair was going to decide. [Laughter.]

In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I wish to say that the adoption of the amendment I have offered will not in any way militate against the idea which he has expressed; in other words, my amendment does not contemplate any particular term of office; and if there should be a new appointment made upon nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate, there is nothing to prevent the appointee from holding for as long a time as previous incumbents, or even longer. It occurs to me that with respect to an office of this kind we should not depart from the constitutional provision that the President shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. In all probability the Senate will add this amendment to the bill if it should occur to them. I am very sorry the gentleman from Tennessee has offered the amendrery sorry the gentleman from Tennessee has offered the amendment, because the Senate might not have thought of it. [Laughter.] There are some things that we ought to keep as free from politics as possible. I am perfectly well satisfied, in all matters strictly political, to take my share of the patronage that belongs to me. [Laughter.] But in the Library —

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit a question

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not now.

There are some things, Mr. Chairman, that we ought not to mix with politics—churches, for instance, and the Library is another. To confirm an appointment of this character—an appointment made by the President of the United States of a Librarian—you do to a certain extent clothe the Senate with political supervision and control over the appointment. It ought not to be. This is a great Library

Mr. WILLIS. How about the appointment of judges-Supreme Court judges?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will yield to the gentleman for a question after I have made my statement.

This is a great Library. Hundreds of thousands—millions of dollars—are expended upon it. It is an ornament to the country and will be of value to our nation at present and for all time to come. We propose to make it the greatest Library of the whole world.

The President can name a man, if you clothe the Senate with the power to confirm, and they can refuse to confirm the appointment; and the President of course will still have power to name another. But when a man's confirmation is before the Senate, the senators who might be disposed to nonconcur in the appointment might be seen by the friends of the proposed librarian, and arrangements made by which the confirmation shall be granted.

I say that no possible benefit can be derived from making this a political office. The President under any circumstances will have to make the selection. Why, instead of making this office dependent upon confirmation by the Senate it would be equally proper, and just as reasonable, to provide that the House should advise and confirm the nomination advise and confirm the nomination.

It seems to me that such a proposition ought not to receive any support on the floor of the House, and, I repeat, I regret exceedingly that it emanated from this side.

Mr. McCORMICK. In direct line with the suggestions of the gentleman, I send an amendment to the desk, and ask its present

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later, after the amendments now at the desk are disposed of.
